The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

"COME, LORD JESUS."

Tarry not, Lord, any more, we pray,
Come for us, Savior, in glory;
Hasten the long-looked-for break of day,
Finish the night's dark story!
CHO.—Oh come and take us home,
Raising thy saints that are sleeping;
Come, Lord, and take us home
Ending forever our weeping!

Weary are we of our sin, dear Lord,
Weary of grieving thy Spirit;
Panting for purity, light and peace,
Yearning the rest to inherit.

Hopeless we gaze on the chaos round,
With its sin and its strife never ending;
Vainly we wait for the promised sound
Of thy shout when from heaven descending

Help us to cling to the promise, Lord,
Patient, with faith all unshaken;
Help us to strive for the bright reward—
Help, till from earth we are taken!

ONE MORE YEAR.

Dr. Bonar very truthfully says:—"The restlessness of christian mind and christian thought amongst us is alarming. Some new thing in doctrine is demanded, we might say, week by week, to feed the excitement which everywhere prevails. The eager way in which many, of whom greater steadfastness might have been expected, snatch at each new speculation that is broached, shows how many "unstable souls" we have; how many "itching ears;" how many "stony-ground" hearers; how many "seducing spirits;" how many venders of "profane and old wives' fables;" how many "men of corrupt minds and destitute of the truth;" how many who do not "shun profane and vain babblings;" how many "creepers into houses, leading captive silly women;" how many who "will not endure sound doctrine;" how many "carried about with divers and strange doctrines." They run from man to man, from doctrine to doctrine, from creed to creed, from church to church, in quest of novelty, perverting Scripture in support of their opinions, and parading some one text or set of texts as proof, in one-sided neglect of other passages which are needful for the adjustment of the truth. The church, no less than the world, is in a state of fermentation, and nothing now satisfies save a constant relay of new teachers and new speculations. Theological sensationalism—yes, and prophetical sensationalism, are in demand at the present day. Sober-minded and wholesome literature is at a discount; but a sensational pamphlet, fixing some date, or depicting some personage, or foretelling some portentous change, circulates by thousands. 'Evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.'" . . . .

He also speaks of the decline in prophetic studies, and a growing indifference to them, some of the causes of which he points out. And what he says of Great Britian is likewise true of the United States: "Many things have tended to hinder prophetic study, and to create prejudice against it. Forty years ago Irvingism stood in the way, so that, times without number, we were warned against millenarianism by the certainty of lapsing into Irvingism. That has, in part, at least, passed away. But we have now a more extensive obstruction to face, in the rapid spread of 'broad-church theology,' or 'broad views,' or 'liberal opinions,' in all the Protestant churches. This theological infidelity, or infidel theology, has first of all set itself to the denial of inspiration and the dissolution of Scripture. The Bible does not contain the words of God, and as to whether it contains even his thoughts, every one must judge for himself, and discover by 'intuition, or the verifying faculty,' which are, and which are not, the thoughts of God; the human intellect being supposed to be quite capable of pronouncing upon what is divine and what is not!

"This untrammelled theology ignores prophecy, as being that department of inspiration which is specially supernatural. No Broad Churchman would think it worth his while to study Daniel or the Apocalypse except as he would study the Koran.

"Secretly this theology has done extensive and deadly work, undermining faith in God's future entirely; and thousands who still call themselves evangelical are (perhaps unconsciously) leavened with these principles, so that prophetic truth has lost all value to them, as well as all its interest. They have ceased to study the prophets as such. This state of things is far more extensive than most suppose; and operating in conjunction with the hatred of millenarianism, which exists among so many who have no sympathy with Broad Churchism, it has hindered the study of the prophetic word; nay, has made that study a byword and a scorn.

The heresies of Darbyism, or Plymouth-Brethrenism, are also referred to, as having been specially influential in mischief to the truth.

Then the extreme minuteness of detail into which some literalists have gone as to future events, and especially as to their relative allocation, has, by the puzzles and perplexities thus introduced, repelled not a few. The unproved assertions, (and they are legion) made by dogmatical writers and speakers, under the boasted presidency of the Holy Ghost, has made many ask, in wonder and despair, if anything can be proved at all. Unproved assertions may not seem very offensive or injurious things, yet they are so. 'Prove all things' is the apostolic statute, which some in our day seem to understand as meaning 'assert all things.'"

To these and such-like causes the editor of the Journal traces an extensive turning away from the study of the prophecies of God, and from sympathy with journalism devoted to it. It is a great pity—a thousand pities—that so important a part of the divine oracles, now so near their sublime fulfillment, should be made to suffer, and be consigned to suspicion and neglect, by reason of the wild and heretical doings and teachings of men more confident than wise, more zealous than orthodox, and more carried away with vain conceit than influenced by christian prudence, knowledge, and truth. But so it is; and we feel it the same as Dr. Bonar.

Many who once supported the Prophetic Times have turned away from it, because it has not gone into the heretical sensationalisms of the day, which Satan has set on foot to obscure, pervert, and destroy the truth; and many others are disposed to drop the whole subject, because of the varied and mischievous extravagancies and heresies of some who have been putting themselves forward as the specially called exponents of the Bible and its teachings on this great subject. We have been disgusted beyond measure with the demonstrations which some men in their folly have made in this connection, in the name of students of prophecy.

Our faith and convictions, as we have endeavored to put them forth, have been in no wise shaken. The errors, heresies, and extravagancies of men in dealing with God's word, by no means disturb our confidence and persuasions concerning the truth and clearness of that word. But they show us more fully than ever, how weak, silly, fallen, perverted, and depraved is the human heart, and how fearful is the subtlety of Satan, and his hold upon men who think themselves freest from his deceptions.

With Dr. Bonar we would say: "Let us not turn away from the prophetic word, though thus disfigured. It is a light shining in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day-star arise. Let us walk in the light, and all the more because the ruler of the darkness of this world seeks to quench or hide it from our view. Let his ministers be faithful in proclaiming his advent boldly. The Master may be nearer than we think. It will be well for us, when he comes, to be found, not only waiting for his appearing, but searching his Word."—Prophetic Times.

THE RACE.

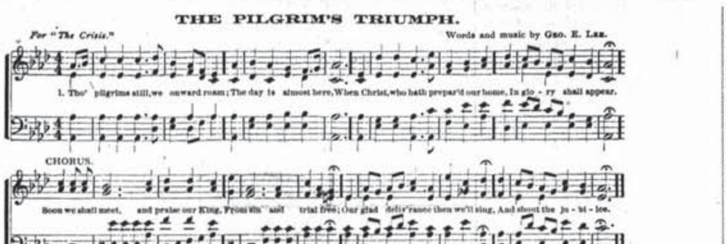
HENRY PRATT.

I remember, when a lad, of seeing ten men enter a race-course to run for a one thousand dollar prize. The distance to be run was ten miles,—ten times round a course of one mile in circumference. Some seemed full of hope, others of anxiety. The long-wished-for moment came at last. The sponge goes up, and off they go. That thick-set, muscular Englishman soon leads the field. Down goes the money—two to one—ten to one, on the Johnny. The second mile is accomplished. In the minds of many the prize is his. But alas! his reddened face grows pale, he reels and falls, to rise no more. Another and another leave the ranks, and when eight rounds have been made there are but two left. The prize is for one or the other,—the white man or the Indian must have it. How my heart beat and my throat choked as I watch them side by side for those two long, weary, and anxious miles. With pants secured by a girdle or belt, with shirts loosed from the neck, sweat pouring like rain, they run. No sound can turn their heads, no cheering turn their eyes. Every step, every act, and every look said, "This one thing I do."

"Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible." Paul would not have us think that he was running a foot race for a prize, but would have us to understand that the christian life requires effort, self-denial, conflict, like that of a soldier or racer. No one can enter the race course, as a racer, without complying with the rules of the course. Jesus says, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." "I am the way," saith the Blessed One; and whoever gets into this way must be "a new creature." The "old man," with covetousness, and hatred, and variance, and emulation, or strife, or contention, cannot enter this track. He must be temperate; "for every one that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." We may not measure ourselves among ourselves, or by our present attainments, but simply by obedience to the Master of the course. We may not learn the most effective methods of winning by apeing the acts or ways of others, but learn of Him who was meek and lowly, and the grace (help) will come. "Ye shall find grace to your souls." We may not appear so spry and nimble as our neighbor, but let us remember, in this race the prize is not to the swift, or the battle to the strong. Running produces weariness, and weariness begets impatience; therefore the caution,—"Run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."

THE PILGRIM'S TRIUMPH.

For "The Crisis." Words and music by GEO. E. LEE.



1. Tho' pilgrims still, we onward roam; The day is almost here, When Christ, who hath prepar'd our home, In glo - ry shall appear.
CHORUS.
Soon we shall meet, and praise our King, From sin and trial free; Our glad deliv'rance then we'll sing, And shout the ju - bi - lee.
We shall meet and praise our King, From sin and trial free.

2 Oh then with patience let us wait,
He will not tarry long;
We soon shall enter Zion's gate,
And join the victor's song.—Chorus.
3 Our toils and sorrows will be o'er
When we his voice shall hear;
We then shall live forevermore,
And never know a fear.—Chorus.

4 We long our Savior now to greet,
And with him ever reign;
Soon, all the ransomed we shall meet,
And never part again.—Chorus.
5 There we shall meet the angel throng,
In Eden's blissful land;
And we shall join them in the song
Of Moses and the Lamb.—Chorus.

See him thronged by the multitude pressing themselves or others to his notice for relief. Weary and faint, he bears their importunities. Fain would he seek rest, but they press him sore. Saith one, My daughter is grievously tormented; another, Mine is sick of the palsy; others are forced before him by breaking up the roof and so thrusting the afflicted ones into his presence; still another comes to the multitude, and kneeling down says, Lord, have mercy upon my son; he is lunatic; he falls into the fire and into the water, and I brought him to thy disciples and they could not cure him. Almost faint with weariness, he exclaims, "O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you?" But does he faint, or get discouraged, and impatiently say, Away from me, and let me rest? No; for the joy set before him, he endures, and calmly turning to the imploring penitent, says, "Bring him hither to me."

Says Paul, "I so run, not as uncertainly." Here is confidence. Yes, conflict, weariness and confidence. "I keep my body under"; and so may you. Tried, tempted, sorrowful and lonely one, the crown is for you if you "run with patience the race set before you." Your path may be as rugged as was Paul's, and as wearisome as was Jesus'; yet if you endure unto the end the prize is yours. Only one obtains the prize (says Paul) here; but in that contest for everlasting life, the weakest and most feeble lamb of the flock, that has hardly found a green clover blossom in all its life, by "looking unto Jesus" and enduring, will be crowned with everlasting joy at last.

HOLINESS.

(From Witness of the Times)
(Concluded.)

II.—ITS NECESSITY.

1. It is indispensably necessary to qualify us for heaven. We cannot get there without it. None ever did, and none ever will. Heb. 12: 14,—Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." "To see God," is to be in his presence; to enjoy the bliss he alone can impart. So that "without holiness" no one, no matter what his church or his creed, can stand before the throne of God. Rev. 7: 14,—"These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." But "white robes" are the emblem of purity. (Rev. 19: 8.) Psa. 24: 3, 4,—"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." God's holy place is heaven. But only the pure in heart shall dwell there.

2. Holiness is indispensable to present happiness. The unholy person cannot be happy. He may enjoy pleasure, but pleasure is not happiness. People seek after pleasure because they are unhappy. The pleasures of the world are short-lived and unsatisfactory. But he who is holy has a never-failing spring of enjoyment within. 1 Pet. 1: 8,—"In whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory." Psalm 118: 15,—"The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous."

3. Holiness is essential to usefulness. Unholy men may spread Christianity, but they pervert it as they spread it. Their "riches are corrupted," and they corrupt Christianity when employed for its support. Perhaps no one man ever devoted so much wealth for the spread of the gospel as Constantine; and no one ever did so much to corrupt it. An impure channel will foul the purest water. Colored glass imparts its own hue to the light that passes through it. A holy soul alone is qualified to lead others into holiness. Psa. 51: 10-12,—"Create within me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee." One may, without a clean heart, or the joy of salvation, convert people to the church, but it is to be feared that few of them will be found to be converted to the Lord.

Acts 2: 4, 41,—"And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues." "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." Holiness is power. He that possesses it can do good. "For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power."—1 Cor. 14: 20.

III.—ITS ATTAINABLENESS.

1. God commands it. Lev. 21: 12,—"Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the Lord your God." I Pet. 1: 16,—"But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." God never commands that which is impossible. To affirm that he does, is blasphemous. It would make him out a tyrant.

2. To sanctify the soul, or make it holy, is God's work. If this can be proved, then it follows that holiness is possible. Whatever God undertakes, he can accomplish. With him things are easy that are impossible for men. Ezek. 36: 25-27,—"Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh. And I will give you a heart of flesh, and I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them." Here God says he will do the work, and do it thoroughly. (1). He will cleanse—not from some,—but from all idols, and from all filthiness. (2). He will give a new heart and a new spirit. (3). He will cause us to walk in his statutes and judgments, He will impart the spirit of obedience, and with it the power to obey.

John 17: 17.—"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." 1 Thess. 5: 23,—"And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly." These passages plainly imply that it is God's work to make believers holy.

3. Some have attained to holiness. (1). Enoch walked with God three hundred and sixty-five years. Gen. 5: 21, 22. (2). "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God." Gen. 6: 9.

(3). Job was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil. Job 1: 1.

(4). In the New Testament, the disciples of Jesus are called Christians but twice, never Methodists, Baptists or Presbyterians. Sixty times are they called saints, or the holy ones.

IV.—HOW IT MAY BE ATTAINED.

If it is by the power of God that we are sanctified, then why are not all, and especially all professing christians holy? Because they do not meet the conditions. These are:

1. Entire consecration. All of time, talent, property, reputation, influence, yea, life itself, must be forever consecrated to God. Rom. 12: 1—"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." The body includes all. A living sacrifice, is a constant, perpetual one.

Lev. 11: 44,—"For I am the Lord your God; ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy: for I am holy." That is, set yourselves apart for God's service, and he will make you holy.

Luke 11: 44,—"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosever will lose his life for my sake shall save it."

2. Confession of inbred sins. 1 John 1: 9,—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "If we confess our actual sins," he is faithful and just to forgive us: "If we confess our inbred sins, he is faithful and just to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

3. Faith in Christ as our sanctifier. Acts 15: 9.—God put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." Acts 26: 18,—That they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me."

But beware that your so-called faith is not presumption. Otherwise you may become a self-conceited pharisee instead of a humble, meek, holy follower of Jesus. "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only."—John 5: 44.

In both these passages faith is spoken of as the medium through which sanctification is received.

Reader, what do you think of these passages of Scripture that we have brought before you? Do they not show you the necessity and the attainability of holiness? Do you live in this state of grace? If so, thank God, and press forward. If not, make no delay to obtain it. You have too much at stake to live without it a single day. Resolve firmly that you will be holy. Ask God to search you! If, in the light of the Spirit, you see, as is often the case, that you are not justified, have the moral courage and honesty to confess your condition. If in a backslidden state, you seek for holiness, you will, in all probability, take up with something short of the reality. Be thorough! Confess as fully as the word and the Spirit of God directs. Give yourself up, without the least reserve to obey the Lord in every thing.

Look to Jesus as your present Savior from all sin. Plead his promises. Rely upon his grace to save you to the uttermost. Thus you shall soon feel the sanctifying power of the Spirit of God all through soul and body. You will then, in your daily life, have your fruit unto holiness; and the witness of the Spirit will be given, to assure you of your present gracious state, and to give you a pledge of untold glories to be enjoyed in the world to come.

Now we have received the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

W. H. SPENCER.

NOT A BIRTH.

"Can a man be born unless he be first begotten? Is not a resurrection to life, a birth? How then can a man be resurrected to life, unless he be first begotten of God?" Such are the queryings, and such the logic by which some are led to abandon the Pauline hope of "a resurrection both of the just and unjust." But is this logic sound?

A man cannot be born except first begotten; so much is self-evidently true. So far, all agree. Now is a resurrection to mortal life ever called a birth, in the Bible? Does not the Bible deny to such a resurrection such a title? Christ is called the "first born from the dead;" but was he the first raised to life from the dead? By no means. Then those, raised to life before Christ was, were not "born from the dead," else Christ would not be the first. If those raised to life before Christ were not born, then a resurrection to mortal life is not a birth; and one need not be begotten to know such a resurrection. If a resurrection to life constitutes a birth, then the son of the widow of Zarephath was the first born from the dead. But although numbers had been raised to mortal life, the Bible declares that none had been "born from the dead," till Christ was raised, since it calls him the "first." Therefore a resurrection to life merely, is not a birth, and one needs no begetting to be thus raised, as is evidenced by the children raised to life by Elijah and Elisha, and the man buried in Elisha's sepulchre, who revived.

Since so many have been raised to mortal life, and raised to suffer and die again, how can we say that a mortal resurrection is an absurdity?

Christ is called "the first born from the dead," because the first changed from mortal to immortality, from corruption to incorruption. That glorious change at the resurrection of the just is called a "birth"; and to know that change into the gloriousness of Jesus, we must be "begotten of God." But to be raised from the dead without this change needs no begetting, because not a birth.

Let us "receive with meekness the engrafted word," "prove all things," "hold fast that which is good."

MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

The longer I live, the more enlarged my experience becomes; so, in proportion, does the conviction force itself upon me that revealed religion is on its trial before the world; not for some trifling blemishes which a little mild correction may mend, but for its very life. What with a multiplicity of divisions, party strife, inconsistency, and lukewarmness, the sceptical partisan has ample room for effective retort. The standard which Christ laid down is, with unconscionable impertinence frequently reversed, so flatly do numerous professors give the lie to every precept of their Master. Christ says, "Renounce the world," come out of it; have nothing to do with it, it is utterly opposed to me; and if you would be my disciple, you must take care that it be utterly opposed to you. How frequently does the modern christian say, I shall do nothing of the kind. On the contrary, I conceive it to be my special business to remain in the world, to do very much as other people do, and to show all men how possible it is to serve God, and conform to the usages of society as well. Christ says, "Strip yourself of your wealth," or at least, if it be not the snare to you it is to others, give up some portion of it for the use of the deserving poor around you.

Frequently, thank God—very frequently—do many thoroughly consistent christian men give liberally of their substance to those in need, starting afresh in life many whose paths have been signalized by misfortune, or severe reverses; while on the other hand, is it not a fact, that certain of the wealthiest in the land, whose commercial status is vastly strengthened by their association with christian effort, remain satisfied by offering the most paltry contributions? What is the reason? Simply this: Christian work, such as teaching in ragged schools, the delivery of sensational religious addresses (a crying evil in these days), coupled with Sunday-school teaching and other forms of effort more or less familiar—are, too frequently, used as a means to obtain extended commercial patronage. Far—very far—be it from me to draw a one-sided or exaggerated picture.

Had I time or space, it would not be difficult to furnish some of the most glaring examples of deliberate inconsistency which I have ever known or heard of, and although every effort was made to cover the deed, exposure was of course the inevitable result. "Be sure your sin will find you out" is the language of Holy Scripture. How marvellously, too, does this come to pass, generally, (a) in the light of exposure (b) in the light of punishment.

Christ, "came to seek and to save that which was lost." Those who preach and teach, are bound to remember and enforce this great truth. But many of the modern christians of the year A. D. 1873, prefer to console themselves with the conviction that they are "safe for glory" (a most distasteful expression as frequently used), and to wrangle about minor differences, which none, save God, can explain.

It would appear as if Christ were frequently forgotten; he does not ask for the maxims of political economy, nor the intricacies of commercial business. He wants the heart, he wants fidelity, consistency, and steady perseverance in well doing. This is just what modern christians do not understand. They are serving God and mammon every day. Not by reason of inconsistencies, which would be pardonable enough, but as a matter of deliberate purpose.

If we are to give evidence to an unbelieving world of the reality of Christianity, there must be downright sincerity, self-denial, boldness, and less of the shallow mockery which has unhappily been too characteristic of this miserable modern Christianity. It is a solemn thought: all these years we have been preaching the Gospel of unreality to the world, and the world seems as far from conversion as ever. Is it not rational to suppose that our efforts to make people good and happy might be more successful if we lived visibly before society as men to whom this earth is absolutely nothing, and the day of judgment is the only matter worth a moment's thought; or else admitted honestly that our standard has hitherto been too high, that we have exaggerated our knowledge of the hereafter, that Christ is but the idol of a popular superstition, and that it is enough for men to live soberly, and peaceably in this present world?—H. G. Gill, in Rainbow.

ISRAEL'S AND JUDAH'S NEW-COVENANT.

O. W. [illegible].

Whatever there may or may not be in the future for Israel and Judah, as the "natural branches of the good olive tree," one thing is settled for ever, beyond any possibility of change, and that is, no other covenant can be made with them, or any body else, than the "new covenant" of the gospel now existing. I am conscious of having put that in very positive terms, but the facts in the case and the apostolic teaching warrant the emphatic declaration.

In Gal. 3: 15, Paul says—"When a covenant is confirmed, it cannot be disannulled, nor can anything be added to it"; and in v. 17 of Gal., and v. 17 of Heb. 6, he says that God confirmed his promise—relating to this covenant in Christ—by an oath. Then after quoting and restating the terms of the covenant (Heb. 8: 6-12), as given in Jer. 31: 31-34, he proceeds to say in Heb. 9: 17 that a testament (covenant) is not in force during the life of the testator; but it does come into force after the testator's death.

Now I do aver that the death of our Lord Jesus, the Anointed, not only brings into operation the covenant specified in Jer. 31: 31-34, quoted in Heb. 8: 10-12, applied to Christ in c. 6: 6, c, 9: 15-17, and c. 10: 14-18; but the testator's death also utterly precludes any more covenants,—any subsequent testaments; for the covenants are like the "comings" of Christ, of which there are two, and only two: the first and second,—the first and last,—the old and new. The "new covenant" is "the last will and testament" of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; "for in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Death hath no more dominion over him"; which renders null and void any future testament. Let Israel and Judah come forward and "acknowledge the validity of the WILL"; and among us let there be an "end of all strife."

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

S. H. WITHINGTON.

In the Crisis of Dec. 10th, in an editorial, the following question is asked: "Is the midnight cry referred to in the parable of the ten virgins in the past?"

I answer, no; but now in course of fulfillment. William Miller commenced the proclamation "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," about the year 1828, giving his reasons from the Bible touching the signs of his coming, and the prophetic periods, and why he thought they would all terminate about 1843. God greatly blessed that message, and raised up good men from all the different denominations in the christian church to assist in calling out a waiting people, who went out confidently expecting to meet the Lord on the 10th day of the 7 month 1844, but were disappointed. From that date commenced the true tarrying of the Bridegroom.

The giving of that message I understand to have been the cause of the church, represented by the ten virgins taking the Bible ("Thy word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path"—Ps. 119: 105), and going forth to meet the Bridegroom in 1843-4. It took time to get that message before the church, which culminated in the tarrying of the Bridegroom. So, I apprehend, it takes time to give the true midnight cry. This cry I regard as a message given to the waiting virgins (called out by the first message which resulted in disappointment), by some faithful person or persons, whom the Lord raises up to give it.

When the cry or message is proclaimed and finished, it will result in waking all the virgins, and thus causing them to trim their lamps, and they that are ready to enter in, and the door will be shut; after which a part of the virgins, having been foolish, will ask for admittance and be refused. And then, and not until then, will the parable have had its complete fulfillment.

JOB 27: 8.

J. P. MARQUAND.

"For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?"

The subject in this verse alludes to hope; and according to its quality or nature, so is the result. It is highly important that we know whereof we speak, and what we believe. The Bible gives a definition of two kinds of hope. One is the hope of the gospel; the other the hope of the hypocrite. The hope of the gospel is to know Jesus Christ, and that our sins are blotted out; to be in fellowship with him and with the truth, waiting in patience for his personal revelation from heaven. It is to believe in the fulfillment of all his promises, especially in his final subjugation of this earth, and the establishment of his eternal kingdom thereupon. To believe in the permanent destruction of evil, and the restoration of good throughout the wide universe. This is the gospel hope.

Now we come to describe the other hope, called the "hope of the hypocrite." This differs essentially from the other, in that self and selfishness are the basis or foundation. It originates in self, is bounded by this world, and dies in corruption. The Bible says the "hypocrite's hope is like the spider's web, and like the giving up of the ghost."

The elements of this hope are distrust, hatred, and disobedience. Its foundation is earthly, sensual, and devilish. Its superstructure pride and vain glory. Its topmost stone egotism and self-conceit. Its end destruction and perdition.

The christian's hope refines, purifies, and elevates to angelic dignity, and prepares the soul for a glorious communion, and a home with God and his Son Jesus Christ. The hypocrite's hope degrades, debases and demoralizes, even unto the earthly, or beastly nature, and prepares the way for judicial punishment.

Whoever may read these lines, on your choice, whether you will accept or reject the christian's hope, will depend your eternal destiny. Before you there is set life and death. Which will you choose? Heaven, or hell? The society of God and angels, or the fellowship of wicked men and devils? The home of the blessed and pure ones, or the companionship of the base and vile? Come, poor traveler to eternity, give thy heart, thy life, to Jesus Christ to-day, and by-and-by you may enjoy the fruition of that hope, which is even as an anchor to the soul in this present life.

NO REST HERE.

Now, for what have I said all this? Just to prepare you for the text: "Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest." I am going to make you a grand offer. Some of you remember that when gold was discovered in California, large companies were made up and started off to get their fortune. To-day I want to make up a party for the land of gold. I hold in my hand a deed from the proprietor of the estate, in which he offers to all who will join the company ten thousand shares of infinite value, in a city whose harps are gold, whose crowns are gold. You have read of the Crusaders—how that many thousands of them went off to conquer the holy sepulchre. I ask you to join a grander crusade—not for the purpose of conquering the sepulchre of a dead Christ, but for the purpose of reaching the throne of a living Jesus.

When an army is to be made up, the recruiting officer examines the volunteers; he tests their eyesight; he sounds their lungs; he measures their stature; they must be just right, or they are rejected. But there shall be no partiality in making up this army of Christ. Whatever your moral or physical stature, whatever your dissipations, whatever your crimes, whatever your weaknesses, I have a commission from the Lord Almighty to make up this regiment of redeemed souls, and I cry, "Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest." Many of you have lately joined this company, and my desire is that you may all join it. Why not? You know in your own heart's experience that what I have said about this world is true—that it is no place to rest in.

There are hundreds here weary—oh, how weary—weary with sin; weary with trouble, weary with bereavement. Some of you have been pierced through and through. You carry the scars of a thousand conflicts, in which you have bled at every pore; and you sigh, "Oh! that I had the wings of a dove, that I might fly away and be at rest!" You have taken the cup of this world's pleasure and drunk it to the dregs, and still the thirst claws at your tongue, and the fever strikes to your brain. You have chased pleasure through every valley, by every stream, amid every brightness, and under every shadow; but just at the moment when you were all ready to put your hand upon the rosy, laughing sylph of the wood, she turned upon you with the glare of a fiend and the eye of a satyr, her locks adders, and her breath the chill damp of a grave. Out of Jesus Christ no rest. No voice to silence the storm. No light to kindle the darkness. No dry dock to repair the split bulwark.—T. De Witt Talmage

The World's Crisis

A NEW DRESS.

We print the CRISIS this week in new type, which, we trust, will please our subscribers; and we hope our friends will do what they can to extend its circulation by obtaining new subscribers, or, as a number have, by sending the names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with money to pay for the same. G. T. A.

NEW YEAR.

Again, we wish to say to all our readers: We wish them a HAPPY NEW YEAR. Let us each be determined to live just as the Lord directs, and make no provision to do wrong in word, thought or deed, during the coming year. We are rapidly approaching the great day of the Lord, and should not live a moment unprepared to meet Christ. Every year affords events which give additional evidence that the present dispensation is about completed, and it may be reasonably expected that the events of the coming year will furnish further proof that we are living amidst the winding up scenes of the last days.

Among the signs, we may expect a rapid increase of wickedness, and terrible upheavings of the laboring classes in opposition to the capitalists; larger waves of distress and perplexity among the nations, and in society generally, with an increase of infidelity and bold scoffing against God and the Bible, Christ and Christianity, and all things sacred to the friends of Jesus. We may also look for an increased interest in the subject of holiness among all the true followers of the Lord, and a greater separation from the world, its fashions, follies, amusements, spirit, manners, and all unholy things, in order to be ready to meet the great King when he comes in glory. May those who read this stand in the front ranks among "the saints of the Most High."

Our position in the history of the world is a sublime one. Could we have chosen our place to live between the creation of man and the second coming of Christ, we would have selected the very time in which we are now living, when we are daily cheered with the blessed hope of being alive when the glorious Deliverer shall appear in the clouds of heaven, accompanied by the holy angels. This may be the last full year before the great event. We do not know this, but our heart says "Come, Lord Jesus," and "come quickly." It is certainly time to "watch and pray," that we "enter not into temptation." Let every weight be thrown aside for ever. Lay all upon the altar, and there let it remain at the disposal of Jesus. Live where it may be daily and truthfully said: "Thy will be done."

Let no sharp words be spoken in the family, in the church, or society. Put away all evil speaking, joking, backbiting, faultfinding, hatred, variance, emulation, envy, and every other evil habit, the use of which will grieve the Holy Spirit, and unfit us for the coming of our Savior. Let these unholy things have no place in the coming year, if we expect to live in Christ, and have him live in us. We are instructed to "abstain from all appearance of evil." The past cannot be altered. If we have done wrong, the best that can be done is to ask forgiveness, and secure pardon. The future is not ours. The present is the only time we can use for good or evil. The best way is to live by the moment; then we save the borrowed burdens of the future, and those in the past.

Many make crooked paths because they look back. The pilot, or the traveler who does this, must not expect to go forward in a straight line. When he casts his eye backward, he may expect to find a crook in his pathway; so in the christian's journey; it is perilous to keep the eyes on the past. That is not the place to look for Jesus. Looking back is only to look at our shadow, and bring ourselves into darkness. When Paul was describing his manner of living, he says: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are, before." This is a very important rule for those who wish to grow in grace. Individually, we have received great benefit by adopting this apostolic rule, and commend it to all the disciples of Christ. As we are now apparently very near his coming, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, and live right all the time that remains for us before his appearing. Let no "root of bitterness" have any place in the heart. Let Jesus have the sole control from the present moment till he comes to gather his saints. In short, let us, consecrate all to him for ever and ever. May this year be the best the reader ever enjoyed. M. G.

"TIME NO LONGER."

Time is that which measures duration. A period of continuance. It is that which determines the length of a period occupied by specific events. God gave to men day and night and the seasons of the year, as the means by which the relative length of periods occupied by earthly events should be measured. Therefore the standard of time God has given us is the length of day and night, changes of the moon, and the four seasons of the year, or the revolution of the earth around the sun. As these periods are measured and definitely fixed by the revolution of the planets, and as their motions are regulated by God's unchanging time in heaven, we get the same standard of time on earth that is used in heaven. Then to imagine that God has a clock in heaven by which the periods of the revolution of the planets are measured, and that man has a clock on earth which will correctly measure the same periods commencing at the same point in the revolution, when God's clock tolls the end of a day, man's, repeats it. When God strikes the end of a lunation or month, man responds to the sound. When God announces the end of a year, man replies, It is ended.

Time, therefore, measures the distance between the boundaries of events. Our year is bounded by the beginning of Jan. 1st and the close of Dec. 31st. The distance between the two States is the time, that is, measurement of a year. If a day should come which could not be measured by any revolutions or periods, so that God's clock could never toll its end, then it is measureless; consequently, timeless.

we understand that time, as used in the text, belongs to periods that can be measured. Periods during which events will transpire that are limited,—that must end.

God has taught us in his Word that in the world to come all events will be endless; therefore, measureless; so that time cannot be applied to them. Our measuring line of time will be lost when we leave this world; for in that world there will be no day and night, or summer and winter, by which the length of duration can be determined. In that glorious world there will be one unending day. It will never be succeeded by night. In that heavenly state the year of the redeemed will know no waning moon, or shading twilight; no closing scene, when the lingering thought will come, "It is past, it is forever gone."

Reader, stop a moment, we pray you, and seriously reflect that you are on the car of time, swiftly speeding to measure the period of your mortal life. Your feet are now pressing the soil over which the millions of this generation are tramping in their solemn march to the unmeasured scenes of the coming world. In a few brief days the wheels of this ever moving train will bring the countless hosts of our race face to face with the Judge of quick and dead.

The year of our Lord, 1873, is now past. Its record is added to the long roll of earth's shaded scenes of woe and death. A new year has opened its portal to us. We have passed its threshold, and find ourselves still in the land of the dying; still harvesting the fruits of the curse. We cast our eye upon the measuring line of time, running it back to the bright morning, where stood the royal representative of manhood with his queenly helpmeet, as the unbroken melodies of earth's first coronation sounded mid the unsullied glories of his new-made kingdom. Every tree and shrub, every beast, fish, and fowl stood as the representatives of their Creator's infinite skill and wisdom. Earth's fadeless carpet, revolving chandelier, and all inspiring music told of the Infinite, and answered to the call of perfection.

But the necessity commenced there, just there, to bring out the measuring reed, and tell how long that glory and perfection continued; for the brightness of the morning suddenly ended in a dark and fearful night. Time commenced with the measurement of earth's primeval glory; for it could be measured because it had an end; and will continue until earth's scenes shall know no ending; then the restored glories and endless blessedness of perfection shall be eternally established.

This dark night of the curse has been filled with events so short and transient, that their duration has been measured by time's periods of days, months, years, and generations.

When Adam sinned, the measuring line was laid on his life; and when the number of his days were counted, the thread was cut, and he fell into the silence of the grave. So, have the generations of his children mounted the stage of life, and battled with the enemy, death, but when the sands have all fallen, no position or condition could remove the bounds; God's decrees must be executed, and so the generations have been cut down at the end of their seasons like the grass.

The great kingdoms have waved their banners over the loyal millions, and defied heaven and earth to break their colossal powers; but when their appointed periods ended, their sceptres fell, and their crowns were trampled in the dust, according to the purpose of him who had determined their times. Cities have strengthened their fortifications in defiance of threatened changes, saying, My days shall not be counted; the period of my continuance shall have no end. But the changes of the ages demolished their walls and laid their palaces in heaps of ruins.

Time has unrolled its line of periods stretching over the varying scenes of this world, for about six thousand years. It told the duration of the old world, and the present world;—the antediluvian generations, the Patriarchal, Mosaic, and Christian ages. It set the bounds for the flood, and counted the years to the exode from Egypt. It numbered the anniversaries of the wilderness journey, and set up the mile stones through the bright and dark shades of Canaan's history. It appropriated stated weeks to Messiah's advent, and a score and a half of years to his anointing. It appointed the day for his tragical death, and also for his glorious reliving. It shaded the place of Jerusalem's overthrow, and the dispersion of its ancient people. It exhibited bloody footprints through the terrible reign of Rome's haughty persecutor, and tells of the mingled wrath and bitter mouring of the Apocalyptic widow, at the loss of her last husband. It locates the "ten kings" of her household who shall assassinate the guilty mistress of the nations, thinking to perpetually occupy the seven hilled city. Then shall the clock of time toll the end of these beginnings and endings. Then shall come the transition from measured, to unmeasured scenes,—from mortal, to immortality. Then shall the earthly administration change from satanic to Messianac,—from woe to bliss,—from death to everlasting life.

O, then, christian friends tarry not too long in gazing at the dark picture of earth's reminisences, for the shadows are passing away. Weep not too long at the head-stones of departed loved ones, for the time of separation is ending. The time of joyous greetings and eternal meetings is at hand. Stop not a moment to witness the vain parade, or childish toys of this transient world, for the train of time is already rushing through the days of the new-born year, leaving behind it the smoke and dust of war and bloodshed; the dark stains of terrible crime; the anguish of blighted hopes and buried love. To the heart of faith these hours are filled with unparalleled solemnity and suspense;—waiting to hear the angel proclaim, "There shall be time no longer."

May the abounding grace of Jesus Christ be with you all, subduing your hearts fully to him, regulating your lives by the gospel, preparing you completely for the kingdom of God, so that you may enjoy, "A Happy New Year" in anticipation of the perfect state beyond the measured periods is the prayer of your brother in Christ. J. C.

DEFILED TEMPLES.

Everybody is either defiled or undefiled, pure or impure, clean or unclean, a saint or a sinner. In which condition is the reader? Stop and think it over, and give a true answer before reading any further.

What is the response? Remember the Scripture says: "There shall in no wise enter into it [the holy city] any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie. Rev. 21: 27. Again, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." 1 Cor. 3: 17. If no defiled temple will be allowed in the holy city and the coming kingdom, it is a matter of first class importance to know what will defile, and avoid it. The Savior says:

> "That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man. For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness: all these evil things come from within, and defile the man." Mark 7: 20-23.

Let each reader look in his heart, and see if any of these evil things are there. Let the examination be thorough and critical. If they are found, their presence affords positive proof that the temple is not holy; hence not filled with the Spirit. Those evil things must be removed from the hearts of all who enter the holy city—the New Jerusalem. No one can be ready to meet Christ so long as these things remain in the heart. The Lord does not propose to live in such a nest of unclean things. The only way to get rid of them is to give up the heart entirely, unreservedly, to Christ, and let him take full possession by the Holy Spirit. Thus we may become "partakers of the divine nature," and get rid of the controlling power of the human, evil nature. We are not able in our own strength to keep the heart clean. The natural man, the Adamic nature, is impure, and must be subdued, renewed, purified, by the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit. So long as we are filled with that, the heart is clean, the thoughts pure, and the conversation holy. Love, joy, and peace abound, and we can sing, "All is well;" but when the Spirit is grieved away, then the "old man" is alive again, and the heart is again filled with evil, defiling things.

Those who have never given up fully to Christ, and been filled with his Spirit, may think it is impossible to be free from "evil thoughts," "deceit," "pride," "covetousness," "laciviousness," and the like. Then it is impossible to have a pure heart; but without a pure heart, we have no promise of salvation. We cannot get where we are not liable to be tempted by Satan, who may make evil suggestions to us; but the pure heart resists them at once; hence they do not lodge there to defile the man. No one is to blame for having a vile being knock at his door, desiring to come in and defile the family, but if he is resisted, and not allowed to enter to do his wicked work, the family is unharmed; so when Satan knocks at the door of our heart, asking the privilege of presenting for our consideration some evil thought, desire, or feeling, if we resist him, and refuse to let him in, we remain undefiled. So long as the will stands firmly opposed to the admission of the evil, Satan is obliged to stay outside. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." He must get the consent of the will before he come in to defile the heart, after it has once been made clean by the presence of the Holy Spirit.

When Jesus is allowed to keep the key of the heart, he allows the enemy no place. Our blessed Master delights in keeping his children in "perfect peace," so that "nothing shall offend them." When we try to keep ourselves, and to war with Satan in our own strength, we may expect to be defeated; but through Christ strengthening us, the enemy is easily overcome, because then he who is in us is greater than he that is in the world. The blessed Jesus can bind Satan, spoil his goods, and cast him out, so that there is not even a heart-closet, left for him to occupy, but Christ is all and in all. Let every thing that hath breath give him praise. M. G.

ENCOURAGING.—We have just received a letter from a minister in Georgia, in which he says:—

"Will you please state to me fully the principles upon which an earnest and candid person may become associated with those called the 'Advent Christians'? for I feel in a subordinate sense greatly indebted to those who are styled the 'Second Adventists,' for the great help afforded in the study of the Word of God, though I owe to God, only wise, all the honor in my deliverance.

Doubtless, there are those who will look upon the writer as one of those fickle, unstable sort; but he is enured, to some extent, to reproaches; for he has been reproached as a mad fellow, cracked-brained, heretic, infidel, Universalist, etc., etc., all coming upon him for no other reason assigned, but for an unyielding devotion to God's truth.

For believing and teaching the plain, unmistakable doctrines of the Bible, the writer has been summarily tried, and excluded from the church of his childhood, after having lived in the community of the Methodist Episcopal Church as member, for about twenty-seven years, and as a minister for about eighteen years. He has been brought, through the good providence of God, to view the Bible as a revelation, and not a mystery. He has been rejected for believing and teaching that the Bible in its plain literal interpretation teaches that God only possesses immortality, and that immortality is offered to man as a boon or estate, and not as an innate or inherent element of man's being or nature; and further, that life is life, and death is death, as well in a Bible sense as any other sense; that death is something more than merely a separation of soul and body; that it is rather a dissolution of being than otherwise, etc., etc. I am anxious to associate myself with those enlightened in the Scriptures. I am not at all restless upon the subject of rites and ceremonies, creeds and conferences.

There is a great field of labor here, which perhaps, if properly attended to, will yield an abundant harvest, under divine favor. I feel inclined to sow beside all waters. God bless the great reformation cause. Now is the time to press the question, and to keep it before the people. We need help in the way of literature. We are very poor, and cannot at present command much of anything financially. In this, I do not wish to be regarded as begging. I am only stating facts."

This Bro. expresses a desire for tracts. We hope to be able to send a supply.

He should have encouragement. For certain good reasons we withhold his name for the present. We trust he will have strength to stand up boldly for our Divine Master, and help spread the light and truth received. Pray for him. M. G.

BUCHANAN.—The Lord is bestowing special blessings on the Buchanan (Mich.) church. From seventy-five to eighty have requested prayers the last three evenings, many have been much quickened, and some eight or ten converted. The interest is rapidly increasing. We are expecting glorious results.

Monday, Dec. 29. The Lord is still blessing us richly in the meetings. Nine young converts were baptized yesterday by Bro. Mathewson, and others will improve the next opportunity. The church is daily advancing in divine life. The Spirit of the Lord is searching many hearts very thoroughly, because they desire it, and when they consecrate themselves fully to Christ, they are filled with the abundance of peace so freely promised in the word of the Lord.

We purpose to have a watch-meeting to close up the year, when we expect a precious season of refreshing from the Most High. The importance of holy living receives prominent attention in the meetings in connection with the evidences of Christ's speedy coming. We are more and more convinced that the time has come when all who expect to be ready to meet the Savior should give special attention to the subject of holiness. Let it have a warm place in the affections of every follower of the blessed Jesus. M. G.

INQUIRIES.

What is the generally accepted form of church covenant among Adventists? What officers are necessary in a scripturally organized church? What are the respective duties of the different church officers? A. DEWEY.

The following is

OUR COVENANT.

We, whose names are subjoined, do hereby covenant and agree, by the help of the Lord, to walk together as a church of Christ; faithfully maintaining its ordinances, taking the BIBLE as our only rule of faith and practice, church order and discipline; making CHRISTIAN CHARACTER the only test of fellowship and communion.

We further agree, with christian fidelity and meekness, to exercise mutual watchcare, to counsel, admonish, or reprove, as duty may require, and to receive the same from each other as becometh the household of faith.

The officers in a church are usually Elders and deacons, one of whom may be a Secretary, and another a Treasurer. The Elders take the general oversight of the spiritual interests; and the deacons look after the welfare of the poor, and the financial interests. In small churches, only one, two or three Elders may be needed, who will take charge of all these things. They are chosen as a matter of convenience, to act as agents for the church. Instruction for the choice of these official men may be found in 1 Tim. 3. They should be prudent men, gentle, long-suffering, who are not hasty, and who have had much experience in the service of Christ; men who are not selfish or covetous. It is not well to choose persons who are anxious to have the office, and who will feel stirred up because they are not appointed. Such men think too highly of themselves to be fit for the place. They usually cause trouble. M. G.

OUR PAPER.

All connected with the Crisis we think, especially proof readers, compositors, and dim-eyed readers, will congratulate themselves in having received from our Business Agent new type for its new year's issue. It will give the paper a better mechanical appearance, and we trust will help commend it to some as worthy of perusal and patronage.

The society will do all it can to make the Crisis a sanctified medium of communicating to the people of this generation the great and important truths necessary for its salvation. We have no fears, if the paper is such an instrumentality, from which every thing is expunged detrimental to truth, and all is added that God approves, of mechanism, literature, and spirituality, that it will not be sustained. God has the means and power to sustain and make efficient all instrumentalities used in his cause, but he has committed much of that means and power into the hands of men as his stewards, and they will be accountable for its proper use.

We do earnestly desire and pray that our Weekly Paper may be sustained by the good will of God, the prayers of the holy, the contributions of the well instructed, the funds of the wealthy, and the unity and persistent efforts of its christian friends. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but all for Christ and the salvation of those for whom he died. J. C.

HARD TIMES.

The winter prospect is dark for many thousand poor people in this country. The daily papers have been saying from time to time that the effects of the panic are about past; but it is quite evident that its worst influence is yet to be felt by the masses. It is true that some of the rich bankers may have become comparatively quiet in their reduced situation since their smash-up a few weeks since, but the financial wave of distress is now dashing upon the common business people, and the poor laboring classes, causing fearful forebodings as to the near future. As the result of this feeling, we give the following from the Chicago Inter-Ocean, Dec. 23d:—

AN APPEAL TO THE WORKINGMEN OF CHICAGO.

Fellow Workmen:—Since the general financial and commercial crisis has made such an irresistible sway all over the civilized countries and has baffled the most desperate efforts of the ruling class of the day (Bourgoise) in administering all kinds of quack remedies in aid of the rotten condition of the social situation, in order to stop or at least mitigate the crisis—the consequences of this crisis fall in quick succession, with full weight upon the laboring class. You know that the whole daily press is in the service of that arch enemy of society—capital—and merely tries to deceive public opinion on the subject of the crisis, asserting "that the worst was over." But such is not the case—the crisis has hardly commenced, and no one knows yet where and when it will end. Hundreds of thousands of men will be thrown out of work and will be rendered homeless and penniless, and thousands of business men of all classes will be reduced to ruin or bankruptcy. The crisis was predicted twenty-five years ago by men well acquainted in the science of social economy, who, by statistical figures on hand, pronounced its sure advent as a necessary consequence of our present corrupted social institutions, and as a matter of overproduction, and they also declared that the series of crises will henceforth repeat in more and more shorter intervals.

There is but one remedy to oppose with success the damaging consequences of this fearful crisis—it consists in the energetic union and concentration of the workingmen into one solid organization. Already are the workingmen of the Old World, as well as those in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and in other places, busily engaged in this direction. Should we of Chicago stand back? Is there not as great a compulsory necessity upon us here as anywhere else? Or is it that the workingmen men of Chicago are inspired with less feeling of duty? Or are they possessed of less moral courage to protect themselves and their families against the worst, and to vindicate their fundamental rights? We hope they will not. For this purpose let us join, one and all, into one solid organization. No one stay away! Let him who fails be branded a traitor to himself, his family, and society! For by united action the evil will soon be removed, and then it will be hardly possible that while we have overfilled magazines with the staff of life and empty tenements—that the masses should starve, freeze to death, or wander without shelter.

A number of workingmen's societies of this city have inaugurated the first steps for a general organization, who have appointed committees for this purpose and designated 139 West Polk street, and 68 and 70 West Lake street as free meeting places, where committees of every nationality will be daily in session from two o'clock P. M. to eight o'clock in the evening, where applications will be received of all men out of employment, whose names and residences will be registered into a book for that purpose. As soon as practicable thereafter the various committees select a committee which will be instructed to present and urge the Common Council with the following demands:

1. Work for all who have no work and are able to work, with sufficient wages.
2. Aid in money or provisions for the suffering people, out of the treasury.
3. All disbursements to be made by a committee appointed by workingmen, for the purpose of fair dispensation.
4. In case of insufficient cash in the treasury, the credit of the city shall be resorted to.

The City Council cannot refuse this just demand of aiding in the most necessary means for upholding the life necessities of the majority of its inhabitants, so much the less as this same city voted and assumed a debt of $13,500,000 for park purposes in the interest of a few capitalists, landholders and professional politicians. We only ask for the necessities of life. Workingmen! rally! Join in the phalanx! Let your number and a strong organization be your and your family's safety! For we have nothing to lose and everything to gain.

THE WORKINGMEN'S COMMITTEE.

The condition of things in Chicago is about the same as in other cities of the same size. The outlook is a gloomy one. Till Jesus comes, we may expect the state of society will grow "worse and worse." Many human remedies are sought to relieve mankind of the alarming social evils that are now so prevalent; but they all prove to be only failures. In all the reformatory schemes invented by men, Christ is omitted; but without him no permanent improvement can be expected. M. G.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

Remittances should be sent to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass., or they may be enclosed with remittances to the Crisis Office.

LETTER FROM J. C. & S. E. SMITH.

To all the Readers of the Crisis, Greeting: Since our last correspondence we have again visited Attumwa, Coffee Co. Our meetings at the first were blessed; and on our return, being with them two Sundays more, the interest increased to the last. The blessings of divine truth rested upon us with weight, and the Lord gave utterance to speak the riches of his grace, night after night. Fifteen united with us in "covenant," taking the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice; and many more would unite, we think, could there be more labor put forth. The demand is for more laborers—those that can preach the Word. O that some whole-hearted man of God may come here and help in this great harvest field. Last Thursday, Dec. 18th, we went to Key West, where we have held meetings a number of times in the past, and commenced meetings, and held them till Tuesday the 23d. A deep feeling was stirred up all through the settlement, and many are reading for themselves, to see whether the things spoken are so.

Before returning to Arvonia, Tuesday, four went forward in baptism, and came out of the water rejoicing in the Lord. A mother of fifty-seven years, and her two daughters, also a brother who had been sprinkled but had never felt satisfied that he had obeyed the command. Two or three little boys of a preaching Bro. went and broke the ice in the morning. This Bro. I hope will embrace the truth, and be a help in this great work. After speaking one evening, a Methodist minister said the kingdom of God was set up in his heart. We asked him if the New Jerusalem, Christ the King, the territory, the saints of the Most High, were all there? all set up in his heart? This was too much for him, and I trust the plain, scriptural teaching of a real literal kingdom will open his eyes to the truth.

The Lord's day we had a blessed season. Six came from Attumwa of the little company there, and others would have come, could they have been provided with conveyance. A Bro. and Sr. Klock, both intelligent and noble-hearted, who have long been engaged in teaching public schools, and belonged to the Christian Church, are now rejoicing in the blessed hope of immortality when Jesus comes. They are well satisfied with the goodness of God in leading them to repentance, and into the marvelous light of his truth. Also a Dr. and wife have embraced the "blessed hope," with many others. A goodly number of families have erected the family altar, and a weekly prayer meeting is being held. We trust the work will continue till Jesus comes, and many be found ready to meet him with joy.

At Key West a Congregationalist preacher adopted the covenant with six others, and they will hold a Thursday night prayer-meeting. The people complain because we leave them with no one to care for them,—no one to minister unto them spiritual things. Here and there a little company is raised up, and then we have to go into other fields, among the poor and needy, where cries come for help, and thus leave the children to go without an earthly shepherd. This is hard, and our hearts are made sad when we think what might be done and what ought to be done for the cause of our Master. I am well aware that there are many at the East that are far better able, both mentally and physically, than we are to come and labor in this destitute field. Brethren, will you not sacrifice a little ease, and come where you can have bread and sorghum, a plenty to satisfy your hunger, and the work of the Lord to fill your souls with praise and thanksgiving? Every church at the East has some one that might be spared, and that could labor in destitute fields to the glory of God. Why is it that some will not obey the Master in this direction? If we were to judge by past experience of laborers at the East, we should say that many ought to be sent forth now. All of these Western States ought to be canvassed with the living Word of truth, and by men that have the Spirit and power of God to prompt them to activity; and not look merely at their own particular ease and wants. O that a hundred whole-hearted men and women would take "the sword of the Spirit," and go into the field and work for Jesus regardless of pay, and then we would see truth advance, and many rejoicing in hope of eternal life. Is it not time to work in this western field? Is it not time to leave the old paths that have been trodden so long, and help publish "this gospel" in new places? And those that have means, let them help those that have none. And may funds be sent to aid the Publishing Society, that they may have publications to send into this field, where there is great demand for them. Pray for us, that we faint not. From your Bro. and Sister in the Kansas Mission work.

STAY LONGER.—We are fully satisfied that if preachers would stay two or three weeks in a place, instead of one or two nights, and labor for the conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of believers, they would accomplish much more good in a year, at a much less expense. Pitch a battle, and stay till the enemy is overcome. It usually takes about a week to get the fire hot enough to melt sinners and backsliders. M. G.

An excellent suggestion, Bro. Grant, and I wish it could be adopted and carried out. But under existing circumstances how can it?

Suppose the people where the preacher goes do not want any extra meetings,—cannot afford the time to attend them. Suppose two or three sermons on Sunday are all they wish for, and when Monday morning comes it is expected the minister will leave, greatly to the relief of the family that has kept him, and there is no other family that will keep preachers. Suppose he proposes to remain and visit around among the people, but finds no one to favor the suggestion. Suppose the church want a new minister every Sunday, and request the one they have to give out an appointment for another preacher the next Sabbath. Suppose he sees in the Crisis the appointments of other preachers for this place, reaching on for successive weeks to come. How can he under these circumstances "stay longer"?

And, suppose again, that the preacher has gone into a "new place," and at his own expense held a few meetings, and then none are found disposed to assist him, and he without funds to hire a Hall or pay his board. How can he in this case stay longer?

These are not all unsupposable cases, but have been and are actual ones. I wish with you that preachers were wanted to stay longer, and could do so. I. I. LESLIE.

NEW YORK CONFERENCE.

The N. Y. Eastern Conference met as per notice with the church at Aurelius, Dec. 19th, 1873. Although the weather was not what might be desired, yet the attendance was very fair, and the interest of the meeting kept increasing until the close.

We heartily believe that whatever prejudice might have existed with this people, it was greatly removed. The Spirit of God pervaded our conference sessions, and all could say, both saint and sinner, that "it was good to be there."

Preachers present were A. P. Moore, M. R. Miles, E. F. Sergisson, S. C. Gove, B. P. Stevens, A. H. Dunbar, and N. McCulloch. The following churches were represented: Pineville, North Victory, Martville, Alton, and Rochester.

The President being absent, Bro. M. R. Miles was chosen President pro tem. —— Secretary. The devotional committee appointed by the Chair were Brn. Ira Pinckney and S. C. Gove. After a short prayer and conference meeting, Bro. A. H. Dunbar gave a stirring, practical discourse from Matt. 11: 28.

Saturday A. M., met for business. There being no business, the time was spent in conference. At 1.30, preaching by Bro. A. P. Moore, from Mark 11: 22. In the evening by E. F. Sergisson. Subject, "Hope." Sabbath morning met in love-feast, which was largely attended, with good results. Preaching at 11.30 by B. P. Stevens, from Luke 10: 28. At 1.30, preaching again by our worthy Bro. N. McCulloch of Rochester, from John 21: 22; after which he was followed in short but impressive remarks from Bro. S. C. Gove, in which a hearty welcome was extended to our Bro. as a co-worker with us in the gospel. Preaching again in the evening by Bro. M. R. Miles, from John 3: 1-3; after which we gathered around the table of the Lord, and sixty-five partook of the emblems of Christ's broken body and spilt blood. The parting hand was then given, and each went his way, hoping soon to meet in God's everlasting kingdom.

NOTE.—The church of Aurelius wish a special Conference to be called to meet with them again soon. Notice of a special meeting will be in Crisis. Look for it. For the brethren, J. C. GOVE, Church Clerk.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear ones in Jesus:—How goes the battle? Are your hearts beating high for glory? and is "holiness to the Lord" inscribed upon your garments? Is the way bright and prosperous? Well, home is near. How it cheers us as we come in sight of the dear old home, even here in this world; and how much more it ought to cheer us as we come in sight of the home of the saints. I'll meet you all there, by grace divine, all free from sin, sorrow, sickness and death. Srs. Chloe, Emily, Millie, Jennie, Sarah, and a host of others that now are in a like situation with my poor weary self. There all will rest. Do not get discouraged. Jesus will help us through. Sr. Cynthia, God bless you. Look up, and live. In Jesus is rest and peace. Write me again. And now, dear pilgrims, pray for your unworthy sister, who is weary in the way, but never of the way. God bless you all. Jesus has blest me in letting me have visits from some of his dear ones, among which was a precious one from Bro. Grant. I would that more would come and see me; but we will meet by-and-by.

God bless the dear one who has been under deep conviction for a long time, but has not had the light desired. God bless you, and lead you out into the liberty of the gospel. Keep low at the feet of Jesus.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. J. A. GOODRICH writes:—"For a long time I have thought that I would pen a few lines for our paper. How my heart rejoices while reading the dealings of God with the dear saints that are scattered over the land. It is a blessing to know what others are doing for Jesus, while many are shut up and cannot meet with the dear saints to worship our Master. But I bless the Lord that he does not confine himself to one place. How many precious gems there are shut out from the world, waiting for the Master's return, who are rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. Jesus says, 'Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.'

While thinking of the dealings of the Lord with me in the past, my heart was led to praise his holy name for the many blessings which he has bestowed upon me when I was so unworthy. I am led to weep for joy because he is so good to me. How many times have I been led to say,—

> 'Other refuge have I none,
> Hangs my helpless soul on thee.'

What a precious Savior we have to come and give his life for poor mortals like us. O that all the world might come and see how good the Lord is. I bless the Lord for a full and free salvation, which is offered every one without money and without price.

While reading the promises of God, I am led to rejoice with joy unspeakable. Never did the plan of salvation look so precious as to-day. My peace runs like a river. This often comes to my mind,—'And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.'

As I read of the many blessings that are bestowed on the destitute, my heart is led to praise the Lord. He ever stands ready to provide for all his waiting ones. Not one will be turn empty away. There is enough for all, and enough forevermore. Cheer up, ye afflicted ones. Jesus is soon coming to redeem all his people. Then the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, and sighing and sorrow shall flee away. Let us, dear brethren and sisters, strive to be living christians, ready to follow in the footsteps of our Master. May our Father in heaven bless those who are laboring in his cause, and give them strength sufficient for their day. O may the kingdom soon come, is the prayer of your sister in Christ."

Bro. W. F. Fahnestock writes:—"Often have I desired to write a few words of encouragement for the Crisis, but my depressed feelings and constant excruciating pain would not permit me to collect my thoughts sufficiently to write a half page. I was so weak at one time that my physician forbade any person to read a word to me, and told me, if possible, I should not think; yet, thanks be to Him who doeth all things well, within the past week my improvement has been wonderful. I almost fear to believe. Last night was the first night in two years that I have rested quietly in my bed. I sincerely hope the turn things have taken may be permanent, and that I may yet be of some use in the Master's cause: for I am not my own. I am bought with a price, even the precious blood of Jesus.

> "Lord, I am thine, entirely thine,
> Pu'chased and bought by blood divine;
> Thine will I live, thine will I die,
> Be thine through all eternity."

Yes, yes, I am dead to the world and all its follies, and although a sick, feeble mortal, feel alive to Christ and the interest of this blessed hope, which has carried me, the past thirty years, safely through the trials and persecutions which have caused me bitter anguish of heart, yet I have never yielded one jot or one tittle.

We see the glorious triumph, not far off, it just at the door. A few fleeting months y. Have we not reason for joy and rejoicing, even in tribulation and anguish? [illegible]sed be his holy name who has begotten [illegible] this living hope through our Lord [illegible] Christ."

Bro. J. J. Smith writes:—"The Lord has planted his footsteps in our midst. On the 17th of November a hurricane of unusual violence passed over Tenn., Ga., and Ala., from south-west to north-east. Before twelve o'clock the same night we had another from north-west to south-east. In many places large forests were prostrated, fences and houses blown to pieces. On the 3d inst., in the night, we had one of still greater violence, from the south-west, which in many places prostrated whole forests, unroofing and blowing away newly and strongly built houses, killing and wounding many persons. The violence of these storms was widespread, but interspersed with currents here and there of much greater violence. One of these currents passed south-east of me, within forty rods of my residence. Another going north-east, passed about half a mile south-east of my house. Old logs in the forest were blown from their beds.

It is said that Coal City, recently reared up in a forest of heavy timbers, was in part blown away and crushed under the falling timbers. It is remarkable that some of these currents ran in a zig-zag course from north-east to north-west, and back again."

Bro. W. C. Oakes writes:—"I acknowledge the receipt of a package of tracts, which I have tried to distribute to the glory of God. I also received a pamphlet from some one, written by S. Hall. Many thanks to the giver. I am trying to be an overcomer through the blood of the Lamb and the word of my testimony. I am looking for the establishment of the everlasting kingdom under the whole heaven.

> "Pilgrim, cheer thee! land is nearing."

A few more waves, a few more surges of time's mighty ocean, and we'll be piloted into port by the great Captain of our salvation. What a shout will go up from that great company that no man can number. Saved, saved forever. My heart says, Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

> 'Christian, cheer! the land is nearing;
> Still be hopeful, nothing fearing;
> Soon in majesty appearing,
> You'll behold the Lamb once slain.
> Oh how joyful then to hear him,
> While all nations shall revere him,
> Saying to his flock who fear him,
> 'I have come on earth to reign.'"

Bro. P. H. Lawrence writes:—"For long years I have loved the blessed hope of the return of Christ in his promised glory. It has been as the shadow of a great rock in this weary land. Blessed be God, it never seemed more precious than it does this 16th day of Dec., 1873. I know, dear ones, as well as a thing can be known by prophecy and history, that the true church is now standing upon the position bordering hard upon millennial glory. Earth's groan will soon cease, and Eden once more glow from the rising to the setting sun. Immortality shall soon be ours through the love and gift of Him who brought it to light through the gospel. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

MINUTES

Of the Quarterly Session of the Advent Christian Conference.

Held at Wallace Station, Steuben Co., N. Y., Dec. 6th, 1873.

The ministers present at this meeting were Elders E. C. Cowles, J. T. Ongley, A. H. Briggs, J. W. Taylor, and A. C. Newell. Unordained, James H. Sawyer.

The meeting commenced per appointment Friday evening. Preaching by Eld. J. T. Ongley. Saturday P. M., preachnig by Eld. J. W. Taylor, followed by a business session. Conference received a letter from Eld. C. F. Sweet, with a request to join the Conference, which was granted by a unanimous vote. Bro. James H. Sawyer was also received into Conference as an unordained minister.

As a whole, it was truly a good meeting. The spirit of love and unity seemed to fill each heart; and the prayers and exhortations in the love-feast and conference meetings were of a soul-cheering character. The preaching was all good, and well adapted to the occasion.

We hope to meet ere long in a world redeemed by a Savior's blood, where partings will be unknown.

J. W. Taylor, Secretary.

Correction.—In the article "False Theology," by "W. C. O.", Dec. 31st, the last sentence should read—"O the blessing that is upon those who are found giving the household (church) meat (truth adapted to this generation) in due season."

TRUTH AND INFIDELITY.

No observer can fail to see that society is rapidly dividing itself into two parties—Christians and infidels. The less important lines are being obliterated. The more trivial distinctions are being wiped out. The friends of the incarnate God on one side, holding up the crimson banner of the atonement, and unbelievers in God's Word and God's Son on the other, shouting, "Abolish the Sabbath, down with the church, bury the Bible." These are the great divisions into which all the elements of society are resolving themselves. The process of division is working in the church, and out of it.

The elements are mustering for the terrible conflict of modern times, between truth and infidelity. On one side, God; on the other side, Atheism. The Atheist may disavow the name, and refuse to wear the old garb in which it walked in the past, but it is the same thing, and tends to the same result. Our fight is with Atheism, whether preached by Mr. Frothingham in New York, promulgated by Tyndall on the platform, or sent out from the press by the authors of our age. The conflict is not with Unitarianism. That died long ago, and has gone to seed. Atheism, its hell-born child, is taking its place. The contest is not with Catholicism. That has been struck with death in Rome. Henceforth, its effort will be to live. It is with Atheism that the gospel has to contend—Atheism that oozes out of Romanism, out of Rationalism, out of Spiritualism, the most debauched and stupid of all heresies.

And grand must be the faith that shall contend with this foe. Sublime the courage that is needed to meet such an enemy. It is a faith that is only born of God, in sweet union with Christ. It is courage which is based on the divine assurances of the eternal Word of God.—Christian Era.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Dec. 26. At 5 o'clock, this morning, the steamer Gipsey Queen struck the wreck of a sunken lighter in the river Tyne, and sunk in five minutes. There were between fifty and sixty workmen on board. Twenty were rescued. The remainder, thirty or forty men, were drowned.

The steamship Elbe, from London for Hamburg, has been lost at sea, and thirty-two people perished.

The political situation in Madrid is very serious. It is expected that, in the reconstruction of the Cortes, the Castelar Government will be defeated by about ten votes, and that Serrano will most likely assume the executive.

A military movement in favor of President Castelar's policy is imminent. Detachments of Government troops, to the number of 24,000, are now collected in the city, and great excitement prevails.

The Government has captured fort Calvario at Cartagena, at the point of the bayonet. Their loss was trifling.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A Most Astounding Record.—John Rogers, superintendent of the city prison (better known as the Tombs), has politely furnished us for publication his statistical record of crime in the city of Boston, as gathered from the records of his office. It is a most remarkable exhibit, presenting as it does a record of most heinous offences, such as was never known before in the history of the city. From other sources we have record evidence that during the year 1873 more fraud and corruption in high places were discovered than were ever unveiled before during any one year of the century; and the figures embraced in this report of the superintendent of our city prison clearly indicate that the current of abominations and wickedness among the people of Boston is as strong and rapid as in any other city of the Union.—Boston Herald.

San Francisco, Dec. 28. Fourteen of the notorious Vasquez's gang, all armed, entered Kingston, Fresno County, last night, captured and bound about forty citizens, and then robbed them and the stores in which they were, getting about $1000 in money and a large quantity of jewelry and ribbons. Other citizens opened fire on the robbers, who returned it, but were obliged to retreat. Vasquez himself had four revolvers on his person. Pursuit was given and one of the desperadoes captured. A large force is in pursuit of the others.

Pork Packing.—Since Nov. 1st, St. Louis has packed almost 360,000 hogs, and Chicago over 990,000. Chicago increases almost a half from last year. Cincinnati has slain 460,000.

Will God bless under the gospel what he cursed under the law? J. C.

The Bishops of France have a curious notion of their mission as the ministers of the Prince of Peace. Their recent pastorals have, in several instances, been so bitterly hostile to Germany, that Government has made complaint to France. Much of the blind hatred of Germany, which led to the war of 1870, was planted and nourished by the clergy, and this was shown especially in the aristocratic classes. Yet the aristocracy, though ready to fight was not willing to learn to fight. "It were better," it was said, according to a letter of Merimee, in 1867, "to leave such vulgar methods to the Prussians." The two chief products of the clerical teaching were insolent pride and stubborn ignorance.—N. Y. Times.

The Year Abroad.—Within the space of twelve months, events now occur so rapidly that formerly they would have formed the record of a generation. It is less easy to enumerate them than to note their effects. Some, however, have been of such moment as to demand special mention, if only to mark the magnitude of the changes that the world has witnessed, and to recall how much may be done in one year in altering the political aspect of the nations.

Chicago, Dec. 31. Two brothers named Hopper quarreled with Solomon Silkwood and William Husan Christmas day at Carolton. On Monday night the Hoppers visited Silkwood and Husan at their home in Walkerville, and finding the two men in the road, shot at them, killing Husan and dangerously wounding Silkwood. The desperadoes were arrested.

Jersey City, Jan. 2. A man employed at Wheelson's sugar house, here, became entangled in the machinery, at noon. His body was drawn in, and his arm and leg torn from their sockets.

In Brief.

— A dispatch from Richmond, Va., says that Col. G. A. Spaulding, a well-known member of the bar, was found dead in the County Court room, having been struck on the back of his head by some blunt instrument. There was no evidence of any struggle having taken place.

— Earl Russell conceives that the time has come when the Roman Catholic church disclaims equality, and will be satisfied with nothing but ascendancy.

— Scarlet fever of a very malignant type is prevalent in Biddeford, Maine. There are said to be two hundred cases. Two of the largest city primary schools numbered but twenty-four pupils on Saturday.

— The public debt of France is about $4,819,810,000 in American gold—or twice as much as ours.

— It is said that the people who went down in the Ville du Havre were worth twenty millions of dollars.

— The resignation of Gen. Sickles, the United States Minister, has been officially accepted.

— William B. Astor's health is reported very feeble. He is nearly eighty, and cannot long survive. His will disposes of property worth over sixty millions. Poor man!

— A boy named John Williams broke through the ice while skating on the Merrimack river above Pawtucket bridge, Lowell, yesterday and was drowned.

— A mob, composed partly of women in men's clothing, poured kerosene oil on the house of Mrs. Stamper of Mount Sterling, Ky., recently, and set it on fire, and when she came out they shot her dead.

Notices.

Another Impostor.

A young man recently called on Bro. Field, Jeffersonville, Ind., representing himself as the nephew of Bro. H. Munger, and soliciting aid to pay traveling expenses. He represented himself as a book agent, and as preparing for the ministry. He requested Bro. F to refer him to some Brn. in Cincinnati. He did so, and the young man went to those Brn. and obtained money of them under false pretences, contradicting his first statement to Bro. F. Bro. Munger says he knows nothing about him. Has no such nephew.

We have recently had a number of such cases. In these times of lying and robbery, such traveling strangers, who ask for money without an equivalent, should not be trusted a moment, for it is indirectly encouraging deception and fraud. Brethren, beware of them. J. C.

Protracted Meeting.—A protracted meeting will commence in Chelsea, Mass., Tuesday evening, Jan. 13th, and continue evenings as long as the interest may seem to demand. Bro. E. A. Stockman is expected to be present. J. Couch.

Hoosick Valley Conference.—A quarterly session of the Hoosick Valley Conference will be held in Hebron, N. Y., commencing Jan. 22nd, and hold over the following Sunday. We hope to see a large gathering of the friends of Jesus at this meeting. Let there be delegates sent from the churches and localities within the bounds of this conference. In the meantime, let much prayer go up to God that his work may be revived in Hebron. There will be teams at the R. R. station at Rupert in the afternoon to take all who come to the meeting to place of the Conference, free of charge.

A. W. Sibley, President.
A. P. Bump, Secretary.

Feeling it duty to feed the scattered flock, and warn men to prepare for coming judgment, we have decided to travel and labor as the door may open, and brethren may desire. Our first meeting will be at Franklin, N. H., evening, Jan. 26th. So any wishing to have protracted or evening meetings can address us at that place to that date. From F. we have thought to go into the upper part of this State, and Vermont; but we will calculate to go where the door is open, and the good Lord leads, and stop as long as duty seems to require.

J. G. Smith
John Parsons.

Acknowledgments.—For Sr. L. B. Weaver, from a Friend, $1 50.

For the Poor.—From Mrs. M. L. R., $2.00.
Flora S Davis, $5 00.
For Eld. Geo. Thomson, from "R," $10.00.
For Mary I. Herron, from "C," $2.50.

Geo. T. Adams.

Connecticut Conference.—The next Quarterly Session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held at Yalesville, commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 21st, and continue over the following Sunday. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of preachers and delegates at this meeting. It is proposed to attend to the business matters of the Conf. on Thursday, so that the rest of the time may be given to devotional exercises.

G. L. White, Sec.

The third Quarterly Meeting of the Eastern District of Wisconsin will be held with the church at Cassell Prairie, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 13th, 1874, and continue over Lord's day. We hope to see a large gathering of the saints at this meeting. Let us come with hearts full of the love of God. We expect there will be several of the preaching brethren present to assist in preaching the Word. E. P. Graves.

There will be a meeting of days in Garland, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan 22nd, and continue as long as thought best. A general invitation is given to ministers and lay members to attend this meeting, to unite in the work of God for the salvation of souls. Brn. and Srs. will call on Abner Millet. Provision will be made for all. Per order of the church, H. B. Sevey.

☞ Free return passes will be given.

Having studied my duty, in the light of the "blessed Word" and past providences, I feel to place myself in the channel of God's opportunities to be moved in any direction, by his revealed will, through his children. Any church that would like to have me visit them, will please address as soon as convenient, Eld. Franklin Douglas, 347 W. 36th St., New York City.

Protracted Meeting.—A protracted meeting will be held in "Union Hall," Portland, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 15th, and continue as long as the interest may seem to demand. Bro. H. C. Smith, of New York, and others, are expected to be present.

For the church, H. C. Freeman.

The third Q. M. for the Southern District of Wisconsin will be held at Fenimore, commencing Friday evening, Jan. 16th, 1874, and holding over Lord's day. A general attendance of preachers and brethren is expected. Let all come praying, and we may be sure of a blessing.

N. A. Hitchcock.
George Howard.

Protracted Meeting.—A series of meetings will commence at Chester, Vt., in Cheese Factory Hall, on Saturday evening, Jan. 17th, and continue as long as duty may require. Friends of truth from abroad are invited to come and help Bro. Boutell of Chelsea, Mass., and others, are expected to preach the word. H. F. Carpenter.

Rockbridge, O.—I expect to visit the church in Rockbridge, Ohio, on Wednesday, Jan. 28th, and remain one week, and preach Jesus and the resurrection. I expect also, if the Lord will, in the future to visit them once in eight weeks, and minister to them in spiritual things.

Frank Burr, Pastor.

To the Christian and Advent Christian Conferences of Iowa, Greeting.—At the annual meeting of the Christian Conference, held at New Hartford, Iowa, in June last, a proposition was presented to the conference; and a delegation was appointed to present said proposition to the Advent Christian Conference, for the purpose of harmonizing all believers in the coming kingdom, and also to effect an organization of a General Union State Conference. The above named proposition was presented at the annual conference of the A. C. Conference, and the following minutes will show with what result:—

"The committee of the Christian and the Advent Christian Conference of Iowa, in convention assembled, do agree to carry out the spirit of the proposition of the Christian Conference with the amendment of the A. C. Conference. And to carry forward this work, we chose C. C. Ramsay, J. Ridley, and E. W. Huson, to notify the brethren in the south part of the State of our intention, and invite them to meet us in convention, at Bell Plain, for the purpose of organizing a General Union State Conference, of the Christian and Advent Christian Conferences of Iowa, and to locate the bounds of the sub conferences, the time of the meeting to be decided by the above committee."

J. Ridley.

Pursuant to the above, the committee make the following call. There will be a meeting of delegates from the Christian and Advent Christian Conferences of the State of Iowa, for the purpose of organizing a General Union State Conference, and for the transaction of such business as may come before the meeting; to be holden at Bell Plain, Benton Co., Iowa, commencing Jan. 8th, 1874, and holding over the following Lord's day. It is the earnest desire of many that this meeting be represented by every conference in the State. Let there be a general rally, and come with hearts full of love and unity, and then we shall be prepared to labor for the good of the cause, and shall not be ashamed of our work when it is done. C. C. Ramsay, per order of Com.

Rise of Price.

"History of the Advent Message." $3.00 sold by subscription. Our proposition to get out a "history of the Second Advent Message—doctrine and people" was an experiment to learn what interest there is in the body for such a work; and by that to determine duty about getting it out. We put the price for the first thousand at $2.50, after that $3.00. Thus inducing subscriptions at the bare cost, or perhaps less, that it might finally prove a success. The call has met with a hearty response, with many words of encouragement from our chief ministers also.

Many have urged us to add portraits of such of our "pioneers" as can be obtained. After much thought and some counsel, we have concluded to add some fifteen or twenty portraits, and to make other additions to the work beyond what we had intended, at a considerable expense, which will make it a work to well compare with four dollar books.

All who shall have subscribed before Jan. 10th, 1874, will be supplied at $2.50. After that we begin for a thousand more; or, all who subscribe before July 10th, shall have them at $3.00 each. We are now preparing the work, and hope to have it ready to deliver in July next. No money called for until the book is ready.

Yarmouth, Me. I. C. Wellcome.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

OUR LOVED ONE IS GONE!

GEO. E. LEE.

O death! so cruel! thou hast laid
Our fond and cherished, low
Beneath the deep and dark'ning shade,
Beneath cold winter's snow.
No more upon that form we gaze,
No more that voice we hear;
Those songs of melody and praise
No more our hearts will cheer.

O thou, our Father, be our Shield,
Our comfort, and our all;
Help us to thee our wills to yield,
And in submission fall.
In thee our only hope depends
For strength to bear our woes;
We look to thee for grace that lends
In sorrow, sweet repose.

We deeply feel our earthly loss
Of this, our darling child;
Help us to meekly bear the cross,
And thus be reconciled.
We know we've bade the last farewell
To her we loved so dear;
But may we meet, and with thee dwell,
Where none shall shed a tear.

Our precious Savior comfort sends
To those who mourn and weep;
In him all future life depends
For loved ones now asleep;
"My peace," he saith, "I leave with you,
My comfort freely give;
And all the faithful, just, and true,
With me shall ever live."

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 16th, 1873.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT TO THE UNDER SHEPHERDS.

W. KELLAWAY.

Dear under shepherds, bishops of the flock of God, leaders of the saints into righteousness, what a charge is committed to you! What a dignity of service is yours! You are called by the great, the good, the Chief Shepherd, to bless, and edify, and comfort his body the church. O great exaltation for frail, faulty man! High honor, indeed, for a son of Adam! And yet this deputyship is yours. You are the chosen, the select of Heaven for this distinguished privilege. Rejoice for such a calling; and be humble, that you lose not the gift of His grace.

It has been in my heart to write you words of cheer to hearten you in the conflict of this evil age and world. May my poor words, meant for your strengthening, be a tonic blessing to you.

The condition of the flock to-day is one that oftentimes perplexes thee, dear faithful pastor. You see one falling out of the ranks here, and another there, indisposed by the heat of the day, wanting in the hour of trial. You see others who should be satisfied to feed in the green pastures of God's Word, and who should find its sweet tender grass palatable and wholesome, going away after this and that rank herb which the world offers, instead of the provision of God. And you know of others who have left the narrow way of self-denial,—the sheep-path of the church,—to wander into side paths, only to be torn by the wolf, and left bleeding and dying. Ah, what sights you have seen! What sad experiences are thine! Enough, my brother in labor, to wring tears of pain from thy manly, christian heart. O, the folly of some of the sheep! their silliness! their simplicity! The enemy has had easy work with them. In an hour of temptation all thy labor has been destroyed, all thy care thwarted. And thou, poor brokenhearted laborer, hast wept floods of grief. Alas, for the discouragement! How sharp the blow! How prostrating the experience! This is the sad, dark part of thy life of labor.

But let us consider the other side. There are, whom thou knowest, who were once vile and vicious, who are now virtuous and exemplary. They were ungodly wretches; they are now godly in Christ Jesus. They were scoffers; now they are worshipers. They were dark and benighted; now they are light in the Lord. They were lost in wretchedness; now they rejoice in the joy of restoration and divine favor. They were without faith; but now they have faith standing in God. They were without God in the world; but now they know God, and know him as their Savior. They had no hope beyond this troubled life; but now they have hope of the life immortal. Happy souls! under cover of the name of Jesus! joined in one Spirit to the Lord! full of faith! filled with comfort! exceeding joyful! kept by the peace of God in heavenly serenity! loving all the brethren! and praying day and night for the dear church! laboring also for the recovery of the brutish! And all this alteration, this renewal, has been brought about by your instrumentality. A single word spoken in season, a simple tear from thy loving eyes, a rebuke uttered meekly in the fear of God, led the sinner to ponder the path of his feet and confess and forsake his sins. And now that miserable reprobate is thy dear, dear brother,—heir with thee of the grace of life! Ah! with thee shall he meet in the glory. With you, before the throne, to your exceeding joy, shall he stand and sing the new song of the conqueror. In the day of Christ he shall be your crown of rejoicing. You shall look upon his then beautiful face, lit with such glory as covered your Savior's face on Tabor; you shall hear his gushes of rapturous delight as he joins in the universal song; and you shall reflect with infinite delight, "I led that wanderer to acquaintance with God. I brought him to Jesus."

Toil on, then, worn brother, doubling thy diligence. Fight on, good leader, be bravest of the brave. Pray on, thou Elijah; be mighty in faith and importunity. Be a pattern, an example, a model, for all committed to thy charge. The inclusive exhortation is, Live Christ. Say with Paul, and truly, "For me to live is Christ." And what is it to live Christ? It is to obey the Father—to have his commendation—to enjoy the testimony of a good conscience. It is to love those who do the will of God,—to minister to them. It is to labor hard in every good word and work to reconcile men to God. It is to be self-denying, self-abasing, self-sacrificing. It is to be most serene when most assaulted,—it is to be, like Jesus, a good shepherd.

"And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." This is your encouragement: to have the honor that cometh from God,—to be applauded by Him whose applause is neither flattery nor vanity. Ah, beloved, you know the day of reward. You understand what you are to receive. You are to be brought before the Chief Shepherd, who will then be a King upon his throne. Your children, begotten in faith and hope and righteousness, are to accompany you. Together you are to be presented before the presence of his glory. The King will smile. His voice will speak comfortably unto you. His love and approbation and plaudits shall go to your poor heart, and cause thrill after thrill of joy; but words cannot tell the bliss. And there, before the throne, too glad to sing, crying for very joy,—for though there will be no tears of sorrow in the kingdom, I firmly believe there will be many tears of joy, you shall bless the Great Shepherd of the sheep for giving you such a charge, so productive of joy to the laborer. And you will then and there lay down your charge and deliver up the result to your dear Lord. And think you eternity shall ever efface the memory of thy Lord's greeting? Never; but it shall be reproduced as a source of constant joy. Amen.

O, blessed be God for a pastor's crook and staff! O, strive to bring in a goodly number of sheep, my brother elder, for the pastures of the land flowing with milk and honey.

But, O ye lazy, fat, beastial pastors, with the name of shepherds, but no love for the shepherd or the sheep,—with concern only for the wool of the flock,—you shall hear that terrible denouncement, "Wicked and slothful servant!" and—but who can tell the mingled shame and condemnation and despair of that hour! Repent, and lose no time; for the Chief Shepherd is at hand!

And ye faithful and beloved, I, your least and least-worthy of brethren, will strive by grace to joy with you in the day of crown giving and crown receiving. And now, I pray, the blessing of our Father be upon you. The blessing of the Son abide with you. The blessing of the Holy Spirit dispose and strengthen you to all goodness. The blessing of the fellowship of saints encourage you. The blessing of life everlasting in the kingdom of God with eternal glory be your final portion. So prays in prayer your brother in Jesus.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Stockwell.

To the dear saints scattered abroad, greeting: Dear brethren and sisters,—I thought I would write you a few lines through the Crisis, to let you know how I am, and where I am. I am still a pilgrim and stranger, looking for and loving the appearing of our Savior. I am seventy-five years old. My wife and four children are in the grave, asleep in Jesus. I have yet one son, who loves Jesus, but is far away in Kansas, and not able to help me at present. Sixteen years ago I was burned out, and had nothing left but one suit of clothes and my Bible. Since then I have not tried to lay up any treasure on earth. Whatever I have earned more than my necessary expenses I have put into the treasury of the Lord.

A year ago last July I was at work for a brother at haying in Whitefield, N. H., and fell from a load of hay and broke my right hip. I have not been able to walk a step without crutches since, and as I had nothing to fall back upon, I had soon to call on the town for help, and they sent me to the Coos county Poor Farm, in N. H., where I have been since a year ago the 7th of Nov. last. Six weeks ago last Friday I met with another accident. A crazy man pushed me down a long flight of stairs, and broke my left arm at the elbow, and cracked the bone above and below the elbow, and otherwise severely injured me. I have had a doctor eight times to dress my wounds. They are doing well now. I am beginning to use my hand a little, but cannot dress, undress, or get on or off the bed alone. I have been taken good care of since I was hurt.

I have not seen but one brother or sister since I have been here. I have none of like precious faith to associate with; but I have the Crisis and Bible Banner to comfort me, which come free. So I have nothing to complain of. Tribulation is a part of our legacy. I think it will pay well, for it is written, "Our light afflictions . . . work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." I have been learning what the Psalmist meant when he spake of passing through the valley of Baca and making it a well.

I should be glad to receive a few lines from any brother or sister who may read this, and should like to have any brother or sister call on me who may pass this way. Please remember me in your prayers.

From Bro. E. C. Pride.

I will write a few lines for publication in your most excellent paper, in relation to the work of the Lord with us. The Holy Spirit is our Comforter while alone here as pilgrims and strangers. God's Word has been a lamp to our feet, and a light to our pathway. We have been struggling along for some five years past, without any pastor to guide our feet; but thanks be to God, we have had his holy Word, which is able to make us wise unto salvation if we only believe and obey it. I have been led many times to acknowledge his special blessings in many ways; one of which is the object of this letter. Our little daughter was taken suddenly and dangerously ill last spring; so ill that our family doctor on his arrival pronounced her case hopeless.

O the anguish of that moment! To think that our darling must be snatched from us and laid in the cold grave was heart-rending indeed. Having a little faith, my companion and myself besought the Lord that he would spare her to us, and, if in accordance with his holy will, that he would bless the means used for her recovery. And after days and nights of weary watching, our prayer was answered. Thanks be to God's holy name! Our child is yet alive, and a blessing and comfort to us.

This, and other circumstances similar, have tended greatly to strengthen my faith. I firmly believe that all things work together for the good of those who love and serve God. I have written these lines hoping that the name of God may be glorified thereby, and that some poor soul may be comforted and strengthened in the Lord. His ways are wonderful. Glory to his name forevermore. Asking that all God's people will pray for me and mine, I remain sincerely your brother in Christ, with love to you all, and in hope of the soon coming kingdom.

Augusta, Wis.

From Bro. E. Daggett.

I noticed in the Crisis of Dec. 3d a statement of the failure of crops and the wants of the farming community of this region, which is very true. I have not heard of any dying from want, although it may be the case. There has been an appeal made by the citizens of Sibley for aid for the destitute of this county. If what has been and what probably will be sent is properly distributed, I think there need not be much suffering. But a very little of the third and fourth grades of clothing is dealt out; and that very sparingly, and the provision in like manner. I could not believe it if I had not seen it myself. I heard that a woman who had five children, came there four or five miles to get flour, and they agreed to let her have twenty-five pounds, when they had two or three wagon loads on hand.

We came to this county in July, 1872, too late to raise anything; and this year had almost a total failure of crops; so we have neither bread nor seed. I am over fifty-four years old. I left Wisconsin to get away from a Catholic society. I lived there about twenty-three years. I have taken the Crisis over twelve years. I hardly know how to do without it; but I am in debt for it since last July, and I do not expect to be able to pay any more until next fall. I believe the Lord will provide some way for us. There are over twenty-five tons of coal in Sibley now donated, and I have been there three times to get some, but cannot get any. I expect to be compelled to draw wood thirty miles without feed for my team, there being no houses on the road for twenty miles. Rather hard for old crippled folks.

I am twelve miles from Sibley, and would go twenty miles to hear a good Bible sermon; but I do not know as I ever shall hear another, till our Deliverer comes.

It don't seem to me that we shall starve to death in Iowa, but at present I don't know where our support is coming from. I must bid you all farewell for this time. Remember us in your happy seasons.

Sibley, Osceola Co., Ia.

From Bro. E. A. Stockman.

It may help to quicken the courage of the scattered soldiery of Christ, in the broad and fiercely contested field, to know that God giveth the victory to the struggling band in Manchester, N. H. A revival spirit has pervaded our meetings for several weeks. Nearly a score have turned to the Lord. At nearly every assembling some present themselves for prayers. So many of the church as are willing to leave the world and follow Christ are greatly blessed.

O that Adventists would rise above worldly blandishments, pleasures and gains, and, losing sight of collateral dogmas, apply themselves in all the forces and agencies which our glorious faith supplies, to immediate, personal, entire preparation to receive and crown the coming King, and to gather to his standard as many of the perishing as possible, before the coronation-day dawns. How the social, political and moral atmosphere thickens with evidences of Christ at the doors. Amen, even so, come quickly.

DRAWING A CONGREGATION.

A. DAMON.

The days in which we live are indeed fraught with perils The gospel minister in these times, who attempts to adapt himself to the wants and full demands of the people, will find that he has assumed a position that will indeed prove difficult to fill. No two churches, nor scarcely two persons, want the same kind of preachers; and I doubt much if an angel from heaven could satisfy the cravings of men in this direction. There is such an unrest, such a thirst for a variety, and an itching for something new; and such an unsettled condition of mind, like drift wood tossed upon the waves of the ocean, that firmness of character, and deep-toned piety in the heart, have in a great measure disappeared.

But what is the cause of this? Is it not in part owing to the way our churches have been brought up? To-day Bro. A. will preach; next Sunday Bro. B., Tuesday evening Bro. C., and so on week after week, night after night; and the first inquiry is, Is he smart? is he systematic? can he make his points, and defend them? is he eloquent? Can he draw a large congregation? Can he interest the intelligent classes? We have some very nice people in our place, and we want a man that can interest them. If we can get some smart man, Mr. A. and B. say they will pay something for the support of our meeting. May not this be seeking first the money, and the honor, and the ears? Why don't people ask if these men are good? Why don't they inquire if they are filled with the Holy Spirit? and if they think they are not, let the church pray that they may be, and not go and tell how dry they are, and stay at home because they don't carry every thing by storm the first time they go into a place. It is enough to make any preacher feel blue to go into these religious icebergs where there is no life, nor love for one another, and but little if any, for the truth. They are like the man that is drunk, and thinks everybody else is too.

Who knows but what that preacher has had to work with his hands six days in the week, and has traveled on foot some five or ten miles to his appointment? Who is to blame for all this? Who considers the poor and needy? Who in their sympathy put themselves in other men's circumstances, and do as they would be done by. Let there be a gospel reformation in the churches; let the peace of God rule in every heart by the Holy Spirit; let there be a thorough cleansing out of this carnal disposition, and Bible sanctification take its place; then this fault-finding and dyspeptic state of the church will disappear.

A minister once went to the meeting-house to preach, and took his seat as usual in the desk, but could not preach, and sat and wept. He was asked why he did not preach? "Because," said he, "I have lost my prayer book." Said one to another, "I did not know that he had one." "Ah," says he, "You are my prayer book." The church had ceased praying for their preacher. Is not this the case with many nowadays? But this church went to praying for the preacher, and the result was, a mighty work of God broke out, and the preacher had something to preach, and the Spirit to help him.

Now a preacher that goes into a place to hold meetings has to spend a week or more in laboring to get the church into working order, and by that time, he has to go home, and go to work to get bread for his family. All he gets for his labor, from men, is the complaint, "He had no business to have gone away so soon, he ought to have more faith." I have heard some people talk faith, but when their faith was tested, they found that they had not got so much as they supposed. Others have been very forward in telling how good it was to trust in God; but when the potato crop was small, and corn did not grow, and their cattle died, and some defaulter ran off with their money they had in the bank, they began to talk about coming to want, and their faith seemed to stop at once. When such persons are brought where they do not know where the next meal is coming from, and go and cry in the ears of the Most High, and he feeds them, then they can tell you a true story of trust.

But, says one, The preachers are to blame for this transient way of labor. Indeed, where is the gospel minister who would be so immodest as to force himself upon a church, and say, You must have me for your pastor, and you must let me preach to you all the time? Says another, We have always wanted a pastor, but can't get one. Well, first, whom do you want? Well, we want Bro. —— for he is smart and very refined in his manners, and he is careful not to say anything about the sins of the age, and he is very smooth in his words, and is sure not to offend any. And he goes in for concerts, and picnics, and plays croquet, and approves of social entertainments. Others say, We want the best there is. One that can preach a great deal of prophecy, and is educated in Greek and Hebrew; and more than this, if we can't have this kind we won't have any.

Others say, We will accept of such as are more common, for we are not able to have the best. Does it take more to support these, than it does the common class? Why? will some one answer?

Second. How do you want them? If we have a pastor, we expect he will attend all the prayer-meetings through the week, and visit the church often, preach twice or three times Sunday; and, if he has a trade, why, of course we expect he will work at that, and earn most of his living; but he must preach smart and be active, or else we will not keep him. He must not live as well as the church, of course; and if his wife should happen to have a washing machine, or a carpet, or hire her washing done, and uses a pound of butter a week, why how extravagant she is; and if she should happen to call to one house more than another, then what? Those that know what may answer.

There are preachers and pastors that are able men, and zealous too. Why don't they come to our place more then? says one. How do you use them when they do come? Do you give them a "God bless you," and a "Come again when you can make it convenient?" Perhaps it may be more convenient for them to stay at home and work awhile, or go where they can get something to pay their fare home, and have something for their family to eat after they get there. Then that church wonders why the preacher don't come there now.

The most of our preachers are laboring men, and nearly all are mechanics. You ask, Why do so many live in such and such places? Because in those places they can get employment; but in every place they cannot. If preachers must work a part or all of the time, I think it is reasonable that they should live where they can get their kind of work to do. No doubt many of these preachers would abandon their work, and devote their whole time to the ministry, if the church would do their duty. Is this not so brethren? I think that many will answer in the affirmative. A church committee once said to a preacher, If you will come and preach for us, we will give you a paint brush, and you shall have all the work you can do. Is not that quite inviting for a painter? They have got a man now that has no trade, and how he fares, God knows I don't. And that church may represent some $50,000.

Dear brethren in Christ, I am writing out my thoughts on this subject. I have no hostile feelings in my heart toward any who may be guilty of these things, but rather pity. If ever I have felt divinely impressed to write for "our paper," it is now. Do we believe that Jesus is coming soon? If so, Heaven help us to show it by our works. The time has come when every man should be at his post. No time to lose, and if any have not done their duty in the past, it is now that you have an opportunity to redeem the time, for the days are evil.

In addition to what I have written, I have the following sensible remarks, taken from the Advance:

DRAWING CONGREGATIONS.

A very unreasonable notion prevails to some extent in the churches, which calls for a word of animadversion. It is this—that the chief business of a minister of the gospel is to draw a congregation. No matter what his surroundings may be, whether or not there are plenty of other churches in the town, whether or not the people are generally inclined to church-going, nor whether the members are carefully drawing with him, or scattering abroad; the one essential, indispensable requisite and qualification in him is, that he draws a congregation. If he fails to do this, it is evident that he is not fit for the place; it is even preposterous to think of employing him, however well furnished he may be intellectually and religiously to instruct and edify the people.

Of course, a minister must do his part in gathering and holding a congregation. But not one in a hundred, or five hundred, has such a measure of eloquence and personal magnetism as to be able to draw and maintain a congregation, when the church itself or a conspicuous part of it, fails to co-operate with him.

According to Conybeare and Howson, "in every church established by St. Paul, there sprang up a schismatic party, opposed to his teaching, and hostile to his person." That was no fault of his, surely; any more than it was of the Master, that "many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

And it may be no fault of the minister, now, that he incurs the opposition and hostility of some portion of his people.

In her "Recollections of Mary Lyon," Miss Fisk testifies that "she often said to us: 'Young Ladies, when I speak to you, I depend much more upon the inspiration of your countenances than on my preparation.' It is added by Miss F., as I fear it could not be by some ministers, "That inspiration was fully given her, in those exercises."

The duties of pastor and people, and their influence upon each other, are reciprocal; and no minister can succeed who does not receive the sympathy and co-operation of his members, in the great work of building up the kingdom of God. If the place or the work is a difficult one, so much the more need of all standing together, and bearing one another's burdens, instead of casting it all upon one, because he happens to be the leader, and to stand in the most conspicuous place. The very men who complain most loudly of ministers—the business men of a community—often find it difficult to draw all the customers and business they would like. I can see some of them every day, waiting and looking, almost impatiently, for people to come and buy their excellent goods, of which they have an abundant supply on hand. Not, of course, because they are not smart men, and capable of doing a great deal more business than they do, but because the circumstances are against them. There are many competitors, and people very strangely, perversely, perhaps, choose to trade somewhere else, and with somebody else, rather than with them. So they find it uphill work to draw customers, against the natural and popular current, and the strong competition.

A little Christian common sense would show men the unreasonableness of many of their demands upon ministers, and of their complaints against them. But, somehow or other, it often happens that men of great shrewdness and tact in business seem to have skill, in religious matters, only to baffle and hinder all true success. Instead of considering your minister to provoke him to discouragement and despair, why not try the other method occasionally, recommended by the Apostle, and consider him "to provoke unto love and good works."

WHAT THOU WILT.

Lord, what thou wilt! Let that still overtake me,
'Tis always best;
Should all things earthly vanish or forsake me,
Hope fills my breast.
What thou hast kindly been thus far bestowing,
It was a loan;
Within thy hand at once I lay it, knowing
It is thine own.
Lord, what thou wilt!

Lord, as thou wilt! So may it still befall me,
For I am thine.
Take all away, from my possessions call me,
Be thou but mine!
It is not hard; the vain things from me drifting
Waken no grief,
When thou the load so helpfully art lifting,
To bring relief.
Lord, as thou wilt.

Long as thou wilt. Patient the lot sustaining
Thou dost ordain;
Thou'lt neither hear me asking nor complaining,
Whate'er the pain.
I know by thee I ne'er shall be forsaken;
I'll still hold on!
From him thy Father's arm will not be taken,
Whose all is gone
Long as thou wilt.

Lord, since thou wilt! with me can bide no sorrow,
I bring it thee;
Weighed down to-day, upon some bright to-morrow
From earth I'm free;
I give thee all, by dear ones here surrounded;
Shield thou thy gift!
My house on thee, the Rock of Ages founded,
No storm shall drift
Lord, since thou wilt!

Lord, when thou wilt! Let me in grace be growing
Then call thou me;
Where I have erred, thy pardon free bestowing,
My sins I see

THE EUROPEAN OUTLOOK.

The following is translated from a letter dated August 3, written by one who occupies a very high station in the political, literary and religious sphere of Europe—a man of long experience, extensive knowledge, and sound observation:

"In England, ritualism threatens the Established Church. Should a schism take place, which is most likely, a great part of the Episcopalians would soon after be thrown into the arms of the Roman Church. The fear of such a revolution, paralyzes the hands of statesmen, who dare not oppose a dam to the encroachment of the inner foe, and who leave the matter to laymen and the parishes. Bismarck is waging with the Roman clergy a war by far more dangerous than that against France. The strongest power in Europe is wrestling hand in hand with the Roman Church, which commands her battalions and manœuvers them as one man. Much doubt must be entertained as to whether the people of Bavaria, the Rhenish provinces, Westphalia and Silesia will ever be detached from their clergy, and should I be mistaken, would it be beneficial to the Gospel? Bismarck encroaches on the rights of the church, by closing the seminaries, which, he maintains, is necessary, on the ground that any government is impossible with the Syllabus.

This proceeding gives an immense power to the governments in Switzerland. These have united with the view of destroying the church, which is to be broken up in each canton into a multitude of parishes, which, isolated as they will be and are, will have no resisting power. The struggle towards that direction has begun in every canton. In France, Henry V. will ascend the throne; the Ultramontane fanaticism will elevate him in order to persecute, every way and every where, both Protestants and free thinkers. The fanatic party has lost all control over itself. It multiplies false miracles and solemn processions; by means of an hypocritical piety it galvanizes the masses, both ignorant and superstitious. It will be successful. But the Internationals will soon after throw down Henry V., whose reign will then be very short, and then will commence the days of HORROR, when the blood of the Ultramontanes will flow in torrents. Italy is marching on pretty well. The only trouble with her is her enormous taxation. As to the pope's ever recovering his temporal power, this is out of the question. Spain presents a spectacle never witnessed before, viz., that of a society in such a state of complete dissolution that no one thinks about stopping or conquering her."—N. Y. Witness.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Western District N. Y. State Conference met with the church at E. Shelby, Friday evening Nov. 28th, to 30th, 1873. Good full meetings. Many met there for the first time. Preachers present—W. J. Hobbs, D. Cogswell, W. Vreeland, A. C. Newell, C. F. Sweet, R. H. Bateman, A. P. Moore, J. H. Whitmore, B. P. Stevens, M. R. Miles, and Sr. E. S. Jennings from the Eastern District. Good social meeting for an hour the first evening, after which, Bro Stevens preached a good pointed sermon from Rev. 22: 12.

Saturday 9½ A. M., met for business. Business Committee, B. C. Simonds, D. Cogswell, S. H. Withington. Devotional Committee, F. Carpenter, L. Grinnell, A. P. Moore. All visiting Brn., invited to take part in our deliberations. Delegates from Darien, Linden, Leroy, Dansville, Springwater, Lockport, E. Shelby. Quarterly collections. Darien $8.00, Linden $5.00, Dansville $10.00, Lockport $1.52 cts, Springwater $2.58 cts, E. Shelby $4. 15 cts. The forenoon was devoted entirely to reports from delegates and preachers. The pressing of the definite time question is making much trouble and division in many places. Lockport, E. Shelby and Linden reported united, and doing well. 2 P. M., sermon by C. F. Sweet, from 1 Tim. 6: 12. 3½ P. M., spirited business meeting, when the following resolutions were passed. Whereas, The dogmatic and persistent pressing of the definite time interpretations of the prophecies has caused, and is calculated to cause divisions and alienations among brethren who believe that the personal Second Advent of the Savior is an event near at hand; and Whereas the good of our beloved cause requires a union of heart and mind of all who believe in the great doctrines held by us as a people; Therefore,

Resolved, That while we are cordially and heartily in favor of free speech and liberty of interpretation, we are decidedly opposed to the agitation of the definite time question, or any other question, in a spirit and in a manner calculated to cause division, or that past experience has proved detrimental to the best interests of the cause we so much love.

Resolved, That the Quarterly collection brought in at this meeting, together with what has been sent to the State Treasurer, be paid to M. R. Miles, to help pay the Tent deficiency. As this will leave a balance of $33.60 to be raised, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That each member, in each church, be taxed ten cents, and the pastor shall pay for those who refuse, and send the amount received to the State Treasurer.

6½, good social meeting, after which M. R. Miles preached from Eph. 4: 4–6. Sunday 9½ A. M., blessed love feast. Preaching at 11 by Sr. E. S. Jennings from Gal. 4: 18. P. M., by W. J. Hobbs from Rom. 10: 10, and in the evening, after one of the best social meetings many ever enjoyed, preaching by J. H. Whitmore from John 10: 16. Notwithstanding the spirited discussions in our business meetings, the good Spirit overruled, and we earnestly hope some of our good brethren will learn wisdom by the experience of the past year. "TAKE THE OTHER HAND."

We cannot too much admire the beauty and truth of that philosophy which determines to make the best of it, however difficult and tiresome duty may be. Such a spirit in children is attractive indeed, and a powerful lesson to many who are older.

On a lovely day in the commencement of spring, a young lady who had been anxiously watching for some weeks by the bedside of her mother, went out to take a little exercise and enjoy the fresh air, for her heart was full of anxiety and sorrow. After strolling some distance she came to a rope-walk, and, being familiar with the place, she entered. At the end of the building she saw a little boy turning a large wheel. Thinking this too laborious employment for such a mere child, she said to him as she approached, "Who sent you to this place?"

"Nobody, ma'am; I came myself."

"Do you get pay for your labor?"

"Indeed I do; I get ninepence a day."

"What do you do with the money?"

"O, mother gets it all!"

"You give nothing to father, then?"

"I have no father, ma'am."

"Do you like this kind of work?"

"O, well enough; but if I did not like it, I should still do it, that I might get the money for mother."

"How long do you work in a day?"

"From nine to twelve in the morning, and from two till five in the afternoon."

"How old are you?"

"Almost nine."

"Do you get tired of turning this wheel?"

"Yes, sometimes, ma'am."

"And what do you do then?"

"Why, I take the other hand."

The lady gave him a piece of money.

"Is this for mother?" said the well-pleased urchin.

"No, no; it is for yourself, because you are a good little boy."

"Thank you kindly, ma'am," returned he, smiling, "mother will be glad."

The young lady departed and returned home, strengthened in her devotion to duty, and instructed in true practical philosophy by the words and example of a mere child.

"The next time duty seems hard to me," she said to herself, "I will imitate this little boy, and take the other hand."

DOES IT PAY?

Some time since a young man of a very unprepossessing appearance entered the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association of Portland, and disclosed a very sad story of dissipation. He had squandered his money in sin, and had become so reduced as to be obliged to deposit his watch with the pawnbroker. In these circumstances, friendless and alone, he was brought to a realizing sense of his condition, which was truly pitiable. He was led to think, however, that there was yet hope for him. He was young. Life was before him. Friends were ready to receive him, if his course was changed. The resolve was made. Confessing all, he applied for assistance, which was cheerfully granted. With many promises, and a firm resolve to lead a new life, he again went forth to engage in life's contests.

After many weary months of toil upon the ocean, he returns; but how changed! The marks of dissipation and the signs of poverty which before were so prominent, have disappeared. Instead, you now see a fine appearing young man—robust, frank and tidy. He calls for his watch, which is redeemed; and he has $100.00 left in the bank for future years. These are some of the results of his new course in life, but not all. Peace and happiness has been his lot besides. Does it not pay to do right? If any of the readers of this article are doing otherwise, let them try it, and they will doubtless have abundant occasion to say that it does.—The Helping Hand.

SOLVING A DIFFICULTY.

A grandson of the Governor of Virginia, a child of four or five summers, was on a visit to his maternal grandfather, who is a wealthy land owner in Ohio.

One day, after making his first visit to a Sabbath school, and being duly impressed with the religious lessons taught there, his grandfather took him down on the farm to show and gather the fruit of a large walnut tree, which was ripe and ready for the harvest. On the way, the little fellow, with the philosophy which "reads sermons in stones," said,

"Grandpa, who do all these fields and woods belong to?"

"Why," said the matter-of-fact gentleman, "to me."

"No, sir," emphatically responded the child; "they belong to God."

The grandfather said nothing till they reached the rich-laden tree, when he said:

"Well, my boy, whom does this tree belong to?"

This was a poser, and for a moment the boy hesitated; but casting a longing look upon the nuts, he replied:

"Well, grandfather, the tree belongs to God, but the walnuts are ours."—Wayside.

THE THREE SIEVES.

"Oh, mamma," cried little Blanche Philpott, "I heard such a tale about Edith Howard! I did not think she could be so very naughty. One—" "My dear," interrupted Mrs. Philpott, "before you continue, we will see if your story will pass the three sieves."

"What does that mean, mamma?" inquired Blanche.

"I will explain it. In the first place, is it true?"

"I suppose so; I got it from Miss White, and she is a friend of Edith's."

"And does she show her friendship by telling tales of her? In the next place, though you can prove it to be true, is it kind?"

"I did not mean to be unkind, mamma, but I am afraid it was. I should not like Edith to speak of me as I have spoken of her."

"And is it necessary?"

"No, of course, mamma; there was no need for me to mention it at all."

FOOD FOR THE SICK.

It is no easy matter to restrain the sick, or some of them, from practical suicide by eating without an appetite, while the task of restraining friends (?) and officious neighbors, is but little less than herculean. In the acute forms of disease—fevers and inflammations—the appetite is wisely and mercifully taken away, indicating that the stomach has no gastric juice, and therefore cannot digest food, which, if taken, must either be vomited or remain as an irritant, fermenting and rotting, necessarily aggravating the disease, if not producing other and worse forms of sickness.

If the sick could be allowed to follow their inclinations in this respect, controlled by the appetite, which is really the measure of the wants of the body, indicating more food in cold weather and when over-exercised, and less in hot weather, and when the body is unnaturally heated, there would be but little trouble; especially if we would but follow the example of sick brutes, all of which, even the hog, knows too much to eat without an appetite. Instead of a desire for food in the acute forms of disease, there is generally a thirst, a desire, and a positive demand for something to cool the body, and not for food to warm the already overheated system. And in the first forms of disease, especially, we may trust the indications of the appetite, always exercising reason and judgment to prevent excess. We drink water simply to slake a thirst, and we should take food to repair the waste of the system and regulate the animal heat as indicated by the appetite, never disregarding the known demands of the appetite or forcing the stomach to receive food when a loss of it, or a nausea, clamor for abstinence.

But some of the sick take food from principle—though not conscientious in any other respect—supposing that they must do so as a means of gaining strength or of "keeping the wind out of the stomach," an idea too ridiculous and false to deserve a moment's consideration, too absurd to be entertained in an enlightened age, since the outer air does not reach the stomach, and would do no special harm if admitted. If "wind" is in the stomach, it is evolved by the rotting of in the undigested food forced into the stomach, the product of fermentation, as seen in the over-raised dough. To keep the stomach free from "wind," fast when food is loathed, remembering that if the popular idea is correct, that food must be taken to keep the air out of the stomach, constant eating is required, filling it as fast as it is emptied. Again, the sick will gain strength by fasting, more rapidly than by eating without a relish and an appetite, since forcing always tends to retard the return of the appetite. Indeed, most of the popular ideas, especially among the ignorant, are "highly preposterous and totally absurd."

It is safe, therefore, in the first or acute forms of disease, to abstain from food, drink freely of water, at least in the absence of an appetite, and when thirsty, and use only the simplest kinds of food which are easy of digestion, while improving, taking the more substantial kinds after being able to labor, and all at regular periods.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford, in Christian Monitor.

WHAT IS IN THE BED-ROOM.—If two persons are to occupy a bed-room during the night, let them step on a weighing scale as they retire, and then again in the morning, and they will find that their actual weight is at least a pound less in the morning. Frequently there will be a loss of two or more pounds, and the average loss throughout the year will be a pound of matter, which has gone off from their bodies, partly from the lungs, and partly through the pores of the skin. The escaped matter is carbonic acid and decayed animal matter or poisonous exhalation. This is diffused through the air in part, and part absorbed by the bed-clothes.

If a single ounce of wood-cotton be burned in a room, it will so completely saturate the air with smoke that one can hardly breathe, though there can only be one ounce of foreign matter in the air. If an ounce of cotton be burned every half an hour during the night, the air will be kept continually saturated with smoke, unless there be an open window or door for it to escape. Now, the sixteen ounces of smoke thus formed is far less poisonous than the sixteen of exhalations from the lungs and bodies of two persons who have lost a pound in weight during the eight hours of sleeping; for, while the dry smoke is mainly taken into the lungs, the damp odors from the body are absorbed both into the lungs and into the pores of the whole body. Need more be said to show the importance of having bed-rooms well ventilated, and of thoroughly airing the sheets, coverlids, and mattresses in the morning, before packing them up in the form of a neatly-made bed?—Science of Health.

CHAPPED HANDS.—Take common starch, and grind it with a knife until it is reduced to the smoothest powder, put it in a clean tin box, so as to have it continually at hand for use. Then, every time that the hands are taken from the suds or dish-water, rinse them thoroughly in clear water, wipe them, and while they are yet damp, rub a pinch of the starch thoroughly over them, covering the whole surface. The effect is magical. The rough, smarting skin is cooled, soothed and healed, bringing and insuring the greatest degree of comfort and freedom from this, by no means insignificant annoyance.—Science of Health.

COMING AGAIN.

MRS. A. A. SARGENT.

O christian, faint not, but your work still pursue!
The trumpet is sounding, our home is in view;
Then oh hasten! Make ready! Let nothing detain,
For the King in his beauty is coming again.

From the north and the south, from the east and the west
Shall be gathered together the righteous and blest;
All nations shall praise him, and join in the strain
To Jesus our Savior, who is coming again.

Yes, coming again, for you and for me,
The bands shall be broken, the prisoners made free.
No more shall we suffer in sickness or pain,
But be ready to meet him when coming again.

Cheer up then, ye faint ones; be patient, yet strong;
The night is far spent, we shall not wait long;
The promised reward we then shall obtain,
For Jesus will bring it. He is coming again.

When weary and worn in the way we have trod,
How sweet is the thought, we can trust in our God;
For has he not told us not one word should fail?
But all be fulfilled in his coming again.

HOLINESS.

H. WILLETT.

I like the sound of the word. It seems to convey the idea of the wholeness of anything: wholly the Le[illegible] for instance. The Savior is called the Holy One. And Paul says, "holy brethren." Holiness, then, should be the profession of every true disciple of Christ; for Christ is holy, and the Apostle and High Priest of our profession. We sometimes sing, "More like Jesus." If we mean what we say, it is good; for it is in harmony with what Paul advises the Ephesian brethren to be. He beseeches them to walk worthy of the profession wherewith they were called; and gives them sundry admonitions how thus to walk, among which are these words: "That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on [or be clothed with—Diaglott] the new man, which after God is created in . . . true holiness."

True holiness is what all should desire. Paul discourses about this matter of holiness as if it were attainable by all; and indeed advises the Ephesian brethren to clothe themselves with this new man. As if one should advise another to take off a ragged, worn-out suit of clothes, and put on a new and good suit. "Well," says one, "do you mean to say that Paul advised clothing one's-self with good works? Is it not dangerous thus to teach? for the Bible says that our righteousness is but filthy rags." True; that is my idea about self-righteousness; and what I believe enters into the make-up of the "old man," and which we perhaps have been all along clothing ourselves with. But now Paul says, put off the "old man," or old suit, and put on the new; because it is after God (or in the likeness of God).

It should also be noticed that this putting on the "new man" comes after the renewing in the spirit of the mind. By reading the fourth, fifth, and part of the sixth chapters of Ephesians, we can certainly discover what Paul meant by putting off the old, and putting on the new man, or true holiness; viz., ceasing from former sins, and practising the virtues he names. But some may say, Are we not saved by grace, through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God? We are, and that is also Paul's idea. And I have said nothing about being saved by good works so far, but have been talking about holiness, or being in a saved condition; the result of having learned of Christ, and having exercised faith in him as our Savior.

I would now call attention to the declaration of James that "faith without works is dead." He adds, "A man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." As much as to say, I think that the latter way would be the only way to prove that he had faith,—the true faith. He speaks of the devils who believe and tremble. But what good works do they show? They are not in a saved condition, because they are not clothed with the "new man," and do not bring forth fruit unto holiness. I understand from this that there is a dead faith, as James conveys the idea,—a counterfeit of the true faith. The true faith is that which works by love; and "perfect love casteth out fear," says John. Not so with the demons. They believe, fear, and tremble.

We are exhorted to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. 2 Cor. 7:1. By reading the previous language, we find the exhortation is in view of the precious promises made by God, that he would dwell in them, and walk in them, and would be to them a God, and they should be to him a people. Now, says Paul, "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Now what fear does Paul mean here? I believe he meant a fear to grieve our heavenly Father. In view of his tender mercy and willingness to enter into the new covenant relation, Paul exhorts the brethren to perfect holiness by fearing to offend or grieve him any more.

The Savior said, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." If we wish to be holy, I understand we must cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, which is to get rid of all the contaminating effects, either in mind or person, of the evil we have done, so far as in us lies. If we have slandered or lied about our neighbor, to his injury, is it not plain that we should make amends so far as we can, and do good for the evil we have done as we have opportunity; and by this way, if possible, live peaceably with all men?

Consider the case of Zaccheus, who was willing to give the half of his goods to the poor; and, said he, "If I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." A pretty good interest for the use. And Jesus said unto him, "This day is salvation come to this house; forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham." Well, says one, are we to go back over our lives, and correct all the mistakes and evils we are conscious of having committed, in order to be holy? I would answer, No; for that in all probability would be impossible. I understand from the Scriptures that God forgives us all our sins in the past for Christ's sake, when we exercise faith; but present living now concerns us in order to perfect holiness; or, in other words, to live in that way that is well pleasing to our heavenly Father. Paul says, "Put on the new man"; that is, live as new men, for you are new creatures in Christ Jesus by faith; therefore, be such by practice. If not, why are so many admonitions given as to what we should do?

We should search the Scriptures to find out all his will concerning us; for we can find in them a precept or an example to teach us our duty in every circumstance of life; and by thus learning the divine will, and obeying it, we grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and thus become sanctified by the same.

I am aware that a great deal has been said about holiness, sanctification, or the higher life, as being entirely the result of faith. It is no doubt the result of faith producing good works. But to profess to believe, when no christian fruits follow, James says is a dead faith. Let us, therefore, carefully examine what the Lord requires of us as his followers, and obey him, that we may be led in the way of holiness. I believe the Spirit and the Word are in perfect harmony, and if we grieve not or quench not the Spirit, we shall be able to do all the Word requires of us, which we were not able to do while in the flesh. The apostle says, "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." He then speaks of the fruit of the Spirit in contrast with the works of the flesh,—the fruit of the Spirit being love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Now is it not plainly taught that none of these virtues can be properly practised without the Spirit's aid? Men and women may be constitutionally agreeable; may be temperate, peaceable, etc., but unless these characteristics are the result of the Spirit's work, or because of being "new creatures in Christ Jesus," and having put on the "new man," the individual is still the "old man" and in the flesh.

"Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." This declaration certainly cuts off all the self-righteous, and all the benefits that may be supposed to result from good works uninfluenced by the Holy Spirit. Let us, then, yield ourselves to the Spirit's influence, the Holy Comforter, that the Savior promised to send in his name, that we may be led in the way of true holiness; and since it is our privilege to walk in the Spirit, under its constant influence, let us pray for its abiding gift; for the Son assures us that the Father is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give good things to their children. This being the case, what doth hinder to have the mind of Christ, but unwillingness on our part, or want of faith to receive the promise? Let us pray God to sanctify us wholly, our whole spirit, soul and body, that "his laws may be put into our minds, and written in our hearts." Heb. 8:10. Without holiness, no man shall see the Lord.

SACRIFICE.

E. S. WILLARD.

"But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving."—Jonah 2:9.

How sweet these words come—even something within my reach to offer unto the Lord—sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving! O how precious to the waiting heart, the loving soul, whose only aim is to please and serve God! Sacrifice unto the Lord with the voice of thanksgiving!—just let the love that fills thy soul run over with the voice of thanksgiving. David says, "Publish with the voice of thanksgiving"; "Offer unto God thanksgiving"; "I will magnify him with thanksgiving"; "Let us come before his face with thanksgiving"; "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving"; "Let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving"; "Offer thee sacrifices of thanksgiving"; "Sing to the Lord with thanksgiving."

How much cause I have for thanksgiving; years lengthened out until "a crown of glory" is an every-day adornment,—family yet spared,—a few precious friends of yore yet live, and some of them come hundreds of miles to see us,—the stream of precious letters from loving hearts, and the privilege to reply to them,—the precious little errands for Jesus,—the loving home he gives, and the loving hearts and willing hands with which he supplies it; and the loving friends he sends to enjoy it with us; and what has seemed quite remarkable, always one or more impressible heart, that knows not the Lord, belonging to the household. Thus our sympathies are kept alive, and the gospel net is daily spread. Then the blessed Bible, the secret chamber, the family altar, the communion with God night and day, the breaking of bread in the church in our own house, the communion of saints, the hopes of glory, and, above all, the peace of God that passeth all understanding, that keeps our heart and mind through Christ Jesus. Amen and amen.

Thus, in God's great mercy, the new year 1874 finds us, in which we extend to the dear saints scattered abroad the "Happy New Year."—"remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father; knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God." Pray for us.

THE BLESSED HOPE.

CYRUS MENDENHALL.

"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus 2:13.

Hope is an attribute which enters more or less largely into the disposition of all mankind. To live in expectation of some desired good is natural; nevertheless in temporal affairs we cannot always positively expect that which we desire or hope for. In order to bring about a realization of our hopes, we may devise means to provide for real or imaginary obstacles, and yet be disappointed, although the object desired may have been strictly legitimate; because all things connected with this changeful state of the earth, are subject to contingent circumstances.

Again, a man's hopes may be based upon incorrect promises. He may hope for pardon, without confession; for salvation, without faith in Jesus; or for a blissful home in some far off misty nowhere, designated as [illegible] Scripture makes no such promises. Thus we see that hope, though one of the greatest blessings planted in the bosom of mortals, may be much abused or misplaced; but the mind need not be driven about, for Paul tells us of a hope, sure and certain as God's own existence.—"For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord." . . . The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." . . . Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4. "Now this witness is true"; therefore we have in this hope something real, that will eventually end in a grand consummation of more than the human mind can anticipate. No disappointment can possibly ensue, because God is able and willing to do all that he has promised. With wisdom infallible, and power infinite, he can scan the future, and govern events in accordance with his desires. He being the highest power, the ruler of the universe, nothing can intervene; as the inspired writer tersely remarks "If God be for us who can be against us."

Do we all possess this blessed hope? Or are our hopes built upon things of this world which may be swept from us, resulting in bitter disappointment? Who are the real possessors? 1. Not the wicked, because the coming of Jesus will to them bring terror, crushing out their sinful desires, and their lives, because they clung to their iniquities and their false hopes. 2. Not the moralist, because he builds on other foundation than Jesus; therefore cannot be looking and longing with that joyous heartfelt desire which is termed in Scripture language "hastening unto" the coming of the Lord. 3. Not the popular wordly professor, because he is so engrossed in schemes of this world, in vain endeavors to convert all mankind into trying to gain reward,

"By being carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease," that the near approach of Jesus proclaimed by the abounding signs, the necessity for that coming, and certainty of it are lost to view,—choked out by the weeds and thorns of excitement, "fairs," "charitable cheating," and poorly directed efforts to add to the church. 4. Not the proud haughty one who for fear of contamination, would not go into the slums and dens, the highways and hedges, to warn men of approaching danger; but it is the humble, earnest believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. No matter what his name denominationally,—let him be Baptist, Methodist, Adventist—only be a true follower of Him who was meek and lowly in heart—"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Then with Paul he may know that he shall obtain a crown of righteousness, which remaineth for all them that love his appearing.

Acknowledging the fact that Jesus Christ is a second time to visit the earth, or even to be so well versed in prophetical lore as to compute closely to that time is not all that is required. We must be ever on the alert lest the event overtake us as as a thief. It must be realized in the heart, thus prompting us to exhort others to watch and prepare for the great day of God Almighty.

"And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch."

We find that this hope consists in an earnest desire, and expectation of the speedy, literal, personal coming of Jesus Christ. Upon his coming, depends all that the christian holds dear;—the resurrection, the banishment of all evil, destruction of evil doers, our reward, and promised inheritance, yea, even our future existence depends upon him who is our Life giver. "Beloved, it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me." What a string of golden promises; not spiritual, figurative, but literal. Sinner is this hope yours? are you a just claimant on these future blessings?

Metaphorically this hope is likened 1. unto an anchor. What an anchor is to the ship, this hope is to man, who on the sea of life is tempest tossed and beset with dangers, liable to be driven upon the shoals or rock bound coast of these perilous times. But when connected by faith and obedience to the blessed hope—"Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail"—we can rest in peace though dwelling in the midst of strife,—in safety while surrounded by danger,—in comfort and joy while suffering outward trouble and sorrow.

2. It is compared to an helmet, a head-dress and protection for soldiers. We are soldiers doing battle against error in theory and practice. We are assailed in consequence, and need protection. Let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation." An helmet is conspicuous; so will God's gracious rewards be when he gives them to those who do good in secret, with pure motives. He says, I will "reward them openly." The time of reward will be when Jesus comes. In view of all these facts, can we say that this is an unimportant subject? Have we any right to deny that Jesus Christ will again come in the flesh? Oh, let us then cherish this hope in our hearts, and endeavor to arouse our fellow men to a sense of this great truth, which is so often brought forth in the word of God.

With Paul we should "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." These dark days, troublous times, and many things vexatious and trying should inspire a deeper, stronger hope of future joyous light in a peaceful eternity, free from [illegible] and annoyances. This hope should actuate us to enter into a deeper and more practical form of piety. It should urge us on to every good work, that when Jesus comes we may receive the reward of the good and faithful servant. Such will be the effect of this hope if received in a proper manner. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." By hope connected with faith, we have the assurance of being an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ; to an inheritance incorruptible—the new earth. "If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." A promise is valued because we have a hope of its fulfillment. The promises of God are sure and must be verified. What a blessed hope! no uncertainty connected with it. Sinner, are your hopes thus sure? If not, search the Scriptures,—learn the way to life eternal, and with us join in "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ."

ON THE SPIRITUALITY OF GOD.

"God (is) Spirit; and it behoves those worshiping him, to be worshiping in spirit and truth."—JOHN 4:24 (Rotherham's translation.)

In this passage is brought out a very great and very important doctrine; a doctrine taught by the most authorative Teacher that ever instructed men in the things that pertain to God, and to the relation that subsists, or may subsist between men and God, even the Son of God sojourning among men, having become in fashion as a man.

The lesson that the Lord imparted to the woman at the well bore upon the fact of the "spirituality" of God. God is Spirit." The single personality of God had been impressively taught to the people of Israel through a long period, and by means of an experience of a most remarkable and strikingly interesting character. But now "the Son of God was come" farther to reveal "Him that is true," and to make more clearly known than in previous times that though "God's throne" is "heaven" which must therefore be taken to be the seat and scene of his personal presence, yet he is present in Spirit, at all times and everywhere. This fact was indeed known to Old Testament saints, as David says, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" But our Lord Jesus brings it more fully out, more emphatically declares it, and that in relation to its most important practical bearing upon us. "God is Spirit; and it behoves those worshiping him, to be worshiping in spirit and truth." "There is a spirit in man," says Elihu in the book of Job 32:8: and with his spirit, because only so can he worship acceptably, for only so can he worship truly, must he worship the living and true God. Man's spirit must be brought into contact, and communion with the divine Spirit. This is rendered possible on the divine side by the omnipresence of the divine Spirit; whilst on man's side exists all that there is of limitation.

Man does not naturally possess a spirit that can rise to fellowship with God's Spirit. To be rendered capable of this, he "must be born anew." This birth must be the product of the action on his soul of the Spirit of God. Then, as the same Elihu before referred to, says, "The inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding;" the Spirit of God reveals Christ to the renewed spirit of man; Christ his light, his life, his Redeemer, his justifying Advocate, his sanctifying Savior. The Spirit instilling faith, makes known the privilege of adoption in Christ, giving authority to become the sons of God to those who, by the grace of God, believe in Christ, and receive him as the Son of God, their Savior, the Spirit "shedding abroad in their hearts" of such "the love of God," prompts the cry of trustful, filial faith, "Abba Father;" bearing witness with the spirits of these, that they are the children of God; who, also as sons, yield the affectionate obedience of sons. These are they that constitute the true worshipers, who "in God's Spirit are doing divine service," (Phil. 3:3), who render a real living worship to the true and living God. Such worshipers the Father seeks to worship him; in such only, can he take delight. Other worship than this is but dead service, and must of necessity be rather an abhorrence to him, than an acceptable devotion; "God is Spirit!" His true worshipers then must likewise be spirit too, or they could not have fellowship with him.

But men's living and acting as spiritual beings, and in a spiritual capacity, does not render them impersonal. Their individuality remains, and their several substantive existence. So neither should God's spirituality of being be taken to depersonalize him. He is still the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Father of an adopted family in Christ. His throne is in heaven, his presence doubtless manifested there, whilst in spirit he is present in all parts throughout his entire universe. And because his spiritual presence is now, as shown by its effects, whensoever he is pleased to produce those effects, equally anywhere and everywhere exhibited amongst men, therefore many men, in whatsoever place they be, whose hearts are touched by his Spirit, worship him freely without any local restriction, such as existed aforetime. In Jerusalem was the place where men ought to worship; now God wills "that men be praying in every place." Oh! to appreciate as we should the high, the exceeding privilege! Glory to God with heartiest thanksgiving: through Jesus Christ our Lord, his own dear Son. Amen.—The Rainbow.

AT EASE IN ZION.

If there is any truth in the Scriptures, it [illegible] in Zion know nothing of true religion. They are either careless sinners or self-deluded hypocrites. The pious man, the true christian, is described by the inspired writers as one who mourns for sin; who is engaged in a spiritual warfare; who is fighting the good fight of faith; who crucifies the flesh with its affections and lusts; who is running the christian race; who is engaged in subduing and mortifying his sinful propensities; who denies himself, takes up his cross daily and follows Christ; who, as a pilgrim, a stranger, a traveller, is seeking another and better country; one who works out his own salvation with fear and trembling.

Now is it possible that a man who is doing all this can be at ease, in the sense of our text? A soldier on the field of battle at ease! a man running a race at ease! a traveler, toiling up a steep ascent, bearing the cross, at ease! a man crucifying sinful propensities, dear as a right hand or right eye, at ease! a man working out his salvation with fear and trembling at ease! a man who hates and mourns for sin, loves God, and feels concerned for his perishing fellow-creatures, at ease in a world lying in wickedness, where God is dishonored, where Christ is neglected, where immortal souls are perishing by millions; where there is so much to be done, so much to be suffered, so much to be guarded against and resisted; where death stands at the door ready every moment to summon him to his great account.

My friends, it is impossible. No christian can be habitually easy, careless, and indolent in such a situation as this. He may, perhaps, slumber for a moment, but even then he is not at ease.—Mementoes of Edward Payson.

"THE DEVIL'S TRINITY."

J. W. BURROUGHS.

Under the above caption a correspondent of the Inter-Ocean, depicts the real character of Spiritualism. The writer had just been hearing Victoria C. Woodhull deliver one of her "naked truth" scandals, and therefore was able to portray the matter in a true light. He says:—

"Speaking of 'naked' truths,' there are some which people seem to lose sight of in discussing the doctrines advocated by Victoria C. Woodhull, and men and women of that like. If any doubt this, let them read thoroughly a single number of the Universe, (a spiritualist paper) the avowed object of which is to 'place the knife at the throat of the present marriage system,' which it characterizes as a 'gigantic infernalism that ought to be utterly abolished.' Thirty years ago, what is known as 'modern spiritualism' was an utter stranger. Fast following it came woman's rights and free love, and since then divorces have multiplied tenfold. This is the moral, and it is a truth so naked that Woodhull, or Fox, or Lewis, dare not attempt to controvert. Spiritualism leaves in its wake nothing but broken firesides, ruined homes, domestic turmoil, sorrowing hearts, where, before it entered, dwelt together love, and peace, and happiness. Before its infernal doctrines were promulgated, women were contented with the rights they enjoyed, and considered it a sin to love more than one man, so that all good people were shocked at the granting of divorces. This is no idle fancy, but an honest conviction, firmly rooted in the experience of twenty years, and every word can be proven. Spiritualism, free love, and woman's rights, are spawn of hell, the devil's trinity. These are 'naked truths,' worthy at least of consideration by those who are inclined to sympathize with Mrs. Woodhull, for her doctrines are solely dependent upon this 'devil's trinity.'"

The above is in harmony with the signs of the "latter times" as given by Paul, in 1st Tim. 4:1-3. Let us take warning and "from such withdraw ourselves."

"PRESENT; YET OVERCOME."

The writer of "Thoughts on the Christian Life," has this passage: "Sin within—sin of thought and motive, self-will, self-indulgence, pride, temper, uncharitableness—still these are present with us; present—yet overcome." We find much to commend in the article from which the above is taken, but think the passage itself is calculated to mislead. We do not object to the statement that sin is overcome, but to the teaching that sin, though overcome, is still present. Sin, in the sense of depravity, may be present; but the author quoted, uses sin in the active sense; teaches that "sin of thought and motive, self-will," etc., may be present, and yet overcome. Now, certainly, sins of "thought, motive, self-will, temper, and uncharitableness," are actions, and if these actions are present, in what sense can they be said to be overcome? Suppose I say of a liar and robber, "the sins of lying and robbing are present with him, and yet overcome." Would it not be nonsense? It would be equivalent to saying that the man is at present engaged in lying and robbing, and yet his sins are overcome. Would such a statement give one a very high ideal of the man's virtue. While he is actively lying and stealing, does it regenerate his character that some superior power overcomes the results of his mischievous actions? Just so, it seems to us, a very dangerous teaching that one can be regenerate,—a child of God, having in his soul the presence of the overcoming Christ,—and yet continue to sin in "thought and motive, self-will, self-indulgence, pride, temper and uncharitableness." While I act in a given direction, my actions must and do have their own full force; if that force is checked or overcome by a superior, opposite force, this does not change the character of my action.

While I sin in thought and deed, these thoughts and deeds have their full force, and whatever the restraining influence from another, these thoughts and acts are, in themselves, sinful all the way through. We may as well speak the truth in regard to these subjects. No advantage can come to the cause of Christianity by teaching that a man can be a saint, while he continues to sin,—that he can be sinning in thought, motive and deed, and, at the same time be a saint. The presence of Christ is promised, not to make men saints while they are sinning; but to save them from sinning. "He shall be called Jesus because he shall save his people from their sins."

All talk about a christian experience which "saves and overcomes," while it leaves the sinner reveling in sins of thought, motive, self-will, self-indulgence, pride, etc., is, it seems to us, but "darkening counsel by words without knowledge." It is degrading the christian experience, deceiving the uninstructed, and really, though unintentionally, giving counsel to indulgence.

But the writer criticized would not admit, in a high state of christian experience, "conscious transgressions." But are not sins of thought, motive, self-will, etc., conscious transgressions?" Furthermore, are not all actual transgressions "conscious transgressions?" There may be unconscious depravity, and unconscious tendency to sin, but sin must be voluntary if it is mine. What I do unconsciously cannot be transgression to me in a moral sense. Actions performed unconsciously or involuntarily, are no more sinful than the swinging of the branches of a tree before the wind, or the running of water down hill.

Only those acts which I perform voluntarily and consciously are transgressions to me, for only such acts are my acts in any proper sense.

Who would think of holding a man morally responsible for acts performed while asleep or while in a state of stupor from an anæsthetic? We should clearly distinguish between actions which have moral character and those which have not. Much confusion arises in writing on religion, oftentimes, because this is not done.

We should keep before us, at least, these three thoughts: 1. Unconscious and involuntary acts have no moral character. 2. Sins, subjectively considered, are always voluntary, conscious acts. 3. While any one is consciously sinning in thought and in deed, he has no part nor lot in christian experience. He is in the "gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity."

What? Does a christian then never sin? We would not say just that. A man may be a christian and yet be betrayed into sin, but he is not sinning unless he is sinning knowingly and voluntarily, and if he is voluntarily and consciously sinning, he is not, for the time being, a christian. He descends from the christian's experience to take up the transgressor's experience, and, while thus doing, how can he be a christian? He may retain a great many of a christian's purposes, and a christian's views, but can he be a christian practically? While he voluntarily sins in one point is he not guilty of all?, While a man is voluntarily telling a falsehood, can he be a truthful man? Does the holding of certain views or the making of certain professions, or standing in certain church relations constitute a man a christian? He only that doeth righteousness is righteous. He only who voluntarily obeys the will of God, and, by the divine help, turns himself now against everything which he sees to be "contrary to the mind of God," only he can justly claim to be, this day, a christian.—Ex.

NO ROOM FOR HIM.

A distinguished minister of the established church of England is said, in his memoirs, to have expressed doubt whether St. Paul, if he were to revisit the earth and go to London, would be permitted to preach in St. Paul's church. And a greater than Rowland Hill says of a greater than St. Paul, "He came unto his own and his own received him not.

There is something inexpressibly touching in this declaration and that kindred one, "There was no room for him in the inn." Here was the advent of One who had been the light and joy of heaven, and who came to be the light and joy of earth. Angels heralded his coming with joyous strains. The guiding star of God's appointment lingered over the favored spot that gave him his first home in this world. Should not all earth be jubilant, and men vie with each other in regard to the welcome that he has reason to expect? The Father, in the perfect consciousness of his claims upon men on behalf of Christ, had said, "They will reverence my Son!" But alas for the heart of fallen man! there was "no room" for this illustrious visitor!

In Jerusalem, six miles distant, his advent is no sooner reported than an order is issued for the murder of every child in the region, under two years of age, for the single purpose of making sure work in taking the life of one innocent stranger in Bethlehem of Judea. In Bethlehem, he is excluded even from the ordinary refuge of the wayfarer, and crowded contemptuously by some, carelessly by others, and really by nearly all, among the animals of the basement stall. And so, throughout his earthly sojourn, he "had not where to lay his head." In death he was the victim of conspiracy, and after death he slept in a borrowed grave.

Doubtless, if Jesus had come as the representative of earthly glory and glitter, as the patron of human follies, as an agent for whatever ministers to the interests and gratifies the tastes merely of this world, every door would have been open, every house and heart would have found "room for him."

And this exclusion of Christ even from the traveler's home in Bethlehem, and the statement that there was no room for him there, do but reflect, to a large extent, his subsequent history on earth down to the present time. We have our Christmas days, [illegible] ry bells; but what, after all, have these things to do with Christ, who gave to the day its name? Hearts and homes alike are, all the while, barred and bolted against him. They have room for everything else, but none for him.

Look at the devotees of earthly honor and fame. How can they find room for Christ in hearts already occupied with what more than fills them? Can the "great bubble" safely give place to him? No, no; in the cabinets, and courts, and senates of this world, we generally look in vain for any room reserved for the welcome occupancy of the King of kings.

Look at the devotees of earthly pleasure. Go to the palaces of thoughtless ease and luxury, and amid the dazzle of fashion and the din of pleasure's fascinations, you may search in vain for a spot where the Savior could find room to stand, and equally in vain for a person who would gladly invite or welcome him there. You may see blazing crosses of gold and pearl; you may see splendid pictures of an imaginary Christ, which are highly prized as specimens of art and representatives of fashion, but "no room" for Him of whom the crosses and pictures, and Bibles bound in scarlet and gold, are said to be memorials. Perhaps in the "basement" or the "stable" of some such temples of fashion you may find Christ in the person of one of his obscure disciples, occupied with the beasts of the stall; but there is no room for him amid the glitter and frivolities of the temple. Neither pleasure nor honor can work miracles; and if their "inns" are pre-occupied with guests whom they value more and love better than they value and love the Redeemer,—guests, too, with whom they will not part for the sake of admitting him,—how can they find room for him?

And the marts of Mammon are equally crowded, with the temples of fame and the halls of Pleasure. Such an idea as that of Christ never enters the thoughts of the busy throng who are in the breathless and idolatrous pursuit of gold.

And to say of any man, either in the temple of fame, or fashion, or pleasure, or business, or any other department of social existence or private life, that he has no room in his heart or home for the only Redeemer of the soul from sin and death, is to say a thing which, if true, can hardly be exceeded in its sadness. Room for other objects; ample room for earthly cares and occupations, for earthly friendships and guests, for earthly vanities and frivolities, but none for the Lord of life and glory! There is room for him in heaven. He occupies there the middle throne. There will be room for him on earth in every heart that loves him and trusts him as a Savior. And for those who find "no room" for him here, he will find no room hereafter. As he has not been their guest in time, they will not be his guests in eternity. They may knock and say, "Open unto us," but the "door" will be "shut." There will be "no room."—L. T., in the Tract Journal.

THE way of error and sin is always down hill; and once in motion, who can tell when and where he will stop! You trifle with the Sabbath to-day, to-morrow you profane it. To-day you take a glass to gratify a friend, to-morrow you may take one to gratify yourself. You now endure bad company, you will soon choose it; so true is it, "they proceed from evil to evil."

"RICH MEN."

The vexed question of harmonizing the interests of the capitalists and laborers is assuming threatening proportions. There is no social subject of this age which has more generally diffused itself through all civilized society, and which has marched with a more firm and onward step to a radical revolution, than has this subject of capital and labor. The subject has always given more or less trouble to rulers and leaders in society, and caused some local revolutions; but it never before openly commenced the organization of two great hostile political parties among the nations generally; each grasping the sword openly with the professed purpose of subduing and controlling the opposite party. All human governments defend the rich, for the rulers belong to the rich class, and will naturally sustain that party in the struggle for supremacy. In organizing for a sanguinary conflict, the capitalists already have their combinations in the governments, and their chartered corporations; while the working class is under the necessity of privately, and in some places secretly organizing to produce a harmony of action, and thus overpower the opposite party.

The final issue must come therefore, between the governments the monied corporations they are pledged to sustain, and private combinations of the various laboring classes. Every step taken by the parties pally by financial changes and education. Every advanced step in educating the laboring class is a step towards their demanding equality of profit and honor with the capitalists. Ignorance produces submission in the masses to oppression by the few. Therefore when education is extended to the lower classes, they will see that they were born with inalienable rights to equality with all men, and will in the name of equity and justice demand their rights. As education has rapidly advanced among the laboring classes in many countries for the last fifty years, so has this question advanced in the same countries towards a bloody revolution.

Every time there is a financial expansion, the employer advances his income and business, and feels that he can never recede from that advanced position, and the laborers wages being increased, his expenses are generally increased more in proportion, so that both parties feel that they cannot have their income diminished. When a business depression comes, and the employers income is diminished ten thousand dollars, he feels that he cannot bear the loss, and so he deducts ten thousand from the wages of a thousand employees; thinking that ten dollars from each will be but a little, and they can bear it; but the laborers have been educated, and know that the employer has laid up a hundred thousand dollars a year from their hard labor, and they feel that it is monopolizing the advantages of their toil, and therefore remonstrate against a reduction of wages. These frequent revulsions are constantly increasing the antagonism between the parties, and now threaten an early sanguinary contest.

Nearly all legislation is now tending to make the rich richer, and the poor poorer. The masses of the laboring classes are nearly without a representative in the legislative halls, as but few go there who are not able to purchase the position, or are not sent there by the influence of wealth. If a poor laborer should find a seat there, he would be immediately bought by some speculating ring, if it were possible to buy him. The laboring class, who represent a great majority of the bone and muscle of the world, and would be much the stronger in war, have no control of the political governments, and are therefore organizing governments of their own, which are considered by all the existing States as antagonistic to them. These combinations take different names,—Communists, Internationals, etc., but are all working men combined against capitalists. A few statements of facts will put this subject in its true light we think. At a mass meeting of the Internationals in New York, a Mr. De Carsie as reported in the N. Y. Times, said matters were approaching a critical point.

"He warned the Federal Council that a revolution was approaching. Men could not go without bread. They would he said, compel the city to provide work for them. It was time that the working masses should arise in their might and make a statement to the public, and if nothing were done within a certain time, the working men knew what they would do. It was not necessary that men should starve, when surrounded with luxury within their reach. Mr. Frey said that the French and German sections of the International had determined to hold mass meetings, but would in all probability co-operate with the English speaking sections. There would be a special meeting of the French working classes in the Casino, on Thursday next, to consider what action should be taken to procure employment."

A manifesto was then drawn up which closed as follows:—

"More than 200,000 working men are residing in New York, and the same proportions are existing in almost every city and State of this country. Would it not be an easy thing for this vast majority of the adult citizens to put a stop to the vile practices of capital, to the greediness and pillaging habits of our modern highwaymen? Could or would any authorities, legislative or executive, be bold enough to resist our demands, if sustained by the undivided front of the laboring masses?"

In a meeting of the same class in Cincinnati, Dec. 14th, "Mr. Haller stirred up the passions of the crowd by telling them with bitter emphasis that the rich would not help them, but expected them to toil on until old age, when they would be left to die in the poor-house. "Look," said he, "how it is in the world to-day. Men who work live in hovels; men who do nothing live in palaces. The rich tell you that it is the beer you drink that causes your poverty, and call you extravagant for drinking the simple glass that sustains you in your daily toil, while you grovel in luxury, and indulge in expensive wines and oyster suppers. The time has come when you should take hold of this matter and comprehend what measures it is necessary to adopt to gain your rights."

"A young man next took up the cry and said that everybody present had suffered from the oppression of capital. The monopolists had grown rich from the sweat of the poor man's brow, but they did n't intend to stand it any longer. They were not going to die of starvation. There was an alternative (the only one left), and that was to take up arms unless their demands were acceded to by the rich corporations. Better die with arms in their hands than to die of starvation.

These incendiary sentiments were received with roaring thunders of applause."

Every advancing step taken by the governments and financiers is increasing this difficulty. Taxation is a grievous burden to society, and when it is made heavy and unequal, the class most oppressed by it will remonstrate. Debts produce the most irritating burdens of communities; and when unequally borne tend most strongly to revolution. The debts of the people of the U. S., according to the National Republican, is, including the indebtedness of the General Government, State governments, corporations, and individuals, $12,000,000,000:—the interest upon which, at seven per cent, is $840,000,000, which is three per cent of the official valuation of the total amount of property in the U. S. Every dollar of that interest must be produced by labor, or be deducted from the wealth of the nation. Not a cent of it can be paid by speculation in stocks or produce, for every time an ar- . . . . . . of labor.

This debt is rapidly increasing by the blind and wicked legislation and foolish financial operations of the rich, contrary to the expressed wish of the tax-paying masses. Over two billions of the wealth of this nation is by law made untaxable; and this is held by the rich, so that they are thus relieved of a burden which is thrown on the poor. A man may possess a million dollars of thsi property, and his poor townsmen be under the necessity of educating his children, and grading and lighting the streets he travels, and he hold the sword to compel them to submit to his legislation.

These social principles of inequality are increasing every year, not only in this country but in Europe; and it is perfectly evident that the oppressed classes will not bear this terrible burden but a very little longer. We would not, by any means, counsel the laborers to rise against the governments, for it would produce such a scene of butchery and destruction as this world has never seen. But notwithstanding our desire to be law-abiding, and submissive to the powers that be, yet we feel compelled to warn men that the Word of God teaches that such a scene is just before us, and that the present circumstances clearly prove the truthfulness of the Word. Let all the people of God watch the progress of these events; for as the hostility of these parties increase, so will the day of the Lord approach. We repeat it, the Scriptures clearly teach that a terrible financial war will exist in connection with the coming of Christ.

GROWTH IN GRACE.

The Scriptures teach us most plainly to live so that we may continually grow in grace. We read: "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. 3: 18. Some have advanced the thought that the doctrine of "Christian perfection" is opposed to growth in grace. This idea is a very erroneous one, as the opposite is true. Sin is what prevents any one from growing in grace. Sin is like weeds in the garden. The vegetables grow fastest when the weeds are all out; so the professor of religion is not prepared to grow up into Christ till he stops sinning. We cannot stand still in religion. We must either advance or go back. If sin is allowed to remain in the heart, the growth must be very small. One might grow in knowledge, while he had an impure heart, but not in grace. He who enjoys "perfect love" must go forward to keep the grace he already enjoys. To have a perfect man physically requires a perfect child to grow up to manhood. If the child is diseased, and continues so, he cannot grow to be a perfectly healthy man. The child in Christ should be as free from sin as the oldest saint; then he may grow up to be a perfect man in Christ Jesus.

Growth in grace does not mean growing out of sin; because it is impossible. The only way to get out of sin is by pardon. Sin never becomes outlawed. No matter how long since it was committed, it will never grow less by age. It will ever be as large as when first committed, till it is wiped out by pardon. So long as a single sin remains unforgiven, so long the individual is in a state of condemnation. He is sick spiritually and can never be a well man till that sin is removed by faith in the all-cleansing power of the blood of Jesus. When free from sin, he may then grow in grace, because the obstacles to growth are removed, when cleansed from all sin. Then he may grow as to the quantity of holiness, but not in quality. There may also be an increase of knowledge, love, and the other christian graces, as he goes forward in his pilgrim journey to the holy land of promise. It is his privilege to so walk in the narrow way as not to be burdened with sin and condemnation. He may be "free indeed," because he abides in Christ. Says the word of the Lord: "Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not."

DARK PICTURE.

That there is a very deplorable condition of things in the majority of churches, at the present day, cannot be doubted by any careful observer. Pride and amusement, covetousness and carnality, fashion and folly, are the leading powers that are moving the popular religious bodies at the present day. The dark picture does not seem to become any brighter, hence the necessity of a special movement on the subject of holiness to arouse all who can be reached. Those who will not leave their lukewarm condition, and consecrate themselves to Christ must not expect to be ready to meet him in peace at his coming. This is a serious matter, and demands immediate attention from all such churches, lest it be too late if there is further delay.

The following from a writer in a Newburyport (Mass.) paper gives an idea of what we mean. He says:

"There is a bitter sarcasm in the story told of a minister on our seaboard, which, though very likely to be hypothetical, has a terrible under-current of truth. It is said that in the afternoon service he found but a handful of hearers, the rest having gone on a steamer excursion for pleasure. He entered the pulpit and said thus, as the story goes: 'My hearers, I have brought a sermon, but it is useless to preach it. I find my duties as a minister are very much simplified; the times have changed; there is but one virtue to be recommended, and that is money; but one sin to be rebuked, and that is poverty; so you see my occupation is gone, the ministry is played out, and I must go to farming. Receive the benediction.'"

The minister who expects the blessing of God on his labors must "preach the word," if it cuts off his best supporters and warmest friends. Let him hew to the line, if the chips fly in his own face; and then own up, and depart from all iniquity. The Lord's directions are perfect, and there can be no departure from them without imperfection. Why not come up to them cheerfully, and be blest?

SAUL AND SAMUEL.

Please explain 1 Sam. 28: 9–16. Did the woman raise Samuel? E. P. KEELER.

The Scripture reads as follows:—

"And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land; wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die? And Saul sware to her by the Lord, saying, As the Lord liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing. Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel. And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice; and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul. And the king said unto her, Be not afraid; for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth. And he said unto her, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself. And Samuel said to Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams; therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do. Then said Samuel, Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the Lord is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?"

In verse three it is said: "Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land."

As it is positively asserted that "Samuel was dead," it is equally certain that he could not make any communication till he was raised to life. It should be observed that there is not a word about Samuel's spirit in the whole account. It was Samuel that died and was "buried." After Samuel's death, Saul was anxious to get some information in relation to the future; but "the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by urim, nor by prophets." He then sought a woman that had "a familiar spirit."

"So he disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night; and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee."

Why go to a woman that had a familiar spirit?" Because the "familiar spirit" would be a prominent actor in the performance. The woman was a medium for the familiar spirit, the same as in Spiritualism at the present day. As in mesmerism, so the "familiar spirit," or demon, forms a mental picture of the person which he designs to present, and that mental picture appears to the medium as a real object. In this way the "familiar spirit" caused Samuel to appear to the woman who acted as a medium. Saul might have put his hand through what appeared as Samuel to the woman, and not felt either mantle or the wearer, because neither were actually present; but they were realities, and described as such. Samuel was no more present than the objects seen in dreams, in which we shake hands with friends, talk, eat and walk with them; while at the same time we are lying quietly in bed. The demon, or familiar spirit, talked through the woman, pretending to be Samuel, while at the same time the real prophet was dead and buried in Ramah, and knew nothing of what was going on that night at Endor. It is absurd to suppose that the woman could raise the dead.

BUCHANAN.—Up to Jan. 5th, the meetings in Buchanan continue to increase in interest and power. The Lord is doing a great work for the church and people. Yesterday, Bro. Mathewson, the pastor, baptized two fine young men, one of whom is a teacher of languages, and has appointed to speak next Sabbath to the Germans in their own tongue, on the subject of prophecy. He was an infidel at the beginning of the meetings. We have great reason to praise the Lord for what he is doing in this place. Some seventy-five or eighty went forward for prayers last evening, who are seeking pardon or purity of heart.

ADVENTISM.—Rev. Mr. Stockman was at Thompson's Hall two nights last week expounding Adventism. He was till recently a leading clergyman in the Free Baptist denomination, and gave the able discourse two years ago at the dedication of the Free Baptist church in this village. He is a speaker of commanding power, and at the bar would have stood in the front rank as an advocate. We have very rarely listened to a better framed and fortified argument from any pulpit than he made on Wednesday evening. His aim was to show that modern adventism is not only the true doctrine of the Bible, but, for the first four hundred years of Christianity, the doctrine also of the whole christian church, and universally the doctrine of Protestantism till the end of the sixteenth century. The specific ideas which he urged were the literal advent of the Lord Jesus Christ, the literal destruction of the present order of things upon the earth, the literal resurrection of the dead, and the literal reign for a thousand years of the Lord Jesus in the new empire reconstructed upon the ruins of the old order. His argument against the idea of a spiritual millennium was very powerful.—Merrimack Journal.

SPIRITUAL THEOLOGY.

The following is a letter from a Free Methodist preacher to Bro. J. R. Smith, of New Bedford, Mass., with his reply.

DEAR BRO. SMITH:—Your kind and scriptural good wishes, doctrine, exhortations and rejoicings came to hand. And of course I read it aloud to Bro. Town and wife, and made remarks as my mind was impressed as I perused the contents. Well, Bro. J. R. Smith, if you do not grow in grace, it will not be from a lack of knowledge of the Holy Bible. And yet I fear you will become warped, if you are not very prayerful. God bless you, and make you a symmetrical man of God. I pray God that your faith may be increased until you can pierce the veil and see the spirit world, and talk with the inhabitants of that "sun-bright clime." One great source of happiness to me is to talk with those who are gone before. Glory be to God forever. "My soul now sits and sings, and practices her wings," and contemplates the hour when the Master shall say, "Come, quit this house of clay." Glory, victory over death, hell, and the grave.

Well, I am growing. I see and hear more daily. My health is very poor. I am unable to get around with this poor body, but while that is confined, my soul travels to the regions beyond. Kind love to your dear wife. The pilgrims here send kind love. With christian love I remain your brother,

HARRY MATTHEWS.

BRO. SMITH'S REPLY.

Dear Bro. Matthews:—Your kind letter, with your prayers that my faith may be increased until I "can pierce the vail" and hold converse with the inhabitants of the spirit world, has been received; but as I am a total unbeliever in Spiritualism, your prayers can be of no avail; for unless some mighty change takes place, they can never be answered. I formerly believed in the transmigration of souls; but when my spiritual understanding became enlightened by the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ, and I found what I had been taught to believe was a dogma of the dark ages, I gave up tradition and believed the living word of God, which teaches "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." To-day I am a free man in Christ Jesus. And having been made free by the Son of God, "am free indeed." I have been "sanctified through the belief of the truth," and the truth is what makes me free. Hallelujah to God and the Lamb for ever! I have peace with God. I am kept by his Almighty power, and expect to be "preserved blameless unto the coming of Christ," "whom having not seen I love; in whom, though now I see him not, yet believing, I rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory." Have you got anything better than that, Bro. Matthews? I "rejoice in hope of the glory of God," which is to be revealed unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ. I am so glad to know that this Jesus, whom I worship, is not a spirit Jesus; for if he was no more than a spirit, I could not love him as I now do.

"I am set for the defense of the gospel"; and while God gives me breath, I expect to advocate his blessed truth. "After the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets"; and "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead." I would say again, I do not believe in Spiritualism, but I do believe God's blessed truth, which teaches a resurrection from the dead. I do not wonder there are so many Spiritualists flooding the land, when the Scriptures are so wrested, and God's truth held in unrighteousness. Says the inspired apostle, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not: for if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." So we perceive the argument that will invalidate the future LITERAL resurrection of the sleeping saints will militate with equal force against the literal resurrection of Christ; and the argument which will overthrow the teaching of God's blessed truth will overthrow and obliterate the christian's hope. To deny a literal resurrection of the saints in the future, is to deny the literal resurrection of Christ in the past. The resurrection is an indispensable necessity to future consciousness; for "in death there is no remembrance of thee." Death obliterates the memory. Even "his thoughts perish." "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." The process of thought comes directly to an end when death strikes his fatal blow.

How vast the difference between the popular theology of the present day, and God's own living Word. While popular theology informs us that the dead know more than the living, God's Word informs us that "the dead know not anything." Then let us be careful, my Bro., how we "add to," or "take from," the word of God. When the dead saints are resurrected consciousness will again be restored; consequently the resurrection is indispensably necessary to a future life. Death destroys life in man as really as it does in the beast. "As the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man [in death] hath no pre-eminence above a beast. . . . All go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Death extinguishes the principle of life in man, more fully even than the life of a tree is extinguished by cutting it down. "For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground, yet through the scent of water it will bud and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?"

Spiritualism informs us that the man is in heaven; but the inspired Word says, "As the waters fail from the sea, and as the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." So you perceive that God's holy Word teaches that when a man dies, he is dead. Death robs men of life, and the resurrection will restore life. The Bible contains many clear statements concerning a future life, by virtue of a release from the bondage of death; and these statements are not meaningless. If the sleeping saints are in "the spirit world," as you claim, then what necessity for a resurrection, as the Bible teaches? Either your theory is false, or God's Word is not true. O, my brother, be careful how you wrest the Scriptures, and trifle with God's holy Word! Inspiration clearly unfolds the glorious truth of a literal release from literal death; and this "blessed hope" has made glad the hearts of the saints of all ages. It has dried the fountain of tears, and illuminated the hearts of millions with the bright prospect of meeting their loved ones again. Unlike others "who have no hope," they have laid away the dear ones to sleep for awhile, with the blessed assurance of meeting them again in the morning of the resurrection. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." When the Life-giver shall come "to judge the quick and dead, at his appearing and his kingdom," the almighty power of Jesus will electrify the sleeping saints, when they "shall awake" and "come forth" with bodies "like Christ's glorious body." Praise God! the time is soon coming when death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed, with him who has the power of death, which is the devil.

While suffering the infirmities of these frail mortal bodies, how it rejoices my poor heart when by the eye of faith I can look a little beyond this, and obtain a view of that healthy country, where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain." O how sweet it will be, Bro. Matthews, when we shall at last stand upon that glorified shore, freed from all sorrow and pain. In the new earth death can make no more ravages. In that realm of glory death shall never enter, for "the former things shall have passed away." At the appointed day Jesus will unlock the tombs, and the sleeping captives shall go free. "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

I never expect to praise God in death, knowing it is written that "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Yet if I should fall asleep in Jesus, I expect in the morning of the resurrection that with the ransomed hosts I shall join the chorus—"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." And then shall we be made kings and priests unto God, and we shall reign ON THE EARTH. Then the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea.

God bless you, Bro. Matthews; may you grow in grace, and IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE TRUTH; and live to be a flaming herald of the blessed gospel of Jesus Christ, preaching that "the dead know not anything," and the promise of Jesus that if he went away he would come again. Yours in the faith and hope of the gospel,

J. R. SMITH.

DESPISE NOT THE WEAK.—Have you thought how many weak things there are in the world? Look at the natural kingdom. How few are the oaks and many are the rushes! There is a rose with a stem so fragile as almost to break under the burden of its own fragrant bloom; yet God is the God of the reed and the rose. There is not a spire of grass bruised by trampling feet, nor a leaf fluttering from a twig, not a bird that flies, nor a worm that crawls, no, nor any order of life so weak as to be beneath his care.—Wayside.

FREQUENT communion gives us freedom of access to God, and enables us to pour out our hearts to him with fulness and confidence, as to our friends.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM D. D. & M. S. REED.

To the saints scattered abroad, Greeting:—Our last letter closed our labors in Oregon. We took stage in the evening at Ashland, and rode till nearly morning over the mountains, at a fearful rate. But we were happy, calmly trusting in Jesus, and about our Father's work. We stopped at Yreka, an old mining town of considerable importance in early days, but now very much run down, and apparently wholly given up to sin and the Devil. We made an effort to get a place there and hold some meetings, but the way was all hedged up before us, so we took stage the next night and rode ninety-six miles farther, wife not eating a mouthful of anything, to avoid sickness on the stage.

We reached Soda Springs Saturday noon, where we stopped, being well tired out, and not wanting to travel on the Lord's day. Soda Springs has but one house, and that a hotel, situated right in a canyon of the mountains,—one of the most secluded, wildest, and yet loveliest spots I have yet visited. The mountains towered to the very sky, covered with the richest foliage. At its foot rolled the Sacramento river over its rocky bed, clear as crystal,—quite a noble stream, though not many miles from its head waters. Here we passed the Lord's day in quiet rest, eating our cold bread, cheese and apples under the noble forest trees of the mountain, with the murmuring water making music at our feet. We had close talk with the lady of the house, and found her a woman of no ordinary mind and talent, notwithstanding she had lived in that secluded spot for eighteen years. She was brought in on mule-back, before there was even a beaten trail through. Her tables and shelves were loaded with all the literature of the day; so she had kept her mind well stored. She thought to surprise us, when pressed closely in conversation, when she said "I do not believe the Bible." We told her we were not surprised, for this admission was only too common now-a-days. Said she believed all the human family would be ultimately saved. Her mind was settled, and would not be moved with reading matter or conversation. We stopped till Monday noon (two days), and her husband charged us $5.00 for our room, which was very small and plainly furnished, we eating our cold bread, which we brought with us, in our cold room. We thought they wanted money," if they did live so far from civilization. We paid them $4.00, he dropping $1.00.

From there we rode seventy miles,—the end of the stage road, without stopping. Such perfectly enchanting mountain scenery I have never witnessed. High peaks running up to the sky, covered with the richest green of the fir-tree, the variegated hues of the oak, maple, and other wood, in their beautiful fall colors,—it was indeed lovely. Old Mt. Shasta, at whose base we passed, was towering its lofty head in its stately grandeur. Its sides and head were barren and bleak, with streaks of snow. We rode a whole day in sight of it. Its height is fourteen thousand two hundred and forty-eight feet. We wound up and down and round the mountains with six horses at full trot, turning curves so short that it made the stage and our heads both reel. We followed the winding Sacramento for hours, then crossed it by ferry, and left it, and soon came upon Pitt river, a wild, roaring, foaming, angry stream, which made us shiver to look into and think what it would be in the winter. The night was clear, with full moon, and so light we could see the scenery distinctly. We rode till nearly three in the morning, and the last few hours seemed long and tedious. The stage had been robbed at this place some two weeks previous, and $5,000 taken from the passengers and express box. It was a dreary, gloomy place, just suited for such work. But we were sweetly resting in Christ, knowing that all we had and were was his, and he would certainly take care of his own. We went through in safety, truly thankful to our heavenly Father for his good providence and watch-care that had been over us during our long and dangerous mountain ride of three hundred miles.

We stopped at Redding, Red Bluffs, and Chico, but the way seemed to be hedged up, so we found no entering in, or place to preach the Word. We run down to Marysville, where we stopped over Lord's day, and spoke twice in the colored church. It was Court week, else we should have had the Court house and given a course of lectures. But being much worn with constant journeyings and labors, and the climate not agreeing with us there, we took cars for Sacramento, where we stopped one night only, and then went to Suisson Valley, where we staid over Sunday, and spoke once to a good house. Then to Vallejo, where we spent a week, visiting the church, and attended two most blessed prayer-meetings. Found the church alive and growing, rejoicing in present, full salvation. Our hearts were greatly cheered whilst seeing their steadfastness and earnestness in serving the Lord. We however sadly missed the warm, motherly greeting of our dear old Sister Snow,—a true mother in Israel, who had just fallen asleep in Christ, with a bright and glorious prospect of a resurrection to life eternal, when the Life-giver comes. For many years she had given herself almost wholly to prayer, and lived to see many of them answered,—the Advent truth preached on this coast, churches raised up, and nearly her whole family converted to God and the truth.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

Pleasant is thy memory, dear saint of God! She was the second real Advent christian to bid us welcome to this coast, four years ago.

We are now at home, resting and recruiting for another campaign, when the Lord gives marching orders. O how blessed to have one Captain, and that Jesus. He is soon coming. Praise his name! Let us all be ready to hail him king of all the earth. Yours looking for the kingdom.

Santa Clara, Cal., Dec. 29th, 1873.

Correspondence.

From H. B. Sevey.

Dear Brn. of the Crisis:—In looking over the past year I find the Lord has been very kind to me, unworthy as I am, and blest me with his Holy Spirit, and enabled me to spread his truth in many places, and so present it before the people that quite a number have been led to confess and forsake their sins, and are now rejoicing in Jesus as their Savior, and looking for his return. It is blessed to find hearts that are open to receive this glorious light. A few years ago I expected Jesus would come before this time, and evidences are still showing that we are very near the dawn of a better day. I am satisfied that we have but a few more months to toil in this mortal state. This has been one of the best years of my life. Without doubt I have made mistakes; but Jesus is ready to forgive, and it is blessed to know we have an advocate with the Father—one that is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and whose blood cleanseth from all sin.

Since I last wrote to the Crisis, the Lord has been blessing the people in Rome. Twelve have followed their Savior in baptism and recived rich blessings in obedience to the command. Others have come out on the Lord's side since. All praise to Jesus!

Calls are urgent to come and help. The harvest truly is great and laborers few. I thank God some have decided to leave all, and preach Jesus to a dying world. Young preachers need the help of the church. They need fathers and mothers to stay up their hands. Give such help by prayer and words of encouragement. A young man (now in the field), said to me when he had severe trials and was nearly discouraged, that it took more courage to go this way, than it did for Grant to take Richmond. We need men of courage, filled with the grace of God to be of service to the cause. I am astonished to see Brn. settle down in one or two places, when so few around have heard of the blessed hope. Is it doing as we would be done by? Is it letting our light shine? Is it imparting that light to others that we hold so dear? Is it living out our faith? Let us strive this year to do more, if possible, than in the past, if the Lord does not come before its close. May it be said unto us at last, "Well done" is my prayer for Jesus sake. Amen.

Mt. Vernon, Jan. 1st, 1873.

From C. M. & A. Collins.

Readers of the Crisis:—Our house is one of the few in this western land that is cheered from week to week by the Crisis, with its precious freight of comfort and consolation. Its utterances of earnest christian experience, and evidences of the near approach of that great day when the blessed Master shall return to earth to redeem his people from the power of death and the grave, and to cleanse it from sin and oppression and clothe it in its Eden beauty, are sweet indeed Glorious hope! Is it possible that we are so near the consummation of all things?

This is certainly the teaching of the unalterable word of God. Then, brethren, in view of these things let us throw aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, that we may run with patience the race that is set before us. Let us remember that we may know for ourselves if we are heirs to the promise. Paul says: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Do we love the appearing of our Lord and Savior? If so, all is well; if not, let us obtain the fulness of his Spirit: then the glad tidings, Behold he cometh, will be joyous news to our waiting souls.

We have not heard an Advent sermon since Sister Clark was here in May. Bro. Bliss was here in April and held a few meetings with us, and it was through him, as an instrument in the hands of God, that we obtained the light as to the teachings of God's word on those great and important points. If this should reach the eye of some of our Advent preaching brethren that could conveniently come to Brantford and hold a series of meetings, we say, Come. There has been good seed sown here, and by a little effort much good could be done. May God put it in the hearts of some of his servants to visit us. We long for the fellowship and sweet converse with some of like precious faith. Yours in christian love. Pray for us.

Brantford, Kansas.

From Bro. G. A. Streeter.

Dear Brn. and Srs., greeting:—I have just returned home to my dear family after an absence of six weeks. I have visited New Boston, Winchendon, Fitzwilliam, Keene, No. Plymouth, Bridgewater, Rutland, and Addison Vt. Found some good living children in every place. In some places they were somewhat divided by contentions about various doctrinal ideas; thus causing a declension in spirituality. Why will men go around and scatter seeds of discord? Why will they have an eye to selfish ends, and not for the general good of the cause at large? Jesus said, "He that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad." In some places the preacher has not lived as he ought, thereby losing the confidence of the people. O the importance of living a christian life, as well as talking.

In Addison there is a small church of old veterans, of the cause of 1844. I stopped with them three Sundays. God blessed the Word. Saints were revived. Bible doctrines were held forth, such as the coming of our Lord, and the events connected with it, also a preparation necessary for it, viz., holiness, and Bible sanctification. A man must be just right in order to be saved. He must be entire, wanting nothing. I thank God that I can testify to the living principle of christianity. It is sweet living, to feel that you are wholly the Lord's; his forevermore. Glory to his dear name! Dear ones in Christ, I wish you a "Happy New Year" in the Lord. Strive to be wholly given up to him. Live so high above the trifling things of this world, as not to be moved by them. God bless you all. Amen. Your Bro living for Jesus.

From Sr. A. A. Sargent.

Soon the dark scenes of this earth will pass away, and Christ will set up a kingdom which shall stand forever. The saints of all ages will be gathered, and the song of redemption will be heard throughout the glorious city. Angels will leave their starry home, and come with sweet music to welcome the myriad throng onward to their final place of eternal rest. The books will be opened, the sentence passed upon each, and then will be known whom we have served. It will be a terrible day to those who have gone in the way of sin, but a day of joy unspeakable, and full of glory for the saints. They will receive their promised reward,—a crown of life which shall never fade away.

Sinner will you live on regardless of God? or will you heed the voice which often reproveth you of sin and yet be saved from the ruin of that great day? "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Will you be at enmity with God? or will you seek a home made pure from sin, and by so doing receive peace of mind which is far beyond the pleasures of earth?

West Randolph, Vt.

From Sr. J. Foster.

Truly I can say with the Psalmist, I am small and despised, "yet do I not forget thy precepts." Many years in the past I have been in the habit of saying, on receiving small acts of kindness from my fellow creatures, "Thank you." But recently I saw my unthankfulness as never before, in some times taking a meal, and not thanking my Parent Divine once, for the same; while he was continually showering his blessings upon me. And from that period, I have kept a firm resolution that I will ever be thankful to God for his acts of kindness to me. Since that time I have enjoyed more than I ever have before, and am joyful in the hope of soon witnessing the glorious scene of his return. He will come, not a babe in a manger, but King and Ruler. Though I have looked for him at times more than forty years yet I am still expecting him, and willing to wait his time. If I look to soon I think he will forgive me. But let that be as it may, his service is very delightful and profitable in this present state; and I would that all might know that it is the sweetness of all sweets to be devoted to Christ.

From Bro. C. H. Sweet.

Friends are inquiring why I do not devote more time to gospel labor, as so many fields all around me are white for harvest. My reply is, that I have received so little pecuniary aid since I have been located in this region, that I am now under the necessity of laboring through the week to support my family, and pay the debts I contracted while devoting the larger portion of my time to preaching. When relieved of my present pecuniary embarassments, I will gladly comply with as many of the urgent invitations already received, as my time and strength will permit. Join with me in asking the Lord to direct and aid.

Extracts from Letters.

T. E. Arnold, Fiskdale, Mass., writes:—"A little more than thirty years ago, I gave my entire self to the Lord, to walk in his testimonies; and received in return peace and joy, and a hope of immortality. I can read my title clear to the heavenly inheritance. O what will it be to enjoy that inheritance! The unbounded prospect lies before us, and Christ is at the door to introduce us to those amazing realities. Seeing, then, that a few months at the most will fix us in that world where the business of this life will no longer engage our attention, nor its amusements have power to charm us, let us see to it that we strive earnestly to make our calling and election sure."

E. N. Bliss writes:—"Ever grateful to my heavenly Father for the many blessings that he bestows upon me, I wish to express my thanks to him and to the Eastern Association for the Crisis which has been sent to me free. Dear brethren, I am trying to labor for the Lord. Since I came to this State my health has been very poor. This old body is full of pain caused by hard work in part, and also by foolish habits before my conversion. I have been a slave to tobacco and intoxicating drinks, until now I am a poor broken down man. But thank God, who has given me the victory through Jesus."

Obituaries

Marden. Fell asleep in Epsom, N. H., Dec. 10th, 1873, Sarah J., wife of Mark Marden, aged forty-eight years.

This is the third time death has visited this family within a short time. Our sister was a great sufferer, but she bore it with christian patience. We mourn for her, but not as those who have no hope; for we have the blessed assurance that she will come forth in the morning of the resurrection, clothed with immortality and having eternal life. She leaves a lonely husband and one daughter to mourn. Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion by E. A. Stockman, assisted by Brn. Baker and Glidden. M. A. G.

Ames. In Bingham, Me., Dec. 28th, 1873, Eliakim Ames, aged about fifty-one years.

He received an injury while at work in the woods, which caused death in three days. He leaves a wife and two children, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. Words of comfort were spoken at the funeral by Elder Deval (Free Will Baptist) from 1 Cor. 15: 22. Samuel W. Ames.

Randall. In Bolton, P. Q., Dec. 12th, 1873, Sister Delia Randall, widow of Bro Joseph Randall, aged forty-four years.

Sister R. embraced the Advent faith about twenty years since, and has ever lived it out. In her death the church has sustained a loss; but we are looking forward a little when He, who is our life shall appear, and then we expect to meet our sister and mother blooming with immortality and eternal life. She leaves four children and many kind friends to mourn. May the living lay it to heart, and be ready to meet their God in peace. Sermon by the writer.

John Chapman.

Wilson. Fell asleep in Kittery, Me., June 20th, 1873, of consumption, Bro. Augustus Wilson, aged sixty-one years.

He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his loss. Truly a good man has fallen. His loss will be deeply felt, not only by his family, but by the neighborhood and the church. We shall miss his faithful admonitions. His delight was in the service of God, and he loved the assembly of saints. He died in the full faith of Jesus' soon coming. May we be ready to meet our dear father in the kingdom. Funeral services by H. L. Hastings.

Marsh. In Bristol, Conn., George William, only son of George and Josie Marsh, aged twenty-one days.

Eaton. In Canterbury, N. H., Nov. 3d, 1873. Mr. Abiel Eaton, very suddenly, of heart disease, aged seventy years.

We trust he sleeps in Jesus. L. A. B.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Jan. 4. A despatch from La Palma, says:—"The assault upon Cartagena has begun, the commander-in-chief advancing upon Sananton, a suburb 1,500 yards from the city.

A desperate engagement is in progress, the issue of which is doubtful. The bombardment has made no visible impression on the rebel forts and batteries, which keep up a vigorous firing."

The Duke of Edinburgh has arrived at St. Petersburg.

A famine prevails in five districts of the Russian province of Sayrara, on the left bank of the Volga.

London, Jan. 7. A special dispatch from Berlin to the Times says the imprisonment of Archbishop Lodochowski is threatened. All his furniture has been distrained, and he still refuses to pay the fines imposed by the courts.

Madrid, Jan. 1. On Tuesday night a shell from the besieging batteries set fire to the insurgent iron-clad Tetuan, in the Harbor of Cartagena. After burning for three hours, the fire reached the magazine, which exploded with tremendous force, damaging the vessel seriously.

Another extensive fire, accompanied by a terrible explosion, has occurred at Cartagena.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Indian Murders in Texas.—Capt. Charles C. Hood of the 24th Infantry, stationed at Fort McIntosh, Texas, reports to the headquarters of the army that on the night of November 2d a party of forty Comanche Indians attacked Mendiolas's sheep camp and wounded Mendiolas so badly that he was not expected to live.

On the 30th of November the same party were at San Diego, seventy-five miles from Corpus Christi, where they commenced operations by hanging seven sheep herders and left twenty-two persons dead in the vicinity of the ranche. Among them were some of the best and most respectable rancheros in the section. Proceeding due west the savages threw two men into a well at Boryas Ranche. One had his neck broken by the fall. On Salado Ranche they killed a shepherd and wounded another man.

A company of citizens started from Lavedo in pursuit of the Indians and gave them hot chase. The Indians wounded a young man named Ball and a Mexican at Cochina ranch, and at Ben Neal's ranche they stole eighty head of horses. As there was no cavalry at the post, no force was sent out to assist the citizens.

First Lieut. Hudson of the 4th Cavalry, stationed at Fort Clark, reports that he left that post with a company of forty men and six Seminole scouts, Dec. 4th, in obedience to orders, and December 10th found the Indians on South Slano river, and a fight ensued. The Indians stood about ten minutes, when they ran and were pursued through the rocks, which were very slippery owing to the rain. Nine Indians were seen dead on the field and others are known to have been wounded, but got away.

A Severe Storm.—Western Representatives who arrived this morning state that the most severe storm known for many years has prevailed in the West for the last two days. Bridges are swept away and telegraphic communication interrupted.

In Brief.

— The remains of Emperor Napoleon III. were transferred yesterday to the sarcophagus presented to Eugenie by Queen Victoria.

— There is a rumor that there is to be an opposing military movement to seize the Spanish Government.

— There is an idea suggested that it may be necessary to send Chief Justice Cushing to Spain, even while he holds that high office, to avert a war. The case of Mr. Jay is mentioned as a precedent.

— A sister of Jefferson Day, a Mrs. Stamps, died in Mississippi, last week, leaving him the sole survivor of his father's family.

— Miss Abby Lamson of Beverly fell in a fit while carrying a lighted lamp from one room to another, and was so severely burned that death ensued.

— Nathaniel French, Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Masons in the Bermudas and representative Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England, arrived here in July last from Havana, since which time he has been missing. It is now ascertained that soon after his arrival he was brutally beaten, subsequently died and was buried in the Potters' Field. The discovered and identified remains are to be removed to another place of interment.

Taming a Mad Man.—One of our city pastors is a most excellent singer. He has a sympathetic voice. He frequently supplements his sermon with a song, and the music is quite as efficient as the appeal. He visited a madhouse the other day, and was shown a cell in which a madman was confined. He was one of the most furious sort. He had to be chained to the floor to keep him from dashing his brains against the sides of his cell. It was as much as one's life was worth to approach him. He tore his clothes into ribbons, and his bed was a mass of rags. As the minister looked through the grating the prisoner made for him, and with such violence as to jerk himself back on to the floor. He rose foaming with rage. "I'll kill you!" "I'll beat your brains out!" "Clear out!" Instead of moving, the preacher began to sing. The hymn he selected was "Our Home in Heaven." First the madman listened; then he stretched himself out to the full length of his chain. First one arm relaxed and then the other. Tears moistened his eyes. Then he coiled up on his bed of rags as quiet as a child. And when the hymn was ended, he looked up, saying, "More, more." The preacher sang till his strength gave way, and when he left, the madman seemed hushed in slumber. The keeper said he had no doubt but it would have been perfectly safe for the minister to have gone and sat down by his side in the cell. It was the old case of Saul and David.—Ex.

Another Impostor.

A young man recently called on Bro. Field, Jeffersonville, Ind., representing himself as the nephew of Bro. H. Munger, and soliciting aid to pay traveling expenses. He represented himself as a book agent, and as preparing for the ministry. He requested Bro. F to refer him to some Brn. in Cincinnati. He did so, and the young man went to those Brn. and obtained money of them under false pretences, contradicting his first statement to Bro. F. Bro. Munger says he knows nothing about him. Has no such nephew.

We have recently had a number of such cases. In these times of lying and robbery, such traveling strangers, who ask for money without an equivalent, should not be trusted a moment, for it is indirectly encouraging deception and fraud. Brethren, beware of them. J. C.

Protracted Meeting.—A protracted meeting will commence in Chelsea, Mass., Tuesday evening, Jan. 13th, and continue evenings as long as the interest may seem to demand. Bro. E. A. Stockman is expected to be present. J. Couch.

Hoosick Valley Conference.—A quarterly session of the Hoosick Valley Conference will be held in Hebron, N. Y., commencing Jan. 22nd, and hold over the following Sunday. We hope to see a large gathering of the friends of Jesus at this meeting. Let there be delegates sent from the churches and localities within the bounds of this conference. In the meantime, let much prayer go up to God that his work may be revived in Hebron. There will be teams at the R. R. station at Rupert in the afternoon to take all who come to the meeting to place of the Conference, free of charge.
A. W. Sibley, President.
A. P. Bump, Secretary.

Feeling it duty to feed the scattered flock, and warn men to prepare for coming judgment, we have decided to travel and labor as the door may open, and brethren may desire. Our first meeting will be at Franklin, N. H., evening, Jan. 26th. So any wishing to have protracted or evening meetings can address us at that place to that date. From F. we have thought to go into the upper part of this State, and Vermont; but we will calculate to go where the door is open, and the good Lord leads, and stop as long as duty seems to require.
J. G. Smith.
John Parsons.

Protracted Meeting.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting at Nottingham, N. H., as Bro. Geo. W. Randall may arrange, commencing Friday evening, Jan. 16th, and continue four days. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity are requested to make an effort to come out to this meeting and labor for the perishing. Pray earnestly that God may bless and gather a few more from that vicinity before Jesus comes.
Enoch Morrill.

Quarterly Conference.—A quarterly session of the Mass. A. C. Conference will be holden in New Bedford, Mass., to commence Tuesday evening, Jan. 27th, and continue over the following Sunday. Meetings afternoons and evenings, when preaching may be expected. We hope our brethren in all that region will make an earnest effort to come, especially the preaching brethren. Our business at this meeting is to make an effort to save the perishing. C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

Acknowledgments.—For Sr. L. B. Weaver.—Bro. Patterson, 50 cts J. Witherell, 50 cts. Sr. Witherell, 50 cts. Sr. Nancy Hall, $1.00.—$2 50.
Geo. T. Adams.

Quarterly Meeting—The A. C. Church of Norwalk, Ohio, will hold their first quarterly meeting for A. D. 1874, in their chapel, on Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 24th and 25th. A cordial invitation to this meeting is extended to all.
Frank Burr, Pastor.

Sickness has prevented me from filling my appointments, and my left hand is still in a very bad condition. I do not expect to use it for some weeks, but hope to be able to fill my appointments hereafter, if the Lord will, and go out as the way may open. Brethren, pray for me that I may bear the afflictions of life patiently, and be an humble instrument in the hand of God of doing good. N. B. McMurphy.

Conference.—The second session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held at the Reed meeting-house in Richmond, on Thursday evening, Jan 29th, and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, with hearts full of love and union, and then we shall be prepared to labor for the good of the cause, and shall not be ashamed of our work when it is done. We hope our preaching brethren will not forget this meeting.
H. D. Reed, President.
H. S. Mitchell, Secretary.

Connecticut Conference.—The next Quarterly Session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held at Yalesville, commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 21st, and continue over the following Sunday. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of preachers and delegates at this meeting. It is proposed to attend to the business matters of the Conf. on Thursday, so that the rest of the time may be given to devotional exercises.
G. L. White, Sec.

The third Quarterly Meeting of the Eastern District of Wisconsin will be held with the church at Cassell Prairie, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 13th, 1874, and continue over Lord's day. We hope to see a large gathering of the saints at this meeting. Let us come with hearts full of the love of God. We expect there will be several of the preaching brethren present to assist in preaching the Word. E. P. Graves.

There will be a meeting of days in Garland, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 22nd, and continue as long as thought best. A general invitation is given to ministers and lay members to attend this meeting, to unite in the work of God for the salvation of souls. Bro. and Srs. will call on Abner Millet. Provision will be made for all. Per order of the church, H. B. Sevey.

☞ Free return passes will be given.

Protracted Meeting.—A protracted meeting will be held in "Union Hall," Portland, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 15th, and continue as long as the interest may seem to demand. Bro. H. C. Smith, of New York, and others, are expected to be present.
For the church, H. C. Freeman.

The third Q. M. for the Southern District of Wisconsin will be held at Fenimore, commencing Friday evening, Jan. 16th, 1874, and holding over Lord's day. A general attendance of preachers and brethren is expected. Let all come praying, and we may be sure of a blessing.
N. A. Hitchcock.
George Howard.

Protracted Meeting.—A series of meetings will commence at Chester, Vt., in Cheese Factory Hall, on Saturday evening, Jan. 17th, and continue as long as duty may require. Friends of truth from abroad are invited to come and help. Bro. Boutell of Chelsea, Mass., and others, are expected to preach the word. H. F. Carpenter.

Rockbridge, O.—I expect to visit the church in Rockbridge, Ohio, on Wednesday, Jan. 28th, and remain one week, and preach Jesus and the resurrection. I expect also, if the Lord will, in the future to visit them once in eight weeks, and minister to them in spiritual things.
Frank Burr, Pastor.

Rise of Price.

"History of the Advent Message." $3.00 sold by subscription. Our proposition to get out a "history of the Second Advent Message—doctrine and people" has met with a hearty response, with many words of encouragement from our chief ministers also.

Many have urged us to add portraits of such of our "pioneers" as can be obtained. We have concluded to add some fifteen or twenty portraits, and to make other additions to the work beyond what we had intended, at a considerable expense, which will make it a work to well compare with four dollar books.

All who subscribe before July 10th, shall have them at $3 00 each. We are now preparing the work, and hope to have it ready to deliver in July next. No money called for until the book is ready.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. AG'T.

A NEW BOOK.
"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.,

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express

O, WORLD OF PURE GLORY.

S. S. BREWER.

O, world of pure glory! I long to behold thee,
Where sin, death and sorrow, can enter no more;
Where all are immortal, 'neath heaven's bright portal,
And voices of melody cease nevermore.

CHORUS.

O glorious choir whom God shall inspire!
While anthems of glory gush forth from each soul,
Till valleys and hills, and streamlets and rills
Re-echo the joy, and the praise as it rolls.

O glory eternal! in groves ever vernal,
The warblers of paradise chant in thy trees;
While angels are singing, and melody ringing
Is wafted in concert afar on the breeze.

O city transcendent with glory resplendent!
Thy gates and thy walls are all sparkling with gems;
And holy of ages are shouting God's praises,
While waving their palms and their bright diadems.

Old time, hasten swiftly! Lord Jesus, come quickly!
Come, ransom thy jewels from death's dark domain;
Translate them to glory, immortal before thee,
Come, King in thy beauty, eternally reign.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

DR. KENEALY'S OPINION OF THE TIMES WE LIVE IN.

One of the greatest trials ever known is being summed up. It is the trial of a gentleman who has put himself forward as Sir Roger Tichborne, and on the ground of his being a descendant, claiming the estates of the Tichborne family. He has been arrested by the country, and is being tried as an impostor. Already the court have sat to hear evidence for one hundred and forty-three days. They have heard prolix speeches of advocates and testimony of witnesses, from the grave to the merry, and now Dr. Kenealy, Q. C., councillor for the defense, is drawing the matter to an end. The justice of this case has been to many an insult to that noble word. Nearly every objection offered by the defense to the undue pressure of witnesses has been overruled against the arrested; while nearly every objection of the prosecution has been favorably entertained and conceded. Surely there never was a much worse case, as the learned advocate for the defense is pointing out. Hear some of his sentences and remarks:—

"I don't hesitate to say, after the most full and ample consideration of the entire of this prosecution, that it is the worst, the wickedest, and the most profligate public prosecution that has ever disgraced this country since the days of the Stuarts; and I hope to establish that proposition with such perfect clearness that every one of you —and every one who reads the records of this trial—will be convinced of its perfect and absolute venality. We who contemplate the trials in the days of old, look back with wonder and astonishment at some of the most dreadful judicial mistakes which, I am sorry to say, have ever disgraced the annals of England. We see traced on those imperishable records how some of the noblest men in the country were put down by wicked judges, and unprincipled witnesses; we can see how from the first this animus of the wicked judges was brought to bear. Few of us can understand how it was that wickedness of that kind could prevail. Looking at these things in the present light, we are filled with amazement that a man like Coke should get up and call one of the greatest men, Sir Walter Raleigh, a spirit of hell. We see counsel for the Crown of the present day resorting to artifices. We see witness after witness getting up and giving evidence which we in subsequent times have no doubt was perjury, and things have occurred here which in future ages will appear the same. Of course, the fairness and impartiality of English tribunals is the wonder and admiration of the world. In ordinary trials between man and man, between Tomkins and Smith, or between Brown and Robinson, all the decisions are given with perfect fairness. The jury come into the box without knowing anything of either party, and caring nothing except for the interests of justice. And the verdict which is pronounced satisfies all except the losing party; nay, in the long run, even the losing party regards the verdict as right. Even the worst judges who ever existed—the notorious Jeffreys and Scroggs, who have disgraced their country —no doubt in ordinary trials acted with perfect honesty and impartiality. But it is great trials which test what our tribunals are. In great trials, such as this, there are influences which do not exist in ordinary trials. There are influences of politics which sometimes prevail—there are influences of fashion, which oftentimes prevail. So it is that when we read the records of these trials of the past, we can easily understand for ourselves why so many outrages upon all laws and upon all the principles of justice took place. I hope to be able to satisfy you that the way in which this prosecution has been conducted is as bad and as black as any of the worst prosecutions of former times. . . .

This is the first and I hope it will be the last trial of the kind. If it succeeds in its unholy ends it may be but the beginning of evils; but if you crush the serpent in the egg, we shall be saved for the rest of our lives from witnessing again what we have lately witnessed in this court. One of the greatest rules of the Temple of Justice in this country has been systematically set aside by this prosecution. It is a maxim of our law that the innocence of a man is to be assumed until his guilt is proved. The maxim of the prosecution appears to have been just the reverse. From the beginning to the close, that has seemed to be the secret undercurrent which has directed every act of the prosecution. I believe it will fail, and I call on you to make it fail. So jealous are our ancestors of the rights and privileges of jurymen that we find Lord Hale saying:

'If there be eleven agreed, and but one dissenting, who says he will rather die in prison, yet the verdict shall not be taken by eleven; no, nor yet the refuser fined or imprisoned; and therefore where such a verdict was taken by eleven, and the twelfth fined and imprisoned, it was upon great advice ruled the verdict was void, and the twelfth man delivered, and a new venire awarded (41, assiz. 11), for men are not to be forced to give their verdict against their judgment (2 Hales, P. C. 297); and in page 309 the Chief Justice adds: 'It may be the twelfth was in the right, yet, howsoever his conscience is not in this manner to be forced; and therefore former precedents of this kind have been disallowed.'

I did not think that in this nineteenth century such an outrage could have been perpetrated as the way in which my witnesses were treated. I was willing to believe that the prosecution was better than I had imagined. These persons may have been misled by my forbearance, and I think some hesitation should have been shown before such robust boldness was displayed towards my witnesses. I regard it as a libel on the administration of all justice. I should have thought reflection on their own conduct would have led to a different result. I should have thought that men who relied on forgery and perjury, who relied on documents which did not simply constitute forgery, but forgery supported by perjury—I should have thought that with such a blot on their escutcheon, they would have exhibited some sense of decency and shame. If I had been placed in such circumstances I should have followed a different course from Mr. Hawkins. Bribery has been added to the list of their enormities, because giving Captain Oates 2£ 2s. a day in a situation under the Admiralty I call bribery, as I do giving Charles Orton 75£. a year."

The talented pleader further adds: "Counsel have treated the whole or the greater part of my evidence as a species of systematic imposture." Thus is justice administered in our land. But when our Jesus comes he will hold the balances evenly, and wealth and fashion and fame shall in vain conspire to make him deviate from righteousness. Dr. Kenealy rightly says of this time: "Gentlemen, we live in a troublous era. We pride ourselves upon living in an age of superior thought to that which existed in former ages. We live in an age of revolutions. We see before us thrones toppling, tribunals falling, and the Triple Crown itself is in the dust." Only when the crown is on the right and royal brow will the trouble come to a perpetual end; and the sooner this is accomplished, the better.

WHAT ENGLAND PAYS FOR ROYALTY.

Royalty is a thing that Americans do without. Doubtless it is an expensive institution. But it has its advantages as well as its disadvantages. The "little bill" for last year is tacked on to this letter. It amounts to about $2,585,000. The following are the items:—

"The official account recently issued of the public expenditures in the financial year 1872–3 gives the usual statement of the year's issue of £385,000 from the Exchequer for the payment of the 'Civil List,' fixed by Parliament at Her Majesty's accession to the throne:—£60,000 for Her Majesty's privy purse; £131,260 for salaries of the Household; £172,500 for expenses of the Household; £13,200 for Royal bounty, alms, and special services; and £8,040 unappropriated. Technically, there is added £21,910, the present amount of the pensions granted for merit, limited to £1,200 a year; but substantially the amount of the Civil List is £385,000, and the nett income derived from the Crown lands in the year was £375,000, which last sum was paid into the Exchequer for the public service. The annuities paid to the Royal Family in the year were twelve:—£40,000 to the Prince of Wales; £10,000 to the Princess of Wales; £15,000 to the Duke of Edinburgh; £15000 to Prince Arthur; £8,000 to the Princess Royal, now Crown Princess of Prussia; £6,000 to the Princess Alice, now Princess Louis of Hesse; £6,000 to the Princess Helena, now Princess Christian; £6,000 to the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne); £6,000 to the Duchess of Cambridge; £12,000 to the Duke of Cambridge; £3,000 to Princess Augusta, Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz; and £5,000 to the Princess Mary, Princess of Teck. These annuities amount in all to £132,000, a sum larger than in the preceding year, owing to the annuities to Prince Arthur and the Princess Louise having now for the first time come into payment for the entire year." W. K.

THAT FUNERAL SERMON.

HENRY PRATT.

Christmas was not all festive, though the Republican said, in view of the programme for the day, that "the social and human aspects entirely overshadowed the religious and divine." One family, at least, had sorrow instead of joy, and we sympathized with those mourners, and attended the funeral.

The speaker misrepresented things terribly. He said that it had been announced to the inhabitants of Springfield that such a man* "was dead." He said, "He is not dead." It was also announced "that he would be buried to-day." He said: "He was not to be buried to-day; he has gone into the spirit land. The form before us served its purpose for the spirit while it could be of use to it; then, like the chicken, it threw off its shell that had entangled, and to some extent imprisoned it, and was ushered into a higher life and liberty. The land to which he had gone was not a myth, and unreal, but the walks were as substantial as the walks of this city; its mountains as real, its lakes as beautiful, and its green, grassy carpet more lovely than earth ever knew.

"Once," said he, "I was on an island, and death came with its dark oarsmen, and muffled oars, and bore off my friends, one by one, to the misty fogs out of sight, and left me to mourn. But I left that island, and now to me death comes like a kind friend in beauteous form, to waft my friends to the spirit land. Not out of sight, and in the fog, but in sight, and amid beautiful fields, and lovely groves, and on mountain tops, I see them still. To you who know not these things, it is strange; but to me, who have clasped their friendly hands, and listened to their sweet voices, it is real. Do not sorrow as those that have no hope. Mr. —— was a temperate man, and that means more than the disuse of ardent spirits; it means the laying aside that other poison, tobacco. He was honest, charitable, and upright. And it was said he was a singular man. He dared to believe and speak his belief, though he stood alone. He once was an orthodox man, and worshipped with them; and when he changed his belief he did not play the hypocrite, but avowed it. He no longer depended upon a Christ for pardon, or his trumpet, or a thousand trumpets for life, or upon the Jewish Jehovah, but upon the eternal principles of the immortality of the soul. Not a life merely for the bigot that bows to his selfish creeds, but to the lowest of the human race. They may not attain to so high a plane at first, but they will be in a condition of development; otherwise that God who had their destiny in his hands would be barbarous, and unworthy of recognition by the vilest creature on earth. To the companion of our friend let me say, your husband has not gone. He will ever be with you to minister not only in the things of this life, but will elevate you more and more to the higher life to which he has attained. Children, your father has not gone, but will ever watch over you and care for your wants until your conflicts shall be through in this physical form, and then you will greet him again in that spirit land, where ages on ages you may joy and rejoice together."†

He said "Job was a singular man, and accepted as a good man by all; yet Job never attended a christian service or a Jewish ritual." Strange, thought I, "when these services were instituted hundreds of years after Job died." There is one thing the Devil never tries to improve upon, and that is the inheritance of the saints. He either makes it all a mystery, or it is real mountains and beautiful fields and rocks. Why spirits like to sit on rocks to view that beautiful scenery I cannot tell. We may know hereafter.

* I have thought best to suppress the name.

† I quote from memory.

I HAVE known a great many people to be very sorry for harsh words spoken and unkind acts done; but I have yet to see the first person who regrets that he spoke too gently or acted too kindly. "A soft answer turneth away wrath."

REFORMATION.

L. BOUTELL.

I have wanted to endorse Bro. Stewart's reform practice among our churches and ministry. For weeks I had been trying to write on the subject, but for want of time did not. I was pleased to have it come out, and I heartily endorse the principle of action suggested. It will be found, when carried out, beneficial to the cause of truth.

In the first place the preacher could concentrate his labors in a given field, and among a given people. He then would be more interested in their needs, and could do much more and better for them than he could under other circumstances. It is not supposable that a preacher could go to a place and stay one Sabbath, or one evening, and understand the needs of the people as he ought, in order to build them up, or create an interest among them. He must know their wants, to feel that responsibility and solicitude that will make him efficient to labor for their welfare. It would save one-third of the expense for preaching, and that third under the present arrangement comes out of the preacher.

For example: since the first week in Nov. I have labored where I have been sent for to preach, and have received as compensation forty-five dollars, and have paid for car and stage fare twenty-three dollars. This shows its workings. It taxes the preacher wrongfully. But how can he help it? You write him to come and preach. He hears the call; asks no questions about money; says, "I'll be there if the Lord will,"—supposing he is going among a people that have learned the golden rule. He has a free time. All are interested and benefitted. The people urge him to come again in four weeks; he says "Yes." They give him a roll of scrip; he counts it when he gets home; finds three or four dollars for his labor, with wants pressing, and high prices for all he needs to sustain himself and his family.

The church should understand that any acceptable preacher whom they send for to come among them is worth to them (or his services) as much as the hod carrier or the wood chopper. And if he leaves with less, he makes sacrifice of so much for the cause he loves. All see the difficulty, and the minister feels it deeply. But how can it be remedied? The churches can do it if they will take the matter into consideration, and act accordingly. It will take time to bring it about. But where the people can secure a consistent, judicious preacher to be with them, all or a part of the time permanently, and look after their interests and the cause in that vicinity, they will be wise to secure him.

I hope all those with whom we labor, looking for and loving the coming of the Lord, will remember this scripture:—"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." "Bring all your tithes into the storehouse"; and this does not mean words simply, but put a part of your possessions, or available means, into the Lord's treasury. This will please God, and insure the blessing. For "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

But you say, The preacher must have faith in God, and trust him for support; and I say, Yea, verily, for this seems to be his only dependence when the laborer is not considered worthy of his hire. I never have made merchandise of preaching the good news, and I never want merchandise made of it. Where the cry is made, we will go and do our best; and we hope you will remember the preacher, and do as the Lord wills and the cause demands.

"THE SMELL OF POWDER."

TO YOUNG PREACHERS.

R. OWEN.

Some time since I was saddened while hearing a venerable brother in the ministry, who had been more than thirty years in the service, state publicly in the hearing of thousands, "The people say they want men to fight these battles who have smelled powder." I have no idea he meant to convey the impression that we who have never been thus favored (if "smelling powder" consists in being in time movements of the past, which, I suppose, was the true import), were therefore of no service, and had better engage in some other pursuit; though some of us had such thoughts.

I am aware that oftentimes a very trifling utterance is much magnified by our "common enemy." When young preachers are partially unsettled respecting their calling, and the popular demand for their labor, and many are driven to other pursuits, and some to labor among other denominations, from the fact, there is so little sympathy extended them from the older brethren in the ministry —who I sometimes think forget themselves were ever weak, and small,—and also from the membership who pass the worthy young preachers by, no matter what their character and life may be, for the simple reason they have never "smelled powder."

Now I understand the "battle is not ours, but the Lord's;" and he selects such men to fight his battles as he sees are possessed of requisite qualities for the service. I am well aware, both from observation and revelation, "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called;" and while I would not for a moment detract from the respect and consideration which the fathers are entitled to, both on account of their superior wisdom, and also from their labors of love, yet I must believe others have been "called," as well as they; and should they be despised because they have not "smelled powder?"

Every well ordered army is constantly maintained in effective service by a system of recruiting; and the veterans are supposed to feel an interest in the drill, uniform, and efficiency of the recruits; and the people are constantly called upon to furnish them. So in the army of the Lord. The veterans formerly had feeling for those who came to their side to engage in the contest for victory against the hosts of Satan, and of sin. And the church used to pray, "Send forth more laborers into the harvest." But not much of late.

"My brethren, these things ought not so to be." The young preacher of to-day, upon whom God has laid the burden of labor for souls, must "run a gauntlet," and if "smart" enough to win for himself "golden opinions everywhere," he is sought after, and provided for, even though he have not "smelled powder." But the young man of ordinary ability, humble, unassuming, and without special gifts, must feel deeply God has called him to endure what he must endure in the work to which he devotes his service. To all such I would say, "Go forward." There may be battles for you to fight yet. "Powder for you to smell." Do not fly the ranks. You are needed. Live where you can obtain orders for yourselves directly from the "Captain," and when victory is won you may wear the crown.

WE WANT A PASTOR.

R. OWEN.

We need a Pastor. He who comes
And preaches for us now and then,
Who seldom sees us in our homes,
Perhaps comes once, and not again,
Fails to take hold of all our need;
He does not, cannot know our case;
He may preach well, and sow good seed,
And we feel glad to see his face;

But he is not a Pastor. No.
He does not feel a special care;
And has appointments published, so
He cannot tarry anywhere.
We need a Pastor; one to love,
To feel a special interest in;
Some one to stay, and not remove
When confidence shall well begin.

He needs be a peculiar man,
Or we shall not unite on him;
Our people every preacher scan,
And are possessed of many a whim.
He must not be too young, of course;
Nor should he be advanced in years;
Must be familiar with the source
Of all our people's hopes and fears.

A man of faith he ought to be,
And live a life above reproach.
To practice strict economy,
Nor on his credit e'er encroach.
His family must needs be small,
Content to live on humble fare;
And he, not subject to a "call,"
Nor free to labor everywhere.

Must never murmur at his lot,
Be really free from all complaint;
When duty calls be on the spot,
Always to pray and never faint.
And if he preaches as he ought,
We'll make him up a little purse;
Expense for travel will be nought,
He might go farther and fare worse (!)

STABILITY OF TRUTH.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. . . .The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever." Isa. 40: 6, 8.

Many years ago, the Rev. B. W. was the pastor of a church in one of our New England towns, and he was widely known and highly esteemed. But especially by his own church and people was this faithful man of God regarded as one of the wise, who are "set for the defense of the gospel," and who shall eventually "shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever and ever." For more than half a century Bro. W. labored for the good of the church, and saw many turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto the way of righteousness, through God's blessing upon his labors.

But a new generation coming upon the stage, with new views, and with worldly wisdom, pride, fashion, love of applause, and that "carnal mind . . . which is not subject to the law of God," brought into the church so much of a "new element," that the pastor and some of the older members protested against it, but without avail, only so far as to cause a separation of the popular and fashionable part of the church, who withdrew and built a church edifice of their own, and employed one of those modern teachers who have "itching ears."

Thus matters stood for awhile. The old meeting house, and the old minister, and the old religion were all going down together. So said some of the members of the fashionable new church.

So far as the old meeting house was concerned, that was going down surely; but there was enterprise, and life, and ability enough left to build a new house for the remnant of the old church. And when that house was ready for dedication the old minister was there. Venerable not only from age, but from all that can exalt and ennoble one of God's chosen servants, he arose in the pulpit. He was about to perform his last work; he was then ready to lay down his armor, and rest, "till the end should be." He spoke of the separation, and of the changes that had occurred, and expressed his thankfulness for the privilege of living to see the new house finished, and also for being enabled to preach the first sermon therein.

Said he, "Some have said that the old meeting house, and the old minister, and the old religion would all go down together." Then with a spirit and power that were irresistible, he proceeded. "Yes, the old meeting house, and the old minister were made to perish; but the old religion will stand forever." "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."

PEARLS GATHERED AT OCEAN GROVE.

We are indebted to Mrs. Mary D. James for the following string of "pearls" quaint, characteristic, and attended with that peculiar unction which those who heard her, will remember as belonging to the testimony of

AMANDA SMITH.

She said: "I used to ask God to give me a great blessing a wonderful amount of grace, and I expected to get in a large quantity all at once, so that I should have stock laid in for the future. I asked for patience, and I expected to get it just like a great big lump of gold so that it would last me for a long while; but I was wonderfully disappointed. The Lord didn't give it to me that way at all; but he gave it to me just as I needed it. When the trials came, there came the grace required to meet them. When the duties came, then the strength was given to do them, and so day by day I have proved the truth of the promise, 'As thy days so shall thy strength be.'"

GIVING UP ALL TO WORK FOR JESUS.

Speaking of being called to evangelistic labors, she said: "I hadn't much to give up, that's true, only two wash-tubs, a washboard, and four smoothing irons; but that was as much for me to give as a good many thousands of dollars' worth for some folks—because it was my all. It was what I had to depend on for a living. I lived by washing and ironing. But the Lord said go, and do my work, and I'll take care of you; and so he has taken care of me—blessed be his name! I've never wanted anything but what it has been given me. He supplies all my need through his dear children; and I don't have to ask them for it either.

Soon after I started out, a good christian lady said to me, Now I think you had better have a paper and go round and ask for assistance as you are going to spend your time in working for the good cause. I know a good many who would be glad to help you. So the lady wrote something on a paper and told me where to go. I kind o' felt that it wasn't the best way to do, but I went to a good lady that I knew and handed the paper to her. She looked at it and said, "Yes. I'll give thee something, Amanda; but does thee think this is the best way for thee to do?" I said, No, I don't; and I didn't much want to do it. Now I won't ask another one—I'll just trust in God. From that time I've never asked for anything, and all my need has been supplied."

WHAT PERFECT LOVE HAD SAVED HER FROM.

After having spoken of several things which she had been saved from by the power of perfect love—she said it had saved her from the desire to be white. It used to cause her great trouble that her skin was black. She thought she might be somebody in the world if she was only white—but she must be looked down upon and be nobody, and she grieved and fretted about it, until her heart was washed from all impurity, and made white by the blood of the Lamb; and then she was perfectly satisfied to be black outside, because she was white inside, and Jesus could look into her heart and see his image there. That was enough. She had never since felt a sad thought about her color or her situation in life. It was all right; she wouldn't have it different if she could, and all her thought and care was how she could please God and do the work he had given her to do."

[A young lady listening to this recital said to one sitting beside her, "Oh, I wish I could enjoy what that woman does! I would be willing to be as black as she is if I could only be as good." Her friend replied—"You can be just as good as she is, and be what you are."]

KEEPING STILL.

At another time, Sr. Smith said: "When I was asking the Lord to write his law in my heart, he showed me that I must keep right still before him, if I would have his law written there. You know if you were going to write on a piece of paper, or anything else, you could not write if it was being moved about all the time; it must be kept still and not be moving. Just so I found I must be perfectly quiet if the Lord would write on my heart. The cares of life, and the opinions of the world, its smiles or its frowns, its joys or sorrows, must not move me. I must have one object in view—think of nothing else—care for nothing besides—be steady and quiet before God; then he wrote his law on my heart, and it is fixed; yes, my heart is fixed to do his will."

From her own heart-felt experience she could say, "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." That passage of God's word had a deeper meaning to her ever since she had a severe trial when the grace of meekness was tested to the uttermost.

Traveling on a railroad she was TREATED ROUGHLY BY THE CONDUCTOR, who required her to go into the smoking car. She had shown him her ticket, which entitled her to a seat in a first-class car. She said, "After leaving me, he sent a man to tell me I must go out of that car; and I said to him, 'I will wait until the conductor shall tell me to leave; he has seen my ticket, and I will stay here until he comes.' The report was given to the conductor, and immediately he came and seized me with great rudeness, and undertook to force me to leave the car. I told him that was unnecessary, I would go without force, and at once went into the smoking car. I thought it was very hard and cruel treatment; it hurt my feelings very much; but right away I began praying for the man, and kindest feeling toward him took possession of my heart; nothing like resentment was there; but pity and compassion for the poor sinner, and earnest desire for his salvation. The peace of God did indeed keep my heart and mind in Christ Jesus. I felt calm and happy.

Gems.

— It is good in a fair morning to think of that storm that may rise ere night, and to enjoy both good and evil with religious fear.

— As Christ was both a lamb and a lion, so is every christian; a lamb, for patience in suffering and innocency of life; a lion, for boldness in his innocence.

— Covetous men need neither clock nor bell to awaken them; their desires make them restless. O that we could with as much eagerness seek the true riches, which only can make us happy.

— It has ever been seen, that the false worshippers of God have made more pompous show, and fairer flourishes of their piety and religion, than the true.

— The hopes of the wicked fail them when they are at the highest; whereas the children of God find those comforts in extremity, which they had not dared even to expect.

— When the mouth prays, man hears; when the heart, God hears. Every good prayer knocks at heaven for a blessing; but an importunate prayer pierces it, and makes way for itself into the ears of the Almighty.

— He was never a good man that amends not; for, if he were good, he must needs desire to be better.

— Wicked men never see fairer prospects, than when they are upon the threshhold of destruction.

— The man that will be lifting up himself, in the pride of his heart, from under the foot of God, is justly trodden in the dust.

— In this troublesome wilderness, we are all stung by that fiery and old serpent; to the Savior we must look to be healed.

— Who can marvel to see the best virtues counterfeited by wicked men, when he sees the devil emulating the miraculous power of God?

— There is no true life, but the life of faith.

— Forwardness argues insufficiency.

WORSE THAN THAT.

G. W. STETSON.

Bad as the theory of the "visions" may be, that a "knowledge of the high priest's change of place from the holy into the holiest on the tenth day of the seventh month in 1844, is necessary, (according to the Review), in order to be benefitted by his ministrations," that is not the worst of it; for the law required the high priest to "bring the blood of the sin offering for the people within the vail, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy seat, . . . and before the mercy seat, . . . seven times, "Lev. 16: 14–16, without which there is no atonement made, no covenant mediated, no advocacy (intercession) "for the saints," and no saints to intercede for. Now Paul shows, in Heb. 9: 3–5, that the "mercy seat" was within the second vail, or in the "holiest of all." Consequently, if Christ did not enter there until 1844, as that lame, weak, blind theory claims, then nobody was saved until 1844 years after Christ's death, resurrection, and ascension; and very few since; for not many have had "a knowledge of the change," and never will; for no such change transpired, or ever will. Is it not strange that sensible people will be so duped by Satan's wiles?

ALLEGORY.

Two boys were required to take a journey. A certain king had sent for them to his palace. The journey was very long, and required years to perform it. The way was one they had never travelled, though they had heard much about it. It was a very dangerous road; there were pits into which the traveller might fall, and precipices over which he might be dashed to pieces. There were also traps and snares near the wayside, laid there by the wicked people who lived in the country through which the way passed. Robbers lurked in their hiding places near the road. The travellers were safe while they kept in the way, for it was the "King's Highway," and was well protected; but as soon as a traveller left the highway he was exposed to all these dangers.

These dangers were made greater by being hidden. The careless traveller, wandering from the right path, would not know that the trap or snare was near him until he was caught in it. Each pit was so carefully covered over that he would not know of it until he broke through and fell into it. The edges of the precipices were concealed by high plants and bushes, on which grew gaudy flowers, and the thoughtless traveller, allured by their beauty, would not know of his peril, until, some tuft of grass giving way beneath his feet, he was precipitated to ruin. Besides these there were many other dangers.

This was a perilous journey for two little boys; but the king knew its dangers and sent an angel (for angels were the ministers and servants of this great king,) to convey them safely to his palace.

The little boys started on their journey. The morning was very bright; the sun was shining, the birds were singing, and the flowers everywhere were blooming by the wayside. For sometime the little pilgrims saw none of the dangers of which they heard so much, and it seemed that the counsel and protection of their guide was not necessary; but she smiled upon them so sweetly, and was such pleasant company, that they were glad of her presence.

The angel seemed to know the children's thoughts, and when they secretly desired to leave the path, and pluck the flowers and fruits that grew in the fields and orchards on either side, she would read their wishes, and warn them of the deadly poison those fruits contained, and the sharp thorns that grew among the flowers, and the snares and pitfalls into which they were meant to allure them; and also how they would grieve the king by going out of the way. Thus she would keep them from going astray.

As these little boys pursued their journey, and became more used to these things, they thought they could get some of the flowers, without being hurt by the thorns, or falling into snares; and one more bold than the other, determined he would try. Their guide was not allowed to restrain them by force, but she remonstrated so strongly, and looked so angry that at first he was afraid to go. But at length he left the path, went and plucked one of the beautiful flowers, and in high glee, was just starting back with his prize, when he found his feet were fast in a trap.

The little boy now wished he had obeyed the angels voice, and not gone astray; but after much suffering and many tears, he succeeded, happily, in getting at liberty, and returned, promising the angel never to disobey her again. He soon forgot the sad lesson, however, and went astray again and again, and though he often suffered from the snares into which he fell, and as often promised to be better, he constantly grew worse. The angel grew weary of warning him, and at length, when he disobeyed, she would simply stand, look sad, and weep.

What became of this disobedient boy was never fully known, except that he never arrived at the king's palace. Probably he wandered so far away that he could never return to the king's highway, or fell over some precipice or into some pit, or else was taken by the robbers of the country and destroyed.

The other little pilgrim, having learned from the sad fate of his disobedient companion, kept close by the angel's side. He found more fragrant and beautiful flowers, and sweeter fruits in the way than the other had ever found out of it, and escaped all those perils from which he had suffered so much.

By and by, after a delightful journey, the traveller and his angel guide reached the city of the king. They were freely admitted through the gate of shining gold, led to the Royal palace, and into the presence of the king, who smiled upon the little boy and said, "Well done." And forthwith a crown of gold was placed upon his head, as one of the king's obedient and happy children. Did you know either of these little children? Have you heard of this great king, the city in which he dwells, and the way that leads thereto? And can you tell me the angel's name?—Wayside.

HE COULD BE TRUSTED.

Alfred was missing one night about sunset. Mother was getting anxious, for she always wished him to be home early. A neighbor, coming in, said a number of boys had gone to the river to swim, and he thought it likely Alfred was with them.

"No," said the mother, "he promised me he would never go there without my leave, and he always keeps his word."

But seven o'clock came, then eight, and mother was still listening for Alfred's step; but it was half past eight before his shout and whistle were heard when he ran in at the gate.

"Confess now," said the neighbor, "that you have been to the river with the other boys, and so kept away till late."

How the boy's eyes flashed, and the crimson mounted to his cheeks!

"No, sir? I promised my mother that I would never go there without her leave, and do you think I would tell a falsehood? I helped James to find the cows that had strayed in the wood, and didn't think I should be so late."

James coming up the street just then, came in to say he was afraid they had been alarmed; he and Alfred had been so far in the wood it made them late in getting home.

"I think," said the neighbor, turning to the mother as he took his hat to go home, "there is a comfort in store for you, by him. Such a boy as that will make a noble man."—Ex.

IF you cannot be a great river, bearing great vessels of blessings to the world, you can be a little spring by the dusty wayside of life, singing merrily all day and all night, and giving a cup of cold water to every weary thirsty one who passes by.

"I AM glad I went to Sabbath school; for there I learned the sweetest verse in the Bible," said a poor little orphan. "It was this: 'When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up.' And I know it's true," she said.—Well Spring.

HOW TO EAT.

After twenty-five years of special observation and much experimenting, we are most fully persuded that a very large amount of physical and mental suffering might be easily avoided if the people would eat and drink to the glory of God; that is, eat what is healthful, at proper times, in a proper manner, and in proper quantities. When we consider how people abuse their stomachs, it is no wonder that we can very seldom find a perfectly healthy person.

We have not taken up our pen now to say must on the subject, but to give simply one important rule to be observed by those who wish to receive the greatest benefit from their food; and that is, eat SLOWLY. Masticate the food till it is a complete pulp, and moisten it entirely with saliva, instead of drinks of any kind. Doing so, one is less likely to overeat. The best way is to let the judgment decide before a mouthful is taken how much food is needed, and then eat it as slowly as possible. If we eat properly, we shall feel no inconvenience, or load in the stomach, after the meal is taken; but a cheerful stimulus, producing a love for work, mental or physical. M. G.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

Perhaps not the least advantage which is derived from muscular, active exercise, as opposed to passive exercise—by which we refer to a ride in a carriage, or a sail in a vessel, in which latter case the abdominal muscles are the only ones actively exercised—is cleanliness. We mention this as it has been little insisted on by the advocates of gymnastic training. It belongs rather, perhaps, to a treatise on medicinal than on athletic gymnastics; but the two are at the present day, as we have said, happily incorporated. A microscope will show the millions of drains with which the skin is perforated, for the sake of voiding effete matter. This effete matter can only be thrown off by perspiration, produced by exercise. If it is not thrown off, it is absorbed into the system, and diseases, particularly consumption, and premature death are the result. The result is produced by the canals of the skin becoming clogged, which not only prevents the refuse matter from coming out, but also prevents oxygen, which is essential to life, from coming in. We do not breathe with the lungs only, consuming carbon and other matter, and renewing the blood with oygen as it passes through them. The skin also is a respiratory organ; some animals have no lungs, and breathe entirely with the skin; others, with a portion of the skin modified into gills, or rudimentary lungs.

In animals of a higher grade, though the lungs are the instruments principally devoted to this function, the skin retains it still to such an extent that to interfere with its pores is highly dangerous; but to arrest their operation, fatal. The breathing of the skin may be easily proved by the simple experiment of placing the hand in a basin of cold water, when it will be soon covered by minute bubbles of carbonic acid. But a more complete and scientific proof is afforded by inserting it in a vessel of oxygen, when the gas will, after a short interval of time, be replaced by carbonic acid. "We all know," says Dr. Brereton, "from daily experience, the intimate sympathy which exists between the skin and lungs, and when we are walking fast, how much more easily we get along after having broken out into a perspiration; if we are riding, our horse freshens up under the same condition." In these homely words, he is indirectly proving the chief sanitary characteristic of medicinal gymnastics.

We have most of us heard of the story of the unfortunate child who, to add solemnity and symbolic happiness to the inauguration of Leo X. as Pope of Rome, was gilded over at Florence, to represent the Golden Age. The career of that child so conditioned was brilliant, but brief. It, of course, died in a few hours. One of the reasons of the greater danger of extensive burns or scalds compared with others smaller, though deeper, is the fact that the former exclude a greater surface of skin from the oxygen of the air. M. Fourcault, a distingushed French physiologist, whose admiration of science appears to have led him to care little for the infliction of torture on other animals than himself, sacrificed a great number of Guinea pigs, rabbits, and cats, by varnishing over the whole of their skin, contemplating with satisfaction the invariable result—death—as a demonstrative proof that the skin breathes. One word more.

It has been imagined that gymnastic exercise is exclusively profitable to the young. It is not so; it is of advantage, of great advantage likewise to the old. Young persons—we include, of course, women, and wish that calisthenics, which we suppose to be a species of female gymnastics, were more systematized and popular—need little exhortation to exercise, since, by nature, motion is their chief desire; but they stand in need of advice and moderation, since, as they do everything immoderately, so they are accustomed to take too much exercise, and of an improper character, a course of proceeding not without danger. On the contrary, with older men, the increasing weight of the body, and the loss of the so called "animal spirits," induces the desire of repose, and they need an increase of exercise beyond that which inclination enjoins on them. Thus they are brought within the province of the gymnastic code.—Cornhill Magazine.

TO THE PREACHERS OF "THE WORD."

MRS. S. L. REED.

Preach the Word! the harvest ripens!
Time is fleeting fast away;
Quickly buckle on the armor,
Ready for the battle fray.
Rough the road, and crosses many
In the path thy feet must tread;
Fearless, onward, christian soldiers,
Christ within and God o'erhead.

Preach the Word! 'tis thine to succor,
Thine to rescue from distress;
Thine to bring the heavenly message
By which all the earth are blest.
'Tis a great, a heavenly calling,
Hallowed by the Son of God;
Drinking from the self-same fountain,
Walking in the path he trod.

Preach the Word! 'tis sharp and mighty,
Powerful to undo the wrong;
Undermining Satan's stronghold,
Which has triumphed loud and long.
Men's traditions stand confounded,
Demons tremble at the sound,
Mighty Word! 't will wake creation
To the earth's remotest bound.

Preach the Word! and so divide it
That the precious truth may shine;
Let the word of life eternal
Round the human heart entwine.
Then "well done, thou faithful servant!"
We shall hear his voice proclaim;
Thine the kingdom, his the glory,
Filling all the earth's domain.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON AN ADVENTIST.

THE WORLD ON FIRE.

"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness."—2 PETER 3: 10, 11.

Men have frequently inferred liberty to sin from the apparent absence of God from the world. Because the Lord, in his infinite long-suffering, has suffered transgression to go for awhile unpunished, therefore they have wickedly said, "How doth God know? The Almighty doth not regard us. He will neither interfere to punish men nor to reward them, whether they break or keep his commandments." When for a long time no great changes have occurred in the world, no remarkable judgments, no visitations of famine, pestilence, or war, men are very apt to grow carnally secure, and to take license to sin from the merciful respite which ought to have led them to gratitude, and through gratitude to obedience. At certain periods it has seemed to the Most High to be imperatively necessary to send great calamities upon mankind lest pride, oppression, and profanity should cause society utterly to rot. The fall of dynasties, the overthrow of empires, devastating wars, and dire famines have been necessities of God's moral government, bits in men's mouths, bridles for their arrogance, checks to their licentiousness.

The Lord is slow to smite the wicked, for his tender mercy is great, and he delights not in the sufferings of men, and therefore he keeps his arrows in his quiver, and hangs up his bow; but, alas, men take advantage of his love to grow grossly sinful, and to blaspheme his name. Against this spirit the apostle is arguing in this chapter. The profanely secure had said, "Since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were; where then is the evidence of God's existence? The world goes on like a clock, needing no hand to move its wheels or guide its action. "There is no God," say they, "to interfere, and we may live as we list." "Nay," says the apostle, "but God has interfered;" and though he might have quoted a thousand lesser instances which I have already hinted at, he preferred to forego them for the present, and to put his finger upon the great event of the flood, and say, "Here at least God did interfere." He could no longer bear the transgressions of mankind, and therefore he pulled up the sluices of the great deep, and opened the floodgates of heaven. He bade the angry floods leap forth from their lairs, and they swallowed up the earth right speedily. Thus it is plain that all things have not continued in one course, there have been interpositions of divine justice. The apostle then tells the scoffer that there will be another interposition ere long; instead of water, fire shall be the instrument of destruction. God's mill grinds slowly, but it grinds to powder. Justice loiters to commune with mercy, but it speedily makes up for its lingering. Long is the blow withheld, but when it falls it cuts to the soul. God's wrath is long in kindling, but in the end it shall burn as an oven.

Let us turn our thoughts to THE LAST GENERAL CONFLAGRATION. . . .

In this epistle of Peter there is one truth very plainly taught, namely, that this present world is to be consumed by fire. We learn also that this conflagration will take place in connection with the judgment, for "the heavens and the earth which now are, are kept in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." The former destruction of the world by water was in consequence of sin, and was a declaration of God's wrath against it; it did not happen as an accident, or occur without design. Man sinned, was warned, and sinned again, until God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth. The amalgamation of the people of God with the world was the crowning offence of all, for "the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose;" thus were church and State set up, and the church and the world were blended, till the Lord's spirit was grieved, and would no longer strive with man. Floods of sin called for floods of destruction. So will it be with the last fire; it will not happen as an inevitable result of physical causes, but because God intends to purge this material world from all traces of sin. It has been defiled, and if ever he makes it into a new heaven and a new earth, he will cleanse it as by fire. . . .

Pliny was wont to say that it was a miracle that the world escaped burning for a single day, and I do not wonder at the remark, considering the character of the district in which he spent much of his time. In visiting the country around Naples, the same thought constantly occurred to me. Yonder is Vesuvius ready at any moment to vomit fire, and continually sending up clouds of smoke. Ascend the mountain side, clambering over ashes and masses of lava; all beneath you is glowing; thrust in your staff and it is charred. Then go across to the Solfatara on the other side of Naples, stand at the vent of that ancient volcano and listen to the terrible rumblings which attend the rush of steam and sulphur; then stamp your foot or dash a stone upon the ground, and hear how the earth resounds; it is evident that you are standing over a vast cavern. Look around you and remark how the earth steams with sulphureous exhalations. Observe also how the earth in some places has arisen and fallen, again and again. Down there at Puteoli in the Temple of Serapis there are pillars which have sunk below the tide mark, and then have risen above it several times, as you can see for yourself by the mark of the sea-worms. In a single night vast hills have risen in one place like bubbles upon the baker's dough, while in other localities there have been equally sudden subsidings of the surface. Yet this volcanic region around Naples is but one of the many ventholes of the great fires which are in the bowels of the earth; three hundred or more burning mountains have already vomited flame.

According to the belief of many geologists, the whole centre of the earth is a mass of molten matter, and we live upon a thin crust which has cooled down, and is probably not so much as one hundred miles thick. When the miner descends no further than forty-five feet, he finds that the heat has increased one degree of Fahrenheit, so that it is easy to see how small a distance down the solid shell extends. There is no known rock which would not be entirely liquified by the heat produced at sixty miles depth. The probabilities are that the whole internal mass is in a liquid, and perhaps in a gaseous state. . . . Faraday said that there was enough latent electricity in a single drop of water for an ordinary flash of lightning. What reserves of destructive force there must be in and around the globe! God's dreadful armies lie in ambush everywhere; what if I say God's bodyguard is sleeping in his guard chamber? He has but to speak the word, and the servants of his omnipotence will rise, terrible in their destructive power. He spake to his ancients of the sea, and they marched in gigantic might till they had covered the mountain tops, and laid the race of men dead at their feet; let him speak to his ministers of flaming fire and they will at once subdue the globe by quenchless burnings. Earth is as a pile of wood, and the torch bearers stand ready to kindle it at any moment. There has always been a cry of fire among men, and the cry grows louder every century, for the burning is near.

But if there were no such arrangements as these, we should still be bound to believe what God has said; and it is his solemn declaration that the day shall come when the Lord Jesus Christ shall appear as a thief in the night, and the heavens, that is the atmosphere, shall pass away with a great noise; while the elements, or rudimentary substances of the globe, shall melt with fervent heat. The earth also, and the works that are therein, or thereon, shall be burned up.

We gather from our text that this will happen at a time when it will be very little expected. The dread hour will come as a thief in the night. It was not expected in Noah's day that the world would be destroyed. That was not for any want of warning, but because men could not conceive it possible. They argued against Noah, that all things had continued as they were from the days of their first father, Adam, and that so they would be. They thought Noah a fool for going up and down the world proclaiming an absurdity, and frightening people with a bugbear. Thus speak they now, when God's word declares that the whole world will be dissolved by fire. They reject the testimony, and continue in sin, in worldliness, and in rebellion against God; and so will they do up to the very moment when the shrill sound of the trump shall convince them that the Lord has come, and that the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men has arrived. No preaching will of itself avail to make ungodly men expect the coming of Christ, however clear, bold, consistent, and long continued it may be. The world is mad upon its idols, its ear is too dull to hear the truth; charm we never so wisely, this adder will never listen to warning. Men's eyes are blinded, they will not see, and so they hurry on to their doom, and then "when they shall say, 'Peace and safety,' sudden destruction shall come upon them, as pain upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape.

Although we read of the world being dissolved with fire, we are not told that it will be annihilated thereby. We know that nothing has been annihilated yet. No fire has yet been able to destroy a single atom of matter. There is upon the face of the earth at this moment just as much matter as when God created it; fire changes form, but does not obliterate substance. This world so far as we know, will not cease to be; it will pass through the purifying flame, and then it may be the soft and gentle breath of Almighty love will blow upon it and cool it rapidly, and the divine hand will shape it as it cools into a paradise more fair than that which bloomed upon the banks of Hiddekel.

We believe from various things which are hinted at in Scripture, though we would not dogmatize, that this world will be refitted and renovated; and in that sense we expect new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Luther used to say that the world is now in its working clothes, and that by-and-by it will be arrayed in its Easter garments of joy. One likes to think that the trail of the old serpent will not always remain upon the globe, and it is a cheering thought that where sin has abounded God's glory should yet more abound. I cannot believe in that world being annihilated upon which Jesus was born and lived and died. Surely an earth with a Calvary upon it must last on. Will not the blood of Jesus immortalize it? It has groaned and travailed with mankind, being made subject to vanity for our sake; surely it is to have its joyful redemption, and keep its Sabbaths after the fire has burned out every trace of sin and sorrow. . . .

The apostle has drawn PRACTICAL INFERENCES. "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" What does he mean by this? What connection can there be between the burning of the globe and holy conversation and godliness? The first connection is this. Our position as christians is at this moment like that of Noah before the destruction of the world by water. What manner of person ought Noah to have been? He said to himself, "This fair and beautiful world in which I dwell will soon be covered with the ooze and slime of a tremendous deluge."

He looked upon his fellow-men, and he thought and said of them, "Except these men fly to the ark, and are sheltered with me; they will every one of them be drowned." He saw them marrying and given in marriage, feasting and trifling at the very hour when the flood came, and he felt that if they would believe as he did they would find something other to do than to be engrossed in carnal pleasures. When he saw them heaping up money he would almost laugh, yet weep to think that they should hoard up gold to be submerged with themselves in the general flood. When men added to their estates acre after acre I have no doubt the patriarch said to himself, "The flood will sweep away all these landmarks, and as it carries away the owner so will it destroy all vestige of his barn and his farm and his fields." I should suppose such a man, daily expecting the rain to descend and the flood to burst up from beneath, would lead a life very free from worldliness, a life the very reverse of the rest of his fellow-men. They would reckon him to be very eccentric; they would be unable to understand him; and indeed his conduct would be such that no one could understand it except upon the theory that he believed in the destruction of all around him.

Now our life ought to be like that of Noah. Look around on the beauties of nature, and when you enjoy them say to yourself, "All these are to be dissolved, and to melt with fervent heat." Look up into the clear blue and think that yonder sky itself shall shrivel like a scroll, and be rolled up like a garment that has seen its better days and must be put aside. Look on your fellow-men, your own children, and your household, and those you pass in the street or meet with in transacting business, and say, "Alas, alas, unless these men, women, and children fly to Jesus and are saved in him, they will be destroyed with the earth on which they dwell, for the day of the Lord is surely coming, and judgment awaits the ungodly." This should make us act in a spirit the opposite of those who now say, "Go to, let us buy and sell and get gain; let us heap together treasure; let us live for this world; let us eat and drink, and be merry." They are of the earth, therefore is their conduct and conversation earthy. Therefore set loose by all things below the moon, and clutch as with the grasp of a dying man the things immortal and eternal which your God has revealed to you. Such conduct will separate you from your fellow-men. As there is down deep in your heart an object different from theirs, and as you set a different estimate on all things, your conduct will be wide apart from theirs; being swayed by different motives, your life will diverge from theirs, and they will misunderstand you, and while trying to find motives for you, as they do not know the true motive, they will impute ill motives to you. But so it must be. You must come out from among them, be separate and touch not the unclean thing; and the fact that all these things are to be dissolved should make it easy for you to do so, nay, natural for you to do so, as it must have made it both easy and natural to the patriarch Noah.

I will not, however, dwell longer upon that thought, but remark further that the nearness of the Lord as suggested by the fact that the world is to be destroyed, according to his Word, suggests holiness. The sinner finds a reason for sin when he says, "God is not here; everything goes on in the ordinary way; God does not care what men do." "No," says the apostle, "he is away, he is here, holding back the fire forces; he is reserving this world a little while, and by-and-by he will let the fires loose and the world will be destroyed. He is not far off; he is even at the door." If I give the Greek rendering. it should be, "All these things are dissolving;" they are even now beginning to dissolve; they are in the process of dissolution. God is close upon us, can you not hear his footfall?

Christ is returning; he is on his journey now; faith hears the tramp of his steeds as they hurry on the chariot of his vengeance. "Behold, I come quickly," is the word which rings over the mountains of division. The King is coming; he is coming to his throne and to his judgment. Now a man does not go up to a king's door, and there talk treason; and men do not sit in a king's audience chamber when they expect him every moment to enter, and there speak ill of him. The King is on his way, and almost here; you are at his door; he is at yours. What manner of people ought ye to be? How can ye sin against One who is so close at hand? How can ye rebel against One whose eyes of fire behold, and whose hand of vengeance is uplifted to smite the sinner? The words of the text are very forcible. The apostle says, "What manner of persons ought ye to be?" Remember he was talking to saints, and he teaches us that even saints ought to be more saintly than they are. He is not saying to the ungodly, "What manner of persons ought ye to be!" He might have so spoken; but with how much greater force does he address those who profess to be loved with the everlasting love of God, to have been bought with the precious blood of Jesus, to be affianced unto Christ in eternal wedlock, to be members of his body, part of himself. "What manner of persons ought ye to be?" He implies that they are not what they should be, and I am afraid there is no man of God but what will grant the truth of the implication in his own case.

We have not attained to what we ought to be, and I may say to the best child of God here this morning, "Dear brother, there is a yet beyond." Ay, brethren, and the text is so broad in its expression that it plainly teaches the limitless nature of christian holiness. "What manner of persons ought ye to be!" as if holiness had in it no Ultima Thule, no pillars of Hercules, beyond which the adventurous mariner might not go. There is a yet beyond for us all. If we are to be holy as God is, his is infinite holiness, and where can a limit be imagined? He does not say, "Ye ought to be kind, just, loving, prayerful, truthful," and the like, but as if he held up his hands in wonder, and could not express the obligations of the christian, he cries, "Because these things are all passing away, what manner of persons ought ye to be."

And then he goes on to specify two branches of holy life. "In all holy conversation," that is to say, all holy behavior towards men; "and godliness," that is, all pious dealing towards God. True religion by no means depreciates the duties of the second table of the law. Some professors think very little of the common virtues of daily life, but they err greatly, and will find themselves in an evil plight at last. My brother, if the grace you possess does not make you honest, God have mercy on you, and take such grace away from you. If you have a kind of grace which does not keep you chaste, and make your behavior decent; if you have a sort of grace which lets you cheat and lie, which allows you to take undue advantage in trade, away with such grace; it is the grace of the devil, but not the grace of God, and may you be saved from it. If our religion does not make us moral, it is a millstone about our necks to destroy us. If you have not reached morality, how can you dare to talk about holiness, which is a far higher and loftier thing? The best morality in the world will not prove a man to be a christian, but if a man has not morality, it proves that he is not a child of God.

And then as to God; the duties of the first table are not to be neglected. We are to fulfill all manner of godliness. God is to be worshiped by us devoutly, and we are to take pains to worship him in his own way. How many people have a kind of—what shall I call it?—a happy-go-lucky religion. Whatever their mother or their father was, that are they. A great many of you go to certain places of worship, not because you have ever inquired whether the sect you belong to is right or not, but because you have drifted that way, and there you stick. How few take the Bible and search for themselves; yet no man has obeyed God aright who has not done so. If I could not honestly say, "I am a member of this denomination because I have weighed the truths which are held by my brethren, and I believe them to be according to God's book," I could not feel that I had done right towards the Most High. The idea that there are good people in all sects is well enough, but a great many have perverted it into an excuse for never caring what God's truths or ordinances are. Rest assured that he who neglects one of the least of Christ's ordinances and teaches men so, the same shall be least in the kingdom of heaven. Every truth is important. Trifling with conscience is the sin of the present age. Men have even come to occupy pulpits in churches when they do not believe the fundamental doctrines of the church. We have heard them even claim a right to retain their pulpits after they have denied the doctrines of the denomination to which they belong. From any power to believe in such a conscience may God deliver every one of us. Be right even in little things. Be precise; you serve a precise God. Charity towards others is one thing, laxity for yourselves is quite another thing. Believe that your brother is conscientious though he may be in error, but as for yourself use your conscience, and practice your judgment in the careful study of truth, and then whatever your conclusions, carry them out at all hazards; though you should lose everything thereby, you will lose nothing in the long run. If you count the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt, you have made a wise choice, and will rejoice in having made it.

Oh, when I think that all I see about me is to be consumed, there remains nothing worth living for but to glorify God. If we were to live here forever, and this world were all, we might perhaps think it some gain to sin; but if we are soon to pass away, and all around us is to dissolve in smoke, there is nothing for it if we are wise but to do our duty in the station in which God has placed us, both toward God and man, resting in the precious blood of Christ for our pardon, and in his righteousness for our acceptance; for these things will endure when we are dead, according as it is written, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, yea, thus saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

The evanescence of all things around us suggests our looking away to eternal things. Mr. Wesley once said, "Now, if I knew I should die to-morrow morning, I would do exactly what I have planned to do. I should take the class-meeting at such an hour, preach at such an hour, and be up at such a time in the morning to pray." That good man's life was spent in prospect of sudden departure, and it was therefore active and holy. Is ours the same? The motive for holiness becomes stronger still if the thought is not merely that I shall die, but that all these things around me shall be dissolved. That breezy down, that towering hill, yonder lofty trees and this overhanging cliff, these rich meadows, the ripening harvest, all, all, will in a moment be on a blaze. Am I ready to be caught away to be with my Lord in the air? Or shall I be left to perish amidst the conflagration? How ought I to live? How ought I to stand as it were on tip-toe, ready when he shall call me, to be away up into the glory, far off from this perishing world? It makes us look upon all these things in a different light, and upon eternal things with a more fixed eye, and a more stern resolve to live unto God.

Observe, if sin even on the inanimate world needs such a purging by fire as this, if the fact that here sin has been committed makes it needful that God should burn it all up, what a horrid thing sin must be! O to be purged from it! Refining fire, go through my heart! Spirit of the living God, sweep with all thy mighty burnings through and through my body, soul, and spirit, till thou hast purged me of every tendency to sin. This ought to be the prayer of the christian. If all those things will have to be purged, what manner of persons ought we to be, in daily purging ourselves, by a holy jealousy and a sacred revenge, from every unclean wish, every false word, and everything that would be inconsistent with that life of God which is our nature.

And if, again, God is so angry with sin that when he comes to judge it he will come with flaming fire, and if the terrors of God against the wicked will be utterly overwhelming, what gratitude ought you and I to feel for pardoned sin, what joy for safety in the Lord Jesus Christ. And then, again, as the result of that, what a detestation of the sin which made it needful that Christ should die to save us from the wrath to come! Oh, believer, you will never have to say—

"Rocks hide me, mountains on me fall."

Believer in Jesus, you will never have to escape from those tongues of flame which will lick up the sea; you will not be alarmed at the melting mountains; you will be safe; not a hair of your head shall be singed. Oh, what do you owe to sovereign grace for such an escape as this? Bless the Lord Jesus; fall down at his dear feet and adore him, and then, rising up say, "What can I do to glorify thee? O Lord keep me clear of the sin which would have destroyed me, and help me to live such a life as becometh one who has been saved from the wrath to come." Is there not much force in the apostle's inference? I only trust we may all feel it.

Once more, he meant us to feel that the suddenness of all this ought to keep us on our watchtower. This conflagration will come with no signs to herald it which the ungodly will observe. Ye who are on the watch will observe them; ye will see the tokens of his coming; ye will rejoice to go forth to meet him; but to the ungodly his coming will be as much unawares as was his first advent, which happened in the night, when all the world was wrapped in sleep. Men will still be buying and selling, and getting gain, and thinking of nothing so little as of the last advent; and then the Lord will appear.

Christian, let not that day come upon you as a thief. Stand ever watching. Live as if you said to yourself, "To-day everything that I have may be burned up; to-day all my lands may run like lava; all my gold may melt like molten lead; to-day I myself may have done with this world, and the world may be consumed." Live such a life as that. "Why," says one "then we should be pilgrims and strangers." That is just how you should be. "Then," says another, "we should not be minding much about the stock in the bank, and laying up for the future." Just so. That is how the Master would have you live; he would have you duly prudent and provident, but not covetous or anxious. If you feel that all these things are to be dissolved, you will then do all things as in the presence of God; you will wish to use everything you have as not abusing it, and as reckoning that it will perish in the using. God grant ye, brethren and sisters, so to live.

I would to God that all here present were prepared for the future. You remember John Bunyan makes Christian sit in the City of Destruction at ease until he hears from one called Evangelist, that the city was to be burned up, and then he cries, "Alas, alas, woe is me, and I shall be destroyed in it." That thought set him running, and nothing could stop him. His wife bade him come back, but he said, "The city is to be destroyed, and I must away." His children clung about his garments to hold him, but he said, "No, I must run to the City of Safety, for this city is to be burned up." Man, it will all go! your gold and silver will all go! Will you not have Christ? Will you not have a Savior? for if you will not, there remains for you only a fearful looking for of judgment and of fiery indignation. Tempt not the anger of God. Yield to his mercy now. Believe in his dear Son. I pray that you may this day be saved, and God be glorified in your salvation. Amen.

Thank you, Bro. Preble, for sending this very valuable article to the office. We think the production truthful, and very sweetly and impressively expressed; and trust our readers will be greatly blessed by its perusal. We would be grateful to any of our friends who find valuable articles, if they will forward them to us for republication in our columns. J. C.

ECHOES FROM PATMOS.

Of the church of the Laodiceans there was not one word of commendation, not an echo of approval, while of the church of Philadelphia there was not one word of censure. How very different the life and experience of churches having the same external advantages. In the same city we find churches differing as widely as did those here named, the one all aglow with divine light and holy zeal, the other with her fires extinguished, her wine mixed with water, her robes spotted by the flesh.

There is no partiality in the Judge. He is no respecter of persons or of churches. He is "the Amen, the faithful and true witness."

To each of the seven churches Jesus is presented in a different aspect. He is to his people what their circumstances and character show they most require.

To Ephesus, with a love growing cold, he is seen holding the seven stars in his right hand, and blessing, by his presence, the seven golden candlesticks.

To Smyrna, threatened with death in its most terrible form, he is the self-existing and eternal source of life.

To Pergamos, living near Satan's seat, and poisoned by error in doctrine and life, he comes with "a sharp sword with two edges.."

To Thyatira, where church discipline was neglected, and idolatries practiced, and sins covered up by professions of love and service, he comes in the impressive form of one whose "eyes are as a flame of fire, and his feet as fine brass."

To Sardis, who was living only in name while really dead, he appears with the "seven spirits of God, and with seven stars."

To Philadelphia, who had done so much in possessing the land for Christ, he comes with a "key," to open up for them still greater fields of privilege and of opportunity, and to shut the door against all intruders.

Now, to the Laodiceans, who were faithless, and fickle, and false and changeable, he is the "Amen," the faithful and firm, and true, the unchangeable; the proprietor and ruler of all things. He is to his people all that they need to promote their holiness and their happiness. He first makes his people holy, and by a law of grace, holiness and happiness are connected together. This church was in a most deplorable condition.

"Cold." This does not mean a listless, careless profession of religion. It means not only without a spark of spiritual life, but more, as openly belonging to the world, an avowed sinner; one who makes no profession of religion.

"Hot," fervent, warm and earnest in the faith and love of Christ. "Lukewarm," indifferent, undecided, unstable, no fixed purpose or settled principle. Halting between two opinions; trying, in an easy and fainthearted way, to serve God and mammon.

Religion is either true or false. If false, it is worth nothing; if true, it is worth everything. If false, oppose it, denounce it, reject it with scorn, treat it with indifference; nay, root it up and banish it.

If true, it is all true, and the greatest truth in the universe. Embrace it, love it, pursue it, agonize for it. Lay hold of it with all earnestness. It is hot as fire. It will warm you into a blessed sympathy with God and all goodness. It produces the fervor of mind and zeal for God which "many waters cannot quench." "Its coals are the coals of juniper," very warm. Wesley felt his heart strangely warm; the disciples felt their "hearts burn within them."

God would have you and your friends know your position. Be on one side, and be sure of your whereabouts. The honest, outspoken sinner is more likely to receive the truth and be saved, than the lukewarm or half-hearted professor, and his influence is less injurious upon society. The fire of party and denominational zeal, chilled by the influence of self-love and religious apathy, produces a tepid piety, which is as disgusting and nauseous to God as lukewarm water to a human being. God hates all temporizing and indecision. Here there is no room for neutrality.

Jesus expects that men should declare themselves in earnest, either for or against him. It is better to be cold than lukewarm. That young man who went around the country with letters of authority to break up the prayer meetings, saw and heard Jesus and became a true convert, while the lukewarm temporizer trusted to his hypocritcal pretensions and was lost. A daring sinner who went up to the campmeeting with his pocket filled with fire crackers, gave his heart to God and did a glorious work for Christ, while the man of tepid piety went home without enjoying or doing any good. "I would thou wert cold or hot."

This church was strangely deluded and deceived,—self-deceived. "Thou sayest I am rich." In worldly wealth, in social standing, in mental culture, in courtly refinement, in ritualistic ceremonies, in all the elements of popularity. We have an eloquent minister, comfortable pews, a splendid organ, a beautiful ritual, benevolent contributions. We are satisfied; we "have heed of nothing." The true witness saith of this church, that "they are wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Exiles in a far-off country, unhappy and distressed, they can do nothing to comfort others; destitute and unsupplied, their souls are famished for want of the manna of his love. Without spiritual perceptions, in the blindness and darkness of nature and unbelief, they have no bright visions of God. They see none of the beauty of holiness or of the excellency of Christ. Clothed only in the filthy garments of self-righteousness, they have no appreciation of the beautiful bridal robes made of the fine linen, "clean and white." What a delusion!

Does the reader notice that there is one little word which, in its completeness and fulness, covers the whole ground of their needs? That word is love. Without love all is desolate and drear. Love brings home the exile, imparts happiness and joy, enriches the bankrupt, imparts light to the sightless and a white robe to the naked, kindling anew all the fires of the affections heart, and lighting up the whole soul with sunshine and peace.

The cause of all this spiritual dearth is found in the fact that Christ was outside of the Church, Christ at the door, outside, knocking. What a melancholy thing to see a church without Christ.—Guide to Holiness.

DOUBTS.

C. MENDENHALL.

In some matters it is impossible to prevent doubts. There are occasions when by force of circumstances, or because of a lack of knowledge, we fluctuate or hesitate in mind, frequently halting between two opinions. We apprehend danger, fear arises, and at times our hearts fail us,—we seem to be journeying through life, "With doubtful feet and wavering resolution." But because temporal affairs are necessarily and inseparably connected with doubts and uncertainties, we should by this fact be admonished to turn our attention to something that is fixed and sure. We can lay up treasures in heaven free from moth and corruption; we can build our hopes on Jesus, or the promises of God, knowing that they are true even as God is true.

Nevertheless, christians speak of doubts, —in fact all of us are, or have been guilty in this particular; we doubt our acceptance, we fear after all we may not be saved; but is this not virtually doubting the truth and power of Jehovah? If you have complied with the conditions requisite, if you are obedient, is it not a great sin to fear even for one moment that God will fail to fulfill his part of the contract? The Psalmist says, —"What time I am afraid I will trust in thee." If fears assail and doubts intrude, we need not give up to these emotions, but double our faith and increase our trust in Him who is mighty to save, in whom it is better to confide than in man or in princes.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," for "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." Do you believe in him and love him with all your heart? This is a vital question; if you can truly answer it in the affirmative, all is well, for they who believe in Christ and love him, shall be saved.

His grace is free and full,—he will abundantly pardon, for it is written, "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." Let us then press on valiantly, fearless and steadfast, knowing in whom we trust, being able to give a positive reason for the hope that is in us. God wants the whole heart and full faith in him through his Son; nothing short of this is acceptable. Banish doubt, expel fear, trust implicitly without wavering, and get our heart full of that love which casteth out fear, and we may depend upon it, we are as much saved now, as though we were in the enjoyment of Paradise restored. True, it requires a strong faith, but faith is prerequisite in order to be saved. The blessings of righteousness are promised to all men. Reader do you trust in Jesus, looking for a final reward? If not turn unto him who "is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit."

IS CRIME INCREASING?

This question viewed from a Bible standpoint is of very great importance from this fact;—there are two distinct classes of expositors of the prophetic Scriptures, both teaching that we have come to the time indicated, when a great change in the divine administration is to take place. Both believe that the millennial age is about to commence, therefore a radical change of the degrees of crime may be expected. One class believe that Christ is about to come spiritually, and convert the world by the peaceful influences of the gospel, thus causing crime to rapidly decrease until there shall be none left to say, "know the Lord," for all shall know him, "from the least to the greatest." The other class believe that Christ is soon to appear personally, and that crime will increase in the last days, manifesting alarming developments in the political, ecclesiastical, social and moral departments. Both classes agree that the Scriptures teach the period has come when the great and glorious change for the church may be expected. They agree that the true faith is about to triumph over infidelity and sin, and that the promises of the gospel relating to the glorious establishment of God's kingdom under the whole heavens is about to be fulfilled. They disagree as to the status of that coming kingdom of glory, and also as to the means and manner by which it shall be established. Both may be right as to the time of the change, for they agree; but both cannot be right as to the manner of its coming, for they disagree. The faith of both classes rest upon the same passages of Scripture, and their agreement is produced by using the same rule of interpretation; and their disagreement by using different rules.

This was exactly the condition of the Jewish Church at the first advent of Christ. There were two distinct classes who were looking for the Messiah at that time. They agreed upon one class of passages relating to his coming, and disagreed upon another class. Those who used the literal rule of interpretation on all the passages were right, and accepted by Christ; but those who allegorized some passages to shield themselves from divine censure, disowned Christ, because he did not come in the manner they expected him, and were therefore rejected of God. Because of their misinterpreting the Scriptures, their standard of crime was very untrue, for the very acts which they esteemed sacred and acceptable to God were reckoned by Christ as the most heaven-insulting and man-corrupting that had ever been committed. The typical dispensation ended because crimes had so increased in its sanctuaries,—crimes which they supposed was sanctity and purity itself, that God hurled them down to infamy and national destruction.

If we have come, as all agree, to the transition period from the present to the coming dispensation, the most demonstrative argument upon this question is the present state of crime. The argument of one class is, that it is now diminishing, and the other that it is increasing. It will be very important in testing this question of crime in the ecclesiastical department, to raise a correct gospel standard to determine what is crime in the sight of God.

The class of Jews which were considered by their standard to be the most holy and pure in the world, were condemned by Christ as whited sepulchres and hypocrites, because they professed faith in Moses and the prophets, and governed themselves by many of their precepts and laws, but wickedly and persistently refused to accept the fulfillment of their predictions in events transpiring before their eyes. Those events proved that the Messiah had come, only in a different manner from their expectations.

Their wickedness did not consist in any acts of open sin viewed from a human standpoint, for they were law abiding and strictly religious, keeping the Sabbath, paying tithes regularly, looking upon all others as far below themselves in sanctity and purity, absenting from their society lest they should be defiled by their influence. But it consisted in rejecting present truth given for that generation, by which God designed to lead it, and cause men to accept the Messiah as their Captain and Savior. Christ and his followers were considered, by men generally, bigots and sectarians, because they rejected the most holy and religious classes, whose characters and lives did not agree with the Bible standard. The very acts of the Jews which were the most sinful, would not have been sin at an earlier age. A new standard was then given, by the development of a new class of truths, as Jesus said of them, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin."

Every new development of divine truth produces a different standard of human character. Crime is rebellion against God; and that rebellion always exists in rejection of God's truth. It would be very sinful for us to do what God justified the ancients in doing. Therefore the present standard of crime must be fixed to harmonize with the present degrees of light and instruction that God has given to this generation. This fact and principle has produced in all ages the most fearful conflict between the church of God and the world. It is when truth is first manifested that it is rejected by the world, and the church is denounced for proclaiming it.

The time was, when the battle was fought between those who preached the signs of Christ's first advent, and those who rejected those signs. That ceased long ago. A similar battle is now being fought between those who preach the signs of the second advent, and unbelievers in those signs. Those who preached present truth then were on that account rejected from religious fellowship by the masses; so it is to-day with those who preach the signs of Christ's second coming. They were prohibited from proclaiming those truths in the popular places of worship; so it is at present. They were made infamous, and taunted with ignorance and bigotry, for preaching the most sacred truths men had ever heard; so we believe Christ's true servants are treated to-day.

Then we do most devoutly and in the fear of God raise a standard of righteousness for the present generation, gauged by present prophetical truth, in connection with all previously developed truth.

We understand that in taking such a position we must suffer rejection and ignominy, be called exclusive, sectarian and ignorant bigots, just as have all God's people who have taken such a position in the past. By such a standard the ecclesiastical crime of the present time is alarming, and exhibits a wonderful increase in the last half century. When we preach that Christ is about to return to the earth personally, to raise the dead bodily, and renew the earth physically, as God's Word declares, and as the fathers believed, we are met by high and low churchmen who laugh us to scorn, and thrust us out of their sanctuaries, exhorting everybody to turn away from such teaching as unscriptural and dangerous. Is Christ divided, and leading both classes? No. He teaches that such strife will exist between two classes of his professed servants at the end of the gospel age. One smiting his fellow servant, saying in his heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming"; and will be condemned by the Judge at the last day.

The relative degrees of crime in the political, financial, and social world may be easily ascertained by the statistical records, our every-day experience in legislative halls, at the judicial bar, business marts, and in the family circle. The figures show (and they will not lie) that crime of all kinds has alarmingly increased for the last half century. The city of Boston is reckoned the most christian city in the world of its size, and its record shows that its crime has increased one quarter in the last three years. The year 1873 being far beyond any preceding year. The daily papers groan with the appalling record of human wickedness, bribery, defalcations, burglaries, extortion, matrimonial infidelity, legal gambling in high places, bar-room murders and more refined assassinations, and the outspoken blasphemies of spiritualism and atheism. Men talk about coming peace, but prepare as never before for war. They tell us the world is growing better, but are constantly enlarging their prisons and increasing their police forces.

Then by applying the arguments of the two great classes of christian teachers to the present status of crime, we get the experimental demonstration that the present generation is not to be christianized by the gospel, but the wicked are soon to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

THE POOR AGAIN.

We sympathize with our poor brethren and sisters, and are ready to help them in every way consistent with duty and the interests of Christ's cause. The columns of the Crisis were formerly open to publish cases of poverty, and invite donations from those disposed to contribute. Such cases multiplied so much, and questions arose as to the worthiness of some cases presented, and some took advantage of this means of obtaining help who were much more able to give than those who contributed to them, if the columns of the paper were open and dissatisfaction arose when we advertised for some and did not for others, so that the Board decided that it would be detrimental to the interests of the cause of truth and the Crisis to continue to publish such requests.

We feel satisfied if our brethren knew how many such requests would have to be published every week (we judge from the past, and letters we are now receiving that we might have fifty on the list at present), and the liability of constant imposition, that they would feel satisfied with the decision of the Board. We doubt not that many of the cases presented to us are real objects of christian charity, and regret that circumstances exist to prevent our doing for them what they may feel we ought to do through their paper. Perhaps arrangements might be made to publish lists of names, and the address of such as the several State Conferences might recommend as worthy of charity, and help the poor, and be no detriment to the interests of the cause.

BUCHANAN.

The series of meetings at Buchanan, Mich., closed Sabbath evening, Jan. 11th. The results have been glorious. Twenty or more have been converted, fifteen baptized, and others are seeking the Lord. The interest is increasing, and our closing meeting was the best of all. Many professors, who were in bondage and condemnation at the beginning, are now free in the Lord, and rejoicing in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. Members of other churches came in and were richly blest, being brought, as they said, nearer to the Savior than they had ever been before. Ten have joined the church, and the last evening thirteen others presented themselves for membership. The Baptist, Methodist, and Disciple ministers took part in the meetings, manifesting a kind and christian spirit. We also had a pleasant interview with the Presbyterian minister.

The meetings will be continued during the session of the Southern Mich. and Northern Ind. Conference, which is to commence in B. Thursday, Jan. 15th, and continue over the Lord's day.

The present religious prospect for the church in Buchanan is very bright. The hearts of its members are knit together in love, with a firm purpose to live to the glory of the Lord, while they longingly wait for his coming. A sister from another church who had received the gift of the Spirit during the meetings, said she had been a professor for many years, but she had never before enjoyed such "great peace." She was surprised to find such perfect rest and satisfaction in Christ. This was the result of a full consecration on her part. One result produced by the gift of the Spirit was a love for the coming of Christ, as she had never felt it before. She then felt ready to meet him.

We think the same result ever attends the being filled with the Holy Spirit. When the Savior is allowed to take the free control of a person, he cannot help loving his coming. It is the common and legitimate result that follows the gift of the Spirit. Others, from different churches, had a similar experience. It is the position the bride of Christ should occupy in order to be ready to meet him with joy when he shall appear in glory. Almost the entire church in Buchanan and a goodly number from other churches are unitedly seeking to be fully prepared for an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom. Bro. Mathewson, the pastor, is now reaping rich fruits from his earnest, persevering labors. He is a true man, and very bold in the defense of what he believes to be true and righteous. He is one of the strong men in the West, and is surrounded and sustained by several noble souls, whose hearts are in the work. We have abundant reason to give the Lord thanksgiving and praise for what he has done in Buchanan.

CHICAGO.

We came to Chicago Monday, Jan. 12th, where we met Bro. Sheldon, Bro. L. C. Collins, and others, at the Advent Christian Times office. Bro. S., the editor of the Times, is now enjoying quite good health, as compared with former years. He does not experience much trouble from his heart, unless in case of overwork. The Times is a good paper, containing valuable reading matter that deserves a place in every family.

A stranger passing through Chicago at the present time would not be likely to suspect that there had been a fire of any consequence; and yet, a little over two years since, the buildings on hundreds of acres were burnt to ashes. On the whole, the city looks now better than before the fire.

Last evening (Tuesday, Jan, 13th), we had a precious meeting in "the Tabernacle," on Green street, between Madison and Munroe. We have never heard deeper experiences, and brighter testimonies in Chicago, than at this meeting. It was a refreshing season to Zion's pilgrims. Their heads are uplifted, and waiting for the coming of the King of kings. The church has passed through some sharp trials during the past year, but the Lord has been their strength, and they feel like trusting all in his hands.

Some five years since, Bro. A. M. Billings, one of the prominent business men of Chicago, purchased the Tabernacle on Green street, for the use of the church looking for the speedy coming of Christ. During the past season, he has refitted it up neatly, at a cost of some four or five thousand dollars, putting a convenient basement room under the whole building. Meetings are now being held every evening, and the interest is increasing. Bro. Kinman, formerly a Methodist preacher, now independent, has been preaching in the "Tabernacle" some five or six weeks. The prospect is encouraging. It is designed that these meetings shall be unsectarian, so that all who truly love Christ can come and feel at home, whether rich or poor, bond or free, black or white, learned or ignorant, and unite together in the worship of the Lord, exhorting one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching, when he will return to set up his kingdom.

California.—Before this paper reaches our readers, we expect to be passing over the Rocky Mountains, en route to California. We purpose to leave Chicago Monday, Jan. 19th, and arrive in San Francisco Saturday evening, the 24th. Pressing calls from the churches in California, together with an unexpected deep impression, produced, as we believe, by the Spirit of God, has caused us to decide quite recently that it is duty to go again to labor for a season on the Pacific Coast. We would ask the special prayers of all our friends who are interested in this mission work, that our labors may be blest by the Lord.

When we left home, we had no expectation of being called to California this winter; but the evidence is so plain, we dare not refuse. We can submissively say to our dear Lord, "Thy will be done."

M. G.

Seeking Holiness.—Those who are seeking holiness need first to have a clear idea of what they are seeking, and how to obtain that which they desire. Indefiniteness in relation to these two points may result in a failure. Holiness implies a complete freedom from sin, so that the affections, desires, motives, and thoughts are kept pure by the power of the Holy Spirit. In order to enter this blessed state, there must be an entire surrender to Christ, followed by complete trust, with a firm purpose to remain in his hands, without regard to feeling. Every known bad habit must be abandoned for ever, and at the same time there must be a fixed purpose to do every thing the Lord makes known as duty. Nothing short of this can be expected to secure success.

M. G.

Mission Tent.—Shall we have the Mission Tent? It will be observed that a Bro. and Sr. "H." have together given one hundred dollars. This is a noble beginning. Shall we have the full amount necessary? The first one cost eight hundred dollars. Probably one of the same size can be made now for six hundred dollars. We think this tent is needed for the coming summer campaign. Let us have a hearty and prompt response, so that the tent may be ready for use as soon as the season will admit. It may be best to pitch it first in Washington, D. C., where the other was first used. May the Lord direct. Who will lend a helping hand in this good work? Do it for Jesus?

CAPITAL VS. LABOR.

A very strong organization of capitalists has been formed in England against the laboring classes, called the "National Federation of Associated Employers of Labor." This association has been thought necessary on account of the movement among the laboring classes against their employers. This league of the capitalists is said to be very strong, and is designed to crush out the "Labor reform movement." Of course such an association will only serve to exasperate the working men more and more, and may lead to dark deeds and bloodshed.

It can be truly said that the present omens are dark for business men in all parts of the world. The feeling between the employers and employed is continually becoming more and more bitter. When the passions are a little more aroused, terrible times may be expected. It is best to be hid in the Rock.

The following from the Chicago Tribune of Jan. 13th, will give some idea of the present state of things, and a hint at what is coming:

Greek vs. Greek.

The formation of the "National Federation of Associated Employers of Labor" in England is an ominous fact. The legality of the union of these men is unquestionable; its usefulness is not. The league represents an enormous power. Moncure D. Conway speaks of its members as "most of the wealthiest men in England, owning two-thirds of the House of Commons and five-sixths of the Upper House"; the Saturday Review calls them the "greatest trading capitalists in the kingdom;" and the Spectator says the league "has capital at its back equal to that of many States, and can, as far as resources go, control the trade of two great manufacturing counties." The mere existence of a federation wielding such powers is a threat. Its objects are hid in the vague generality of fighting the workingmen with their own weapons. It practically says to those workingmen: "In our hands lies the fate of all of you. Resist us hereafter at your peril."

To such defiance there must be two replies. The first is already public. The Trades-Unions of England have affiliated. At the first meeting to consider this, held Dec. 19th, fifty societies were represented. The talk was scanty and grim. One speaker said that "the published manifesto of the employers was tantamount to a declaration of war to the knife." The affiliation was resolved upon, and is doubtless now complete.

The second reply of the workingmen depends upon the failure of the first. Hitherto, the different unions have been able to about hold their own against individual employers, and even against combinations of a few employers.

Will their federation avail against the league of all employers? It is impossible that it should do so. The National Federation of Associated Employers of Labor can afford to support its members in a fight against their workmen for years. It can afford to raise a fund, the interest of which would, on an average, pay the losses incurred in such contests. Every strike is a struggle between the wealth of the two parties; no strike can drain the purse of this union; and so no strike, if contested, can hereafter succeed,—no strike, that is, that does not draw aid from abroad. The inevitable inference is, that that aid will be asked for. The English workingman has hitherto shrunk from his Continental compeer. The latter's vagaries have seemed impractical and repulsive. Now, however, union with him promises solid help. There can be no shadow of doubt that the union will be made. If it is, the employers will have themselves to thank for the results. It will be their lack of discretion that introduces into England the systems of thought and action based on the belief that property is robbery.

When we read, we fancy we could be martyrs; when we come to act, we find we cannot bear a provoking word.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

"BEARING THE CROSS."

J. R. CLARK.

There is much said among professed christians about "bearing the cross"; but we fear all do not understand it. Some think speaking in a religious meeting is the cross they are to bear; and when they have done that, they think little more about the cross. This speaking in meeting is all very well, but that is not all there is to "bearing the cross." Men are all naturally in love with this present world. But we must become crucified to it. Crucifixion is a hard death;—but few are willing to die such a death. Many professors have made a covenant with the world not to part with it, and the tempter satisfies them that speaking in meeting is all the cross they have to bear, and they can keep their covenant with the world. The apostle says, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Would you be crucified unto the world, go learn of Jesus. Contemplate his poverty, his life, his sufferings, his patience, his loving and forgiving spirit; and then realize this truth,—"If so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." If you would bear your cross and be crucified unto the world, remember that every trial of your life, whether temporal or spiritual, is by the appointment or permission of that God who is seeking, by all these trials, to crucify you unto the world and fit you to be glorified with his Son Jesus Christ. How can this design be accomplished unless you bear the cross?

Do you ask, what is it to bear your cross? We answer,—it is to suffer patiently all the trials produced by our union with Christ. You are not to indulge in fretfulness under them. If you do, you do not bear the cross. Though you should speak like an angel in meeting, yet if you fret and complain under the trials of life, by which God is seeking to crucify you unto the world, you are but deceiving your own soul. God has assured us that all things work together for good to them that love him.

Every day brings some new cross in some form. We may pray to have the cross removed, but we had better pray for overcoming grace, that we may be able to submit to the will of God. And we have this blessed consolation that his grace is sufficient for us. The time is coming, if we are faithful, when we shall praise God for every trial and every cross we have to bear. Be patient in all things,—that is bearing the cross; then, when Christ appears, you shall have a crown.

Fair Haven, Ct.

Correspondence.

From Bro. F. Johnson.

Wednesday evening, Dec. 31st, 1873, a watch-meeting was held by the "24th street Second Advent Church" of this city, assisted by some of the "Temple Hall" brethren and sisters. The exercises, which commenced at eight o'clock, Bro. H. A. King leading in prayer, followed by Sr. Boyd and Bro. H. K. Flagg, consisted of seven short sermons from as many preaching brethren, accompanied by sweet songs of praise to God, and many an earnest exhortation from the brethren and sisters of the flock assembled.

The first speaker was Bro. H. A. King. He showed how freely God had dealt with him,—how he had tried him with adversity when aspirations of worldly glory were drawing him away, and in breaking up those hopes had separated him from the world to be more wholly the Lord's the coming year than ever before.

The second speaker was Bro. H. C. Smith. His text was Matt. 10:16. The words of Jesus at the sending forth of the disciples would remain true till Jesus comes. Poor pilgrims and sojourners in a land that is not theirs, sent as sheep in the midst of wolves, "but to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

Bro. Franklin Douglass was the third speaker. He discoursed from the words, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "Let us understand what the word of the Lord is, and yield a willing obedience."

The fourth speaker, Bro. P. Cannon, spoke on that "blessed hope," etc. Life in Christ alone was brought out by one who believed he had immortality at the coming of the Lord, for "his reward is with him." We saw the reward could not be obtained at death.

The fifth speaker was Bro. H. K. Flagg, from "The harvest is past, and the summer is ended." The sowers were the prophets. David was a sower; Daniel was a sower. We are God's reapers going forth to the world expounding the prophecies. Jesus chose and sent them forth, saying, the fields "are white already to harvest," and "he that reapeth gathereth unto life eternal."

The sixth speaker was the writer. Went to the meeting indisposed, but in answer to prayer felt strong, and able to perform duty. Spoke to the weak ones, or those grown cold. Growth is the law. If we are not growing in grace and knowledge, we are growing in another direction. We must advance or retrograde.

The seventh speaker was Bro. T. J. Cox. "And there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with Jesus." Types of the dead in Christ, and of the living who are in him when he comes. A fitting subject for the present time.

After the preaching and testifying was over, as it was drawing near the midnight hour, Bro. Flagg offered prayer, and at 11.55 a few words of thanksgiving, when we all knelt in silent prayer; then a short prayer from Bro. Cox, and we sang as we arose, "Come let us anew, our journey pursue," and 1874 was five minutes old.

"Happy New Year!" May we greet each other in the kingdom of God.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ Jesus:—Permit me in love and meekness to write a few lines to you. We are thankful to God for the many kind and faithful letters, the solemn warnings, and the large amount of good, timely instruction which we have received through the columns of the Crisis. May God continue to baptize the Editors, and all who write for it, with the Holy Ghost. May you feel and know what you say. O, may you speak from the heart, and may your words reach the hearts of those who may read your communications. May we be spiritually benefitted, and God be glorified.

Much is being said about the Lord's second coming. It is a momentous subject indeed—something that concerns us all. The poet has truthfully said:

> "That awful day will surely come,
> The appointed hour makes haste,
> When we must stand before our Judge,
> And pass the solemn test."

"The hour is coming," says Jesus, "in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Now, the solemn question is, Are we prepared for that trying day? Do we love Jesus with all our hearts? Are we fearing God and keeping his commandments? Are our hearts pure? free from the love and practice of any sin? Is our "whole body, soul and spirit, sanctified to God"? Do we eat, drink, and do all that we do to the glory of God? If so, then we may safely hope to meet God in peace. Do not let us be deceived. God is not mocked. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption [or death]; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." As you value your soul, and an interest in the kingdom of God, be faithful to your duty.

Dear friends, permit us in the name of the Lord to beg an interest in your prayers. Pray that we may be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and be blessed with perfect love. We want to be fit temples for the Holy Spirit. "Without the Spirit of Christ we are none of his. Have faith in God, and pray earnestly for us. And may the Lord bless us all, and save us in his everlasting kingdom. Yours in faith and love.

From Sr. J. A. Goodrich.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I wish you all a Happy New Year. As we are permitted to see another new year, may we commence anew to work in the service of our blessed Master, and do all things with an eye single to his glory. Let it be the daily prayer of every child, "Nearer, my God, to thee!" How blessed the thought that if we draw near to him, he will draw near to us. He promises to dwell with him who is of an humble and contrite spirit.

What a blessed Savior we have to comfort us as we journey through this vale of tears. We read, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." He has a balm for every wound, and we can go to him amid deep suffering and find relief and comfort to our weary souls. Blessed be his holy name! there remaineth a rest for the children of God. Blessed thought! As I think of the salvation that Jesus has purchased for us, and the love that he has bestowed on such poor mortals, my heart is filled with gratitude. O, how good the Lord is. He is "the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." How many of the afflicted ones have found him precious. I am glad that there is grace in Jesus for all, and grace so powerful that it will enable us to bear all our trials and distresses. We even glory in suffering. I have often lifted my poor heart to him and praised him with all my soul for giving me grace to conquer the enemy. It is only the body that the enemy has power to hurt. While our life is hid with Christ in God, nothing can hurt us any more than it did the three Hebrew children. He will give us grace sufficient. He has promised never to leave nor forsake us.

While reading Bro. Pratt's article, "Peace with God," I could not keep from weeping. How much good it did me! Christ had peace with God, yet was a man of sorrow; so do his children. How much I have thought of this,—that Christ endured it for the joy that was set before him. And I ought to be willing to suffer all a loving Father sees is best for me, because I am to be made perfect through suffering. Soon darkness shall give place to light,—sorrow to joy. This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality.

New Britain, Ct., Jan. 3d, 1874.

From Bro. C. H. Sweet.

Our protracted meeting was interesting throughout, and the results already witnessed and experienced are glorious. God delivered us from the trial we were in by bringing the erring to repentance We are now once more a united band, and have individually and collectively consecrated ourselves anew to the work of the Lord. Pray for us that we may faithfully perform all our vows, and be more successful in our labors of love than ever before.

We were much cheered and benefitted by the presence and assistance of a goodly number of brethren and sisters from Bonny Eagle, Hollis Centre, Buxton, Portland and elsewhere. May our heavenly Father reward them for the kindly interest they manifested in our welfare. As yet there has been no break among the unconverted, but we look for one soon, as there are a number who appear to be under deep conviction.

Steep Falls, Me., Jan. 7th, 1873.

From P. Hodgdon.

To the children scattered abroad looking for redemption: I believe with all my heart the gathering time is but a few days in the future, and it is a cheering thought to me to know that God's faithful ones of all ages, nations and climes are going to be gathered and will inherit the land promised to Abraham. How often I have wondered if we should know each other there. Our loved ones that have fallen by the enemy death, are coming forth to live again in the earth renewed. My prayer is that none that ever loved this blessed hope may fall through unbelief, and hear the awful sentence, Depart, I never knew you. I was hungry, and ye fed me not; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye came not unto me. For, inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren (Christ says), ye did it not to me.

How careful we ought to be to minister to the wants of God's dear children that are poor in the things of this world. I will by his grace try and be faithful in these things, that it may be said of me in that day, She hath done what she could. Let us all begin this new year with renewed resolutions that we will be more faithful in this direction, knowing we shall get our reward at the resurrection of the just.

Manchester, N. H.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. A. J. Young, Vallejo, Cal., writes:—"We had such a blessed day yesterday, Bro. Howell being with us, that I must say a few words, hoping it will encourage all who love the appearing of Jesus. Bro. H.'s text read thus: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." Holiness and purity of heart was the theme. We rejoiced in being filled with the Spirit and the heavenly influence in our midst. Bro. H. had great freedom. In the evening he spoke from Isa. 35: 8-10, of the 'highway,' the way of holiness, etc. The prayer-meeting before the services was very interesting, the time being taken up with many short prayers and lively testimonies, interspersed with singing. We had another at the close of the sermon which was soul-stirring. Some from other churches were with us, who felt the power of the Holy Spirit, and gave good testimony in harmony with the Spirit. The Lord is blessing us wonderfully, and keeps us every day free from condemnation. We praise him that there is a plain way in which his children and all who will may walk, and be overcomers.

We are rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing Jesus, and feel the necessity of living holy lives. At the close of Bro. H.'s discourse, he asked the question, 'How many are there here who desire a clean heart?' All, save one, raised their hands. He then told us we could all have it. Yes, we know that the blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin. We love the theme of holiness and purity of heart, and our prayer and earnest desire is, that we may live perfect in the sight of God.

The Lord is blessing us daily. We enjoy great peace, and grow stronger every day, trusting wholly in Jesus. We are hoping that some one of our ministers will come to Vallejo to live. We feel the need of one very much. We hope that if the Lord directs any one to come, it will be one who not only preaches holiness, but lives it. This subject is much reproached on this coast, and by professors of religion too; but it does not prevent us from trying to live it. The Lord blesses us in so doing. It is 'meat in due season.' It is that which prepares us to meet the Bridegroom. We must all be pure, perfect, holy, and righteous, or be thrust out of Christ's kingdom."

Sr. H. Covey writes from Omri, Wis., Nov. 25th, 1873:—"I still receive your welcome paper, the Crisis. Eternity alone will unfold the joy and comfort its columns give to my poor and lonely heart. I have no preaching here of like precious faith, and its weekly visits are to me like water to a thirsty soul. The Bible is my only guide, and by its word I expect to be judged. I wish you could come here, or some other of like faith. I think you could get a good hearing in this place. We have Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Christians, Catholics, and Spiritualists, and all at variance with each other. There is a goodly number that love the precious truths of the Bible. I am almost sixty, and my health very poor.

The Christian minister, Bro. I. A. Young, preaches the coming of Christ and the destruction of the wicked. He is a faithful worker in our heavenly Father's vineyard.

The pure religion of Jesus here is very low. Iniquity and infidelity abound on every side, and the love of fashion and worldly enjoyments is the leading spirit of the day. My heart is often pained and sick to see so little done for Jesus, and to warn a slumbering world of its doom. I feel that every watchman should be at his post, and sound the alarm on mountain and plain, Behold the Bridegroom cometh. The sound is sweet to my ears, and my prayer is, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

I love to read the articles in the Crisis on sanctification. I love the way of holiness, for only those that are holy have the promise of seeing God. My heart is fixed on Jesus. He is my guide, my strength, my only hope in life and death, and hope of immortality in the world to come."

W. P. Jackson, Augusta, Me., writes:—"Dear readers of the Crisis, I thought perhaps a few words from one of God's unworthy servants might be received with interest. I have felt moved by the Spirit to preach to the people in this city, a hall having been fitted up by Bro. Furbush, free of cost. At the first meeting there were but a very few out. At the next one the number increased, and wanderers began to return to God, and sinners came forward to be prayed for. From that time to the present converts and wanderers reclaimed have been added to our number every week. Glory and praise be to God who has done the work.

It is said by many who come to our meetings that they are the best they ever attended. Some have felt this to be their last call. There has been union of heart among all orders. Ministers of all denominations who come here acknowledge a blessing, and give us their hand, and preach for us when they can. God bless them and all the dear ones who have labored with us in this good work. We have labored together for the salvation of souls, and the result is, God has given us from fifty to seventy-five precious ones, and many more we hope will be saved in this city before this revival ends; which may God grant. A few have been baptized, and they are strong in the faith. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, that our faith fail not. Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes."

Bro. S. O. Dunbar writes:—"The Crisis is a welcome visitor to me, and some of my neighbors like to read it too. Every paper sent is made good use of; for I find many opportunities of putting it in the way of those who are prejudiced. Some ask me if I believe in that paper. I believe in the Bible, and this paper helps me find out its truth more than all "the preaching I ever heard."

A BRO. in California says: "By the grace of the Lord, I will be free from the use of tobacco. For over thirty years I have used the weed, but here's my heart and hand with Bro. E. D. Kemp (whose experience and pledge I have just read in the Crisis), to abandon it forever. I forthwith took my pipe and tobacco and committed them to the flames; but the 'tug of war' is coming. I hope for victory, not only in this world, but in that which is to come."

THE ENDING OF EARTH'S KINGDOMS, ETC.

S. H.

I have now sent to the readers of the Crisis, far and near, the pamphlet I published on the time of the coming kingdom. Despite the old adage that "what costs nothing is never valued," I am inclined to think it will be read with some interest by all who are waiting for the promised redemption. I am so simple as to think that if the subject is carefully considered, all can understand (even the sisters, a large number of whom take the Crisis, and who usually do not pretend to understand prophecy very well), about where to expect the second advent as indicated by the clearest evidence, and I now think the only clear evidence ever given to us. God could give a measurement of the whole time, and this perhaps is the most direct of all methods, reaching from certain events given, to the consummation; and in his providence could cause it to be understood at the right time by his waiting people. This is just what I think he has done. And my object in writing was not to try to instruct those who have long studied prophecy (though I hope these brethren will carefully examine it, and if they think an incorrect view of the prophecies is given, to point it out), but rather to see if I could not help in presenting the subject to others so plainly, though in a very brief manner, that they could see a harmony in the termination of the periods. I was urged to this, too, I should say, by Bro. H. D. Sharp, now of Bristol, Ct., who generously contributes one hundred dollars towards the expense.

TALKING PREACHERS EMPTY.

A. P. MOORE.

Ministers of the gospel must have time for thought and reflection, or run dry. He who will talk with others all day long, when he is to preach at night, is very sure to have a dry hard time preaching. Some of our good friends do not think of this, and will keep the preacher talking constantly at the expense of the interest of the meeting. When a minister has preached the best he knew how, and emptied his "pitcher," he must have time for quiet prayer, study and reflection, if he preaches extempore, and has not a written sermon to read.

I was once forcibly reminded of this necessity. I preached in a place Sunday morning, and in the afternoon felt the need of quiet, so that I could have time for reflection and prepare myself for the evening. But there were two good sisters where I stopped that kept up such a continuous talking (and I was obliged to remain in the same room with them), that they talked me dry and empty; and when I tried to preach in the evening, though I had a full house, I felt my emptiness, and so did all present.

Preachers must have a chance for quiet prayerful reflection. Do not accuse them of lacking sociability if they are not inclined to talk all the time. There are extremes to be sure. At times fireside preaching accomplishes the most good; but a minister cannot talk constantly about this, that, and the other, or listen to gossip about A, B, or C, without feeling his leanness and unfitness for his holy position standing in "Christ's stead" before the people. Let ministers have a chance and a place for quiet.

MILLER. In Monticello, Jan. 4th, 1874, Eld. Geo. W. Miller, son of Eld. William Miller, of Low Hampton, N. Y., aged fifty-seven years.

Bro. Miller came to Minnesota in 1857, and settled at Millersburg, Rice County, fifty miles from St. Paul. In October, 1872, he came to Monticello. Since that time he has been laboring as State Evangelist, visiting places on the frontier where the preaching of the gospel was seldom heard. None would appreciate his worth as those who best knew him. In September last he went to Winona to attend the yearly campmeeting of the A. C. Society, was taken sick on his way home to Castle Rock, but was able in a few days to reach Minneapolis, and was there four weeks before being able to get to his home. He left the house but once after arriving there, suffered much, but patiently. He died with an unwavering faith that he should awake in the likeness of his blessed Savior at the morning of the resurrection. Funeral service took place at Monticello, Jan. 11th. His children were all present, also his brother, John H. Miller, from the old homestead. Sermon by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 13–14.

D. R. MANSFIELD.

COWLES. In Hannibal, N. Y., Nov. 23d, 1873, of congestion of the lungs, Horace Cowles, aged seventy-six years.

About 1846 he became interested in the soon coming of Christ as an indispensable prerequisite to future existence. In 1850, he was among the first in the organization of the church of believers in South Butler. He was zealous in defence of truth, and a consistent, devoted christian. He requested that no error be preached over him when dead, but wished some select passages of Scripture read, a prayer offered, and then buried. We have committed him to earth's silent bosom in good hope of a title to the better resurrection when Jesus comes.

HODGKINS. At Massena, N. Y., Dec. 22nd, 1873, Sister Rhoda Hodgkins, wife of Bro. Ira Hodgkins, aged sixty years.

Our sister sleeps in Jesus. During her sickness she suffered much, yet she was patient, and it was plain that God's will was her will. A few moments before she expired she requested all present not to mourn for her, but for themselves Said she was ready, and all was well. She leaves a husband and seven daughters. May the Lord sustain and keep this afflicted family, and especially our aged brother, who feels that his only hope is the coming of Christ to raise the dead. We addressed a large concourse of people at her funeral from Ps. 17: 15.

MATHER. In Dresserville, N. Y., Dec. 17th, 1873, of inflammation of the lungs, Louisa Mather, aged sixty-seven years.

In 1857 Sr. Mather embraced the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ and kindred truths. She lived a devoted christian, and expected her reward at the coming of Christ to break the dreamless slumbers of the dead, and clothe his people with immortality. She leaves a husband and five children comforted by the same blessed hope. By her request a discourse was preached by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 13, to a large and sympathizing congregation.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Madrid, Jan. 9.—The Ministry have issued a long manifesto, addressed to the nation, declaring their objects to be identical with those of the revolution of 1868.

A decree was promulgated to-day dissolving the Cortes, and announcing that elections for a new body will be held as soon as order is rendered secure, and freedom and universal suffrage are unhindered.

Bayonne, Jan. 9.—Don Carlos and Gen. Elio, with 25,000 men and eight pieces of artillery, have entered Santona. Gens. Moriones and Astrejana have received reinforcements. A battle is expected to take place soon, the Carlists making the attack. The Carlists now completely surround Bilboa, and are about to renew their attack on Portugalete.

Berlin, Jan. 13.—Later returns from Bavaria show that twenty-one Liberals and twenty-eight Ultramontanes have been elected to the Reichtag from that Kingdom.

PARIS, Jan. 13. The iron-clad Numancia has arrived at Mers-el-Kebir, Algeria, with 2,500 Cartagenian refugees on board. In escaping from Cartagena she passed five Government men-of-war at the mouth of the harbor. The refugees on their arrival surrendered themselves to the French authorities. Among them are Gens. Contreras and Galvez and the other members of the Insurgent Junta. They declare that the city fell through the treachery of the commanding officer of the principal fort.

MADRID, Jan. 13. Cartagena has surrendered, and is now occupied by the Government troops under Gen. Dominiquez. Upon the capitulation of the city the Intransigente Junta and the liberated convicts went on board the frigate Numancia, which was attacked by the Government squadron, and at the time the last dispatch was forwarded a naval engagement was in progress.

The Intransigente insurrection continues at Barcelona. There has been considerable fighting in the suburbs.

The Governor of Madrid has arrested all the officers of the Saladero Prison, because of the escape from that institution of an assassin who was to have been executed to-day.

The Captain-General has issued an order to the Republican volunteers of Madrid directing them to surrender their arms to-day. All who disobey will be tried by court-martial. The authorities will search the city for concealed arms to-morrow.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Pottsville, Penn., Jan. 13. The difficulty between the miners and coal operators of this region assumes graver aspects every hour, and the excitement increases every moment. The men are all idle, and nearly every colliery in the region is closed. The men are determined to resist to the last the demands of the operators for a reduction of wages, and the operators are said to be equally firm in their position looking to such reduction. This stoppage will throw out of employment, besides the 8,000 miners, over half of the railroad employes of the Philadelphia and Reading railroad, and large numbers of men employed in the repair shops, both engine and car, of that company. It is to-night authoritatively stated that a general discharge will take place in these departments at once. The meeting of the committee of miners and operators, to be held here on the 17th instant, will be one of great importance. The Executive Board of the miners' and laborers' organization is also called to meet here on that day. The miners at this meeting will authorize their men to go to work at once in all collieries where the operators will give the $2 50 basis, which several of them are willing to do. The Reading Company will then be put in the position of refusing transportation for the coal of those who are willing to work their mines, believing that the $2 50 basis is a fair one, as many of them do; and it will also put them in the unenviable position of fighting the united judgment and interest of the whole region to a greater or less extent. The action of President Gowen will paralyze the whole anthracite interest of the State, but whether he will carry out his present expressed intentions or not cannot be determined for a certainty until Saturday. There is little doubt, however, but that a serious and determined strike will take place.—New York Times.

FIRES.—A despatch from Salt Lake City states that the town of Helena, in Montana Territory, was nearly destroyed by fire on January 9th. Helena is the most populous and in its business relations the most important place in the territory. It owes the prosperity it has enjoyed to the business developed by valuable gold mines in its vicinity. No explanation of the origin of the fire is given, but a strong wind prevailed and it proved impossible to check the flames. The International and Cosmopolitan hotels, the First National Bank, and every frame building on Main street above the St. Louis hotel, were swept away. Among other buildings destroyed are the telegraph office and the so-called fire-proof store of Gans & Klein, wholesale clothing dealers. This last was a building of about one hundred by forty feet dimensions and three stories high, built of brick and stone. Like many other roofs in the place it was built flat, and covered with a layer of earth a foot or more in depth, which, no doubt, made the roof fire-proof so far as attacks of fire on the outside were concerned. The First National Bank is an inititution of $100,000 capital. The buildings destroyed comprised about all the business structures of the place, and the conflagration corresponds in this respect to the havoc produced by the great fire in Boston.

STARVING TO DEATH IN LOUISIANA.—Bishop Wilmer of Louisiana called upon the President to-day and represented to him that many persons were starving in that State. The President, accompanied by the Bishop, proceeded to the Capitol, and after entering the President's room sent for Speaker Blaine and members of the Louisiana delegation. The result of the conference is reported to be that to-morrow Representative Sypher will introduce a bill authorizing the War Department to issue rations to the sufferers. The President's subsequent private interview with the Republican members of the Senate Committee on Judiciary had reference to another subject, which they are not at liberty to mention. The President remained at the Capitol nearly three hours.

MRS. BADGER.—New York, Jan. 12. The Graphic, to-night, contains a likeness of the missing Mrs. Badger of Boston, and the following is made public over the signature of William W. Badger, 192 Broadway; "The New York detective force report no clue in this city to the loss of Mrs. Badger, and conclude that she did not reach this city. Passengers on the boat have been found whose statements render it a moral certainty that she jumped from the boat at ten o'clock at night off Point Judith. Mrs. Rogers of Brooklyn saw her just before that hour, and noticed soon after that she was missing. Miss L. Edgerton was the last to converse with her. She was made insane by the fear of becoming insane. The evidence of her leaving the boat in New York is thought to be unreliable.

Manchester, N. J., Jan. 13. The engineers on the New Jersey Southern railroad quit work last evening. All of the new engines are here, but there are no trains running on the road. No disturbances have as yet been reported. The strikers seem determined to hold out. The strike has extended to the train and track hands. The locomotives are all in the shops here, but are partly disconnected and cannot be taken out. The track has been torn up in different places, thus preventing trains from running.

THE ship property destroyed last year was valued at $11,783,000, while the sea has claimed a larger number of victims than usual. Storm, fire, wreck and collision have characterized the sad recital of the year's record. With comparatively few exceptions, the losses have been chiefly due to unusually tempestuous weather, and all the efforts and precautions which human ingenuity can devise seem futile to prevent such disasters.—Boston Globe.

ACCORDING to the report of the Revenue Commissioner, E. S. Young, there are one hundred and fifty thousand licensed rum-shops in the country. If we average the employers in these, including the owners, and add to them the landlords and others pecuniarily interested in the traffic, we will, at the very least, have an army of half a million of men engaged in carrying on and endeavoring to extend this terrible business.

Notices.

Another Impostor.

A young man recently called on Bro. Field, Jeffersonville, Ind., representing himself as the nephew of Bro. H. Munger, and soliciting aid to pay traveling expenses. He represented himself as a book agent, and as preparing for the ministry. He requested Bro. F to refer him to some Brn. in Cincinnati. He did so, and the young man went to those Brn. and obtained money of them under false pretences, contradicting his first statement to Bro. F. Bro. Munger says he knows nothing about him. Has no such nephew.

We have recently had a number of such cases. In these times of lying and robbery, such traveling strangers, who ask for money without an equivalent, should not be trusted a moment, for it is indirectly encouraging deception and fraud. Brethren, beware of them.

HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.—A quarterly session of the Hoosick Valley Conference will be held in Hebron, N. Y., commencing Jan. 22nd, and hold over the following Sunday. We hope to see a large gathering of the friends of Jesus at this meeting. Let there be delegates sent from the churches and localities within the bounds of this conference. In the meantime, let much prayer go up to God that his work may be revived in Hebron. There will be teams at the R. R. station at Rupert in the afternoon to take all who come to the meeting to place of the Conference, free of charge.

A. W. SIBLEY, President.
A. P. BUMP, Secretary.

FEELING it duty to feed the scattered flock, and warn men to prepare for coming judgment, we have decided to travel and labor as the door may open, and brethren may desire. Our first meeting will be at Franklin, N. H., evening, Jan. 26th. So any wishing to have protracted or evening meetings can address us at that place to that date. From F. we have thought to go into the upper part of this State, and Vermont; but we will calculate to go where the door is open, and the good Lord leads, and stop as long as duty seems to require.

J. G. SMITH.
JOHN PARSONS.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.—A quarterly session of the Mass. A. C. Conference will be holden in New Bedford, Mass., to commence Tuesday evening, Jan. 27th, and continue over the following Sunday. Meetings afternoons and evenings, when preaching may be expected. We hope our brethren in all that region will make an earnest effort to come, especially the preaching brethren. Our business at this meeting is to make an effort to save the perishing.

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

P. S.—The church at New Bedford extend a hearty invitation to all who desire to do or get good, to come and labor in and enjoy the meetings of the Conference. Brn. Mathewson and Couch are expected. Bro. Stockman is earnestly desired, and all other preaching brethren who can attend.

A. M. HIGGINS, Pastor.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.—If the Lord will, we shall commence a series of meetings at the school-house in the corner of Hardwick, Greenwich and Enfield, Sunday morning, Jan. 25th, to continue days and evenings through the week, and as much longer as may seem best. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity are requested to come up with much prayer and fasting to the work of the Lord in this place.

SAMUEL AYRES.
W. G. RUGGLES.

CONFERENCE.—The second session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held at the Reed meeting-house in Richmond, on Thursday evening, Jan. 29th, and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, with hearts full of love and union, and then we shall be prepared to labor for the good of the cause, and shall not be ashamed of our work when it is done. We hope our preaching brethren will not forget this meeting.

H. D. REED, President.
H. S. MITCHELL, Secretary.

CONNECTICUT CONFERENCE.—The next Quarterly Session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held at Yalesville, commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 21st, and continue over the following Sunday. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of preachers and delegates at this meeting. It is proposed to attend to the business matters of the Conf. on Thursday, so that the rest of the time may be given to devotional exercises.

G. L. WHITE, Sec.

THE third Quarterly Meeting of the Eastern District of Wisconsin will be held with the church at Cassell Prairie, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 13th, 1874, and continue over Lord's day. We hope to see a large gathering of the saints at this meeting. Let us come with hearts full of the love of God. We expect there will be several of the preaching brethren present to assist in preaching the Word.

E. P. GRAVES.

THERE will be a meeting of days in Garland, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan 22nd, and continue as long as thought best. A general invitation is given to ministers and lay members to attend this meeting, to unite in the work of God for the salvation of souls. Brn. and Srs. will call on Abner Millet. Provision will be made for all. Per order of the church,

H. B. SEVEY.

☞ Free RETURN passes will be given.

THERE will be a protracted meeting in Great Falls, N. H., commencing Tuesday evening, Jan. 27th, and continue over Sunday, Feb. 1st. Brn. and Srs. are invited to come and help us.

C. S. SHATTUCK.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The A. C. Church of Norwalk, Ohio, will hold their first quarterly meeting for A. D. 1874, in their chapel, on Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 24th and 25th. A cordial invitation to this meeting is extended to all.

FRANK BURR, Pastor.

ROCKBRIDGE, O.—I expect to visit the church in Rockbridge, Ohio, on Wednesday, Jan. 28th, and remain one week, and preach Jesus and the resurrection. I expect also, if the Lord will, in the future to visit them once in eight weeks, and minister to them in spiritual things.

FRANK BURR, Pastor.

LOST.—Sister Sarah J. Thomas lost a nice red checked shawl on the camp-ground, at Springfield, Mass., last Aug. It was half of a twelve dollar shawl. Any information that will lead to the recovery of the shawl will be thankfully received. Write to Mrs. Sarah J. Thomas, of Brattleboro, Vt., or to B. Perham, Vernon, Vt.

WILL the preaching brethren who are passing through Newark, N. J., give us a call? Please drop a note previous, to prevent any conflict, either to Bro. J. Libby, 42 Bennington St., or to me, 126 Bank St.

WM. SHEPHERD, Sec.

THOSE wishing to preach at Farmington, will confer a favor to the church worshiping there by publishing their appointments in the Crisis. We have often had two at a time.

N. H. BERRY, in behalf of the church.

Rise of Price.

"HISTORY OF THE ADVENT MESSAGE." $3.00 sold by subscription. Our proposition to get out a "history of the Second Advent Message—doctrine and people" has met with a hearty response, with many words of encouragement from our chief ministers also.

Many have urged us to add portraits of such of our "pioneers" as can be obtained. We have concluded to add some fifteen or twenty portraits, and to make other additions to the work beyond what we had intended, at a considerable expense, which will make it a work to well compare with four dollar books.

All who subscribe before July 10th, shall have them at $3.00 each. We are now preparing the work, and hope to have it ready to deliver in July next. No money called for until the book is ready.

Yarmouth, Me. I. C. WELLCOME.

A NEW WORK.—PAPAL ROME.—Prophetic Utterances and Historic Sketches concerning its Glory, its Gloom, and Destiny. By Eld. S. S. Brewer. This is the most thrillingly interesting work on Rome and its present dying condition we have ever seen. It contains much historic matter in a condensed form, which every Protestant minister and teacher should have at hand. We have just published the above pamphlet, and shall furnish it at $10 per 100 copies, by express or by mail. Postage extra. Postpaid, 15 cts. single. For sale at the Crisis Office. Price 15 cts.

I. C. WELLCOME.

TO THE CHURCHES IN N. H.—Any church wishing one of the Quarterly Conferences held at their place, will please correspond with one of the Committee immediately. Their address is: T. W. Piper, Melvin Village, N. H.; G. W. Brown, South Elliot, Me.; D. W. Davis, North Sutton, N. H.

HAVING studied my duty, in the light of the "blessed Word" and past providences, I feel to place myself in the channel of God's opportunities to be moved in any direction, by his revealed will, through his children. Any church that would like to have me visit them, will please address as soon as convenient, ELD. FRANKLIN DOUGLAS, 347 W. 36th St., New York City.

Appointments.

APPOINTMENTS must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon), to insure insertion for the current week.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express

GOOD NEWS FROM ROME.

HELEN ANGELL GOODWIN.

Now glory to God in the highest,
For the truth has been spoken at Rome!
The curses sent forth on the faithful,
To their blasphemous authors come home.

New Luthers are flinging defiance
In the face of the impious plan,
Of binding the Bible and conscience
At the feet of infallible—MAN!

Thou art drunk with the blood of the martyrs,
O mother of harlots and lies!
From thy bed of perdition, forever
The smoke of thy torment shall rise.

Thou hast summoned thy foul inquisition
From the blood of the shuddering past;
But the arm of thy fury is broken;
Thy triumph is over at last.

Thou claimest the might of Jehovah,
But thy captives shall ruin thy throne;
The nations who crowned thee shall hate thee;
God—God shall be worshiped alone!

Behold ye, great Babylon fallen!
Her millions shall surely go free;
The people who wander in darkness
The day of salvation shall see.

Joy! Joy to the seven-hilled city
Whose horror of bondage is past!
The sword of the Spirit shall conquer
The armies of error at last.

O earth! let thy myriad voices
With praises fill "heaven's high dome";
For glory millennial dawneth,—
The truth has been spoken at Rome.

INQUIRY.

We received a letter of inquiry from a brother in Chicago in relation to the wife of Eld. Sherman, of Piermont, N. H., being healed last August as reported in many papers. It has been reported in Spiritualist papers that Sister Sherman was healed by using Spiritualistic prescriptions. The inquirer wishes to know if their representations are correct. The following communication from the pen of the person who was healed will answer the question directly:—

Piermont, N. H., Jan. 3d, 1874.

DEAR BRO. COUCH:—I received by to-night's mail a line from Mrs. O. D. Eastman, enclosing yours, which I again enclose to you. I herewith give a statement of facts relating to my consulting "mediums."

Last April I was reduced by severe illness to the borders of the grave, to all human appearance. My brother's wife, Mrs. Clark, who is a Spiritualist, came to spend a few days with me, to assist in ministering to my wants. She was very desirous of having us consent to let her send a lock of my hair to Mrs. A. A. Robinson of Chicago. I was too weak and low to consent or refuse. My husband very reluctantly consented, in gratitude for her kindness to me, and not from any faith we had in it. Mrs. R. sent a diagnosis of my case, with printed prescriptions for medicine which we never used. She also sent two "magnetized papers," as she called them, to be applied to my head. These must be applied every night; for as she claimed in her printed directions, and as she is said by a reporter of the Chicago Sunday Times to claim, "there is not necessarily any remarkable virtue in the paper itself," but she alleges that "it acts like a conductor, and having been magnetized by the spirits through her, these same spirits, so long as the magnetism is retained, can produce effects when the paper is on the person of the patient, providing conditions are favorable." These papers must also, to prove of any use, 'be renewed every ten days.' They were applied one night to my head. My husband, my attendant and myself all remember this. My husband has an impression that they were used two nights, but is not sure that it was so. My nurse and myself have no recollection of it. This is all that was ever done with any of her prescriptions or papers. This was in the early part of April last.

I lingered on with no material change in my condition, save some temporary relief from the extreme pain and weakness of the severe illness of the Spring months, till August 27th, 1873. My case was becoming more hopeless, and I was growing more helpless; and it was apparent to all that nothing but Divine power could raise me. In this state, on the evening of Aug. 27th, I was moved and aided by the power of the Holy Spirit to place my case, spiritually considered, in the hands of the Great Physician. I had no thought of being restored to bodily health. I wanted grace to suffer patiently all God's will. This was given abundantly. Then, to prove "that the Son of man hath power on earth," I was offered the blessing of health on the easy condition of faith in his ability to restore it. Power to believe was given, and at the bidding of Jesus I arose and walked.

I boldly and fearlessly ascribe the honor and glory to his name. It was all his work. My whole soul goes out in adoring "wonder, love and praise" to him who so marvelously restored, and has so graciously preserved my health during the past four months, so that at this writing I am in good and apparently firm health, feeling no return of my diseases. I am truly "a new creature." "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." This is true not only in a physical, but which is far better and more glorious, in a spiritual sense. To God be all the glory!

I know the Spiritualists claim my case as being wrought by their power, and I am represented as withholding facts in the case from the public. I desire to conceal nothing. I have tried to obey faithfully the command of the heavenly Healer, that was given while the healing power was being imparted, "Go, tell how great things the Lord hath done for thee." Had I no other evidence that I was healed by the power of Jesus Christ, this command alone would be positive proof that he was the agent of my case and none other. The fact of my having worn on my head those magnetized papers one night, or two at the most, and that early in April, while the cure was wrought the last of August, is the only thing by which they can lay any claim to my cure. This was done when I was weak, and my mind and memory being correspondingly weak, it passed from me, and I had forgotten it till it was brought to my notice within a few weeks, by hearing that my cure was being published in the Spiritualist papers, and claimed by them; and even when I was asked, by letter, if I had ever taken her medicines, I replied in good faith that I had not; not then thinking of the "papers" at all. But later, my brother's wife reminded me of it, by asking me if I did not remember wearing them one night, admitting herself that it would be nothing strange at all to know that it had passed from my memory, owing to my reduced state at the time. Not till then did I recall it.

This, as I have stated it, is the truth concerning the matter. I am accused of falsehood in withholding a part of the facts, "for the sake of supporting a creed." But God, who knows my heart, and before whom I expect ere long to stand as my Judge, is witness to the integrity of the same. May he forgive me for giving them even so small an advantage over me! I humbly confess it before him, and he graciously pardons and blots out the error. I do, by his grace, resolve never again to tamper with it, for it was so clearly shown me on the memorable night of Aug. 27th that Spiritualism was a fatal delusion of Satan, by which he would, if it were possible, deceive "even the very elect," that I desire what little influence I have to be directed against it.

Pray for me, my dear brother, that I may ever stand up boldly for Jesus, confess faithfully "what great things the Lord hath done for me, and obey fully the injunction, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Yours in the love and "fellowship of the Father and of his Son Jesus Christ" whose "blood cleanseth us from all sin."

ELLEN C. SHERMAN.

If Eld. Sherman's wife was healed through the medium of spirits, as claimed by the Spiritualists, she was healed without any faith in their virtue or power to perform such a work. She had no faith in them before her restoration, and declares that the one who healed her revealed to her at the time of her recovery that Spiritualism is evil and only evil. If the spirits healed her, they must have been very foolish spirits to have suffered the wonderful virtue of their remedies to remain more than four months inoperative, while the invalid was growing worse and going to the very doors of death, and then suffer her by their agency to be suddenly raised to health while asking Christ to restore her, and while being impressed that these spirits were devils doing a blasphemous work. The truth is, these spirits are false in all their appearance and teaching, and those who follow them blasphemously denounce Christ, and would rob him of the honor of every glorious act of mercy to the children of men. A WORD FOR THE CRISIS.

M. MUNGER.

What would our Advent family do without the Crisis? It is almost indispensable, especially for preachers. They get an outline sketch of the most important events in the world every week, and generally prophetically applied with honest ingenuity. This is meat in due season. We are never so thankful for health as when we regain it after a sickness. If the paper fails to come one week, we feel the loss. If we stop with those who do not take it, there is something lacking; but when we see the Crisis on the table we feel at home with the family. I am not alone in believing it the best family religious paper printed. The Times is the next best. I think the body generally do not appreciate fully the benefit we are receiving from our Advent papers. Ask the old people and invalids that cannot get out to meeting what their paper is worth to them, and you will get an expression of gratitude. Such are the ones that are blest the most by it. The Editors do not enjoy it as much only by knowing it is appreciated and a blessing to others. The readers have no responsibility only to pay $2.00 a year, while those who manage the paper are under a pressure of responsibility every day, and blamed beside. Our people ought to consider that Editors of an Advent paper stand out openly for a target for all to fire at; and we ought to stand by them, certainly while they are honestly trying to serve us. There are thousands of eyes watching the operatives, and the machinery cannot clash without being soon detected.

Some writers are too sensitive about every word they write being published. A man must be very perfect, or have a high estimate of his ability, to think that the editor cannot better his production in any respect. I never think of giving a string of fish to any one with the condition that they must cook them without dressing; nor a peck of corn or apples, charging them to eat the cores or bran. Perhaps I have more confidence in the cooks or editors, and think they can dress and fix my pieces for the press better than I can; and I find no fault with them for so doing. Sometimes they have shrunk more than one-third in dressing and sifting. All do not require the bran in their bread to keep them healthy.

The Second Advent people have more influence now, than ever before. The seed sown years ago is beginning to show itself in nearly every field or church. Our work is not in vain, nor yet done. Where there was one church twenty years ago, there are ten now on the continent; and ten times their number looking favorably at the great truths we advocate. If we keep at work prudently with the tools or facilities we have, and keep together in effort, the world will soon see God has been with this truth, if they do not fully endorse it. Our tracts, papers and missionary preachers are doing a great work; more than many of our brethren are aware of.

The object of this letter is to influence such as I can to look at this subject from this stand-point. The papers and tracts, editors and preachers, belong to God and his people; and if you are of his people, all is yours. Think of it, and act. I will propose that each person try to get a subscriber for the Crisis at once, and the preachers ten each, and we shall be more interested. We want the co-operation of all belonging to the body. The editors and office help are working well, and if each of us will do what we can, instead of watching others with a jealous eye, the cause will prosper in spite of the few seeming obstacles thrown in the way by those who are trying to switch off a class on side tracks or issues. Keep on the main track, brethren,—it leads to the kingdom long looked for.

— Nothing can be very ill with us when all is well within; we are not hurt till our souls are hurt. If the soul itself be out of tune, outward things will do us no more good than a fair shoe to a gouty foot.

— Trust him in nothing, who makes not conscience of every thing.

SOCIAL MEETINGS.

GEO. E. LEE.

How to have a good social meeting is oftentimes an apparent perplexity. But the mystery is easily solved when we consider that it is sociability on the part of each one that makes a meeting social. There are many kinds of meetings at the present day, and nearly all of them are apt to be very social, with one exception; and that is, some religious meetings. Such, as a general thing, are those where some particular ones are obliged, or incline to do nearly all the singing, praying, and exhorting, instead of all exhorting one another as suggested by Paul in Heb. 3 : 13. Here we are told to "exhort one another daily," but how few heed it! How little real love for the prayer and conference meeting! Instead of making the house of prayer the most favorite resort, and attending it punctually on account of a genuine love for it, excuses are easily made for staying away. And many times when such do attend, their sociability is always noticeable before and after the meeting. Or, if a meeting is appointed for singing, and they attend, not to sing, but to hear (?) the singing, they are social enough to talk all the time.

Now we read of "a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;" and it is really a wonder that when silence is desirable, some will persist in speaking, and when a time is appointed to speak, they occasionally become so silent that drowsiness overcomes them. Can it be that such are filled with "joy unspeakable?" If because of an abundance of joy they are dumb, is it natural to suppose that we should have a "dull, dry," meeting?" On the contrary, would it not be a similar meeting to that on the "day of Pentecost," when "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," and gave expression to their joy in such a manner as to cause some to think they were drunken? Yes, we answer, there must be some kind of a manifestation where the heart is filled with joy unspeakable;" for "out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh," and if some cannot speak it, they will sing it, others will shout it, while some are so filled with joy, that their eyes become as it were a "fountain of tears."

Then if we desire a real Holy Ghost meeting, we must each one be "filled with the Spirit," which is not a spirit of malice or jealousy. When self is all gone, and we go to a meeting with a good supply of the "fruits of the Spirit," a blessed result will follow. If we "fear the Lord" with the right kind of fear, we shall "speak often one to another," and there will be a oneness in Christ, such as will have a telling effect upon the minds of unbelievers. So much so, that the "almost persuaded" will be led by the unity of the brethren to see an attraction in the religion of Christ, and be "fully persuaded" by the melting power of his love.

The spirit which God giveth us is "not of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." 2 Tim. 1 : 7. Hence, if we are in possession of that spirit, we shall not fear one another, and thus be kept from owning our Redeemer, but we shall certainly have his power with us to such an extent as to see the result of our labor in the salvation of such as shall be saved.

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 9th 1873

THE DEVIL.

C. M. SWEET.

Many persons are laboring hard to convince themselves, and others, that the Bible does not teach the existence of a personal devil. When listening to their efforts, and reading their productions, I am often reminded of the story of the robber, who, just before committing some of his great robberies, would hire men to go out and circulate the report that he was dead. Those who placed confidence in the report would be less careful about securing their treasures, and the robber succeeded in obtaining them much more readily than he otherwise would.

I am fully convinced that the devil is working upon this very plan at the present time. Let us neither believe his false report, nor aid in circulating it.

It is not my purpose to present to you at this time an argument upon this subject, but to call your attention to the following truthful words from the pen of another:—"The Bible will need a deal of interpreting and adjusting, to get all traces of a personal Satan out of it. Still it can be done. Decide first that the Bible does not teach his existence, and then learned ingenuity can easily put him out of every verse where now he seems to be seen." I know of no other way for a man to satisfy himself that the existence of a personal devil is not taught in the Bible. This course I am unwilling to take, therefore I must remain of the opinion that such a being does exist. But thank God he is soon to be destroyed.

Steep Falls, Me.

ADAM CLARKE'S COMMENTS ON EX. 12: 40.

N. SHUMWAY.

The Samaritan Pentateuch, in all its manuscripts and printed copies, reads the passage thus: "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel and of their fathers, which they sojourned in the land of Canaan and in the land of Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years." The same sum is given by St. Paul, Gal. 3 : 17, who reckons from the promise made to Abraham when God commanded him to go to Canaan, to the giving of the law, which soon followed the departure from Egypt. And this chronology of the apostle is concordant with the Samaritan Pentateuch, which, by preserving the two passages—they and their fathers, and, in the land of Canaan—which are lost out of the present copies of the Hebrew text, has rescued this passage from all obscurity and contradiction.

It may be necessary to observe, that the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint has the same reading as that in the Samaritan. The Samaritan Pentateuch is allowed by many learned men to exhibit the most correct copy of the five books of Moses. The Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint must also be allowed to be one of the most authentic, as well as ancient copies of this version which we possess. As to St. Paul, no man will dispute the authenticity of his statement. And thus in the mouth of these three most respectable witnesses the whole account is established. That these three witnesses have the truth, the chronology itself proves; for from Abraham's entrance into Canaan, to the birth of Isaac, was twenty-five years. Gen. 12 : 4, and 17 : 1, 2. Isaac was sixty years old at the birth of Jacob (Gen. 25 : 26), and Jacob was one hundred and thirty at his going down into Egypt (Gen. 47 : 9), which three sums make two hundred and fifteen years. And then Jacob and his children having continued in Egypt two hundred and fifteen years more, the whole sum of four hundred and thirty years is regularly completed.

ZION'S HILL.

L. BOUTELL.

Saturday afternoon, Jan. 3d, a message was brought me to go to East Weymouth and feed the flock of God that worship in a new chapel recently built. The evening train that runs like the lightning soon landed me at the depot. I inquired for "Zion's Hill," and all could give direction to this sacred spot. After a short and muddy walk I came in sight of the chapel, which was the same spot where we pitched our mission tent three years since. I found they expected some one to be sent them by the Lord, but I was a surprise to them all. We had a blessed free meeting at Bro. Sanclair's that evening. Sunday morning we went to the chapel. It is a very neat house,—will seat three hundred or more, and is good enough for all that love pure, undefiled religion more than conformity to the world and the fashions and extravagances of the day.

In the morning we had prayer and conference meeting, and had evident tokens of the Lord's presence while rehearsing the same "old story" of the love of Jesus, and the certainty of his soon coming. The responses said plainly that we were among those of "like precious faith." Bro. Sanclair of N. H., a Methodist preacher, was with us, and we all enjoyed the day together. I preached in the afternoon, he in the evening. In the afternoon after preaching we had a precious communion season, where the disciples of Jesus came round the table of our common Lord, of which Paul said, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come. Our thoughts were carried back to Calvary's tragic scenes; our hearts were melted, our consecrations renewed, our love and fellowship strengthened. All, we hope, were made better. The congregations were good, and appeared interested. It surely was a good day at Zion's Hill. Everything betokens an interest there which can but result in good to the community. I bid them God speed in the right.

LUKE 14: 33.

HENRY PRATT.

"Likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

The idea that has obtained that people may become christians, or disciples of Christ, without forsaking all, is virtually saying that Christ's words are not truthful. Soldiers that enter into the service of their country must leave all, and take the government uniform. And Paul says, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier."

A soldier's life is one of wearisomeness, self-denial, and suffering. "Wherein (says Paul) I suffer trouble as an evil doer even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound. Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they also may obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." We suffer for others, endure for others. But he encourages us, when in this suffering and endurance, with the assurance that if we suffer with him, we shall reign with him. A christian soldier's life is a life of hardships;—it is the forsaking all for Christ.

This dispensational position, "out to meet the Lord," will humble us, and we shall find out what is in our hearts ere we get through. He alone will be able to stand who taketh unto himself the whole armor of God. The truth will be very essential in this conflict. Soldiers that pay little or no heed to the captain's orders do not get promoted, nor approved. They may feel well in doing what they think best, but when God makes requisition, as in the case of Saul, we shall learn that "obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

My brethren, if there be any among you who have not given up all, or in the language of Christ "forsaken all" for him, then be assured that they have no part nor lot in the matter. If you have seen the time when you could say like Peter, "We have left all and followed thee," and are not there now, you need like Peter to be converted. And when you are "converted, strengthen the brethren."

PREACHERS.

I am persuaded that three-fourths of all who steadily follow preaching, depending on it for a livelihood, lose their independence. They do not make public opinion—they only reflect it. How could it be otherwise when, as every body knows, the first utterance of the worldly minded member ("whose name is Legion"), when displeased by an unfortunate "sermon," is "I'll never pay him another cent!" The consequence is, that shrewd and discerning people may be found everywhere who look upon preachers as a sort of fashionable appendage, like "the king's fool," in old monarchies. In the Papal church the clergy are reverenced and looked upon as shielded by a special providence. But the lower clergy look up to the higher and are slaves. Among Protestants, preachers, while professing to be the great conservators of mortals, degenerate into mendicants, or rather paupers, speaking frivolous pieces, miscalled sermons, for public patronage. No other door could be opened for all the innovations, now threatening the ruin of this reformation, that would give such free access, as this brood of hireling clergy called "pastors."

One will not need to go far to find a "pastor" parading his little performances before empty benches, and whining that "we cannot get any audience here till we get rid of those old fogies who pretend to be so conscientious that they won't allow us to have an organ, a fair, or festival, nor encourage any preacher, unless it be one who is forever harping on baptism!" At the next town may be found one who, with the aid of some silly youngsters, and a score of half hearted older ones, has crowded the old fogies off the track, and has all these appliances, and who never alludes to baptism unless it be with a saintly upturning of eyeballs to speak of "a baptism of divine love." But, after all, they fail to draw an audience; and they dare not preach the word of the Lord to the few who do come. The gospel will be distasteful to several members of the choir, and the organist won't play for any hydraulic church. Therefore the poor ninny can do nothing but watch the weather-cock in his popular party and set his sails accordingly. There are many men, I doubt not, who are honest and true to Jesus and his word, who do nothing but preach. But so many fall in the trial which is sure to come, that each preacher to be safe, should keep himself in such a position, that he may snap his fingers in the face of social and moneyed influence, when they threaten to "stop the feed" if he don't preach to suit them.

The people are irreligious—the people in the churches have no faith. For one humble disciple who asks, "What does the Lord say?" there are four who ask "What will Mrs. Grundy say?" We need courageous and independent men who believe God, and fear not to declare his word.

I steadfastly believe that the current innovations might have been kept out, or might now be put out, if preachers were not afraid to attack them. The Jews said, "Give us a king," God gave them Saul. The people now cry, "Give us pastors! give us music! give us fairs, festivals, and lotteries! give us conventions and societies! Allow us innocent amusements!" And God is giving them over to ungodliness and worldly lusts. Presently the profoundly respectable denomination, "The Disciples church," will receive the right hand of fellowship as an "evangelical church." And then God will raise up another people who will defend the honor of his name.—Joseph Franklin, in Christian Review.

A WATCHWORD.

MRS. C. CURRY.

"Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

The christian having this passage of Scripture as a watchword, will have an incentive to diligence and constant vigilance that will inspire him to renewed efforts daily, nay hourly. The lowlands of christian experience will be rapidly passed over, and the progress onward. The examples of weak professors will be no stumbling block, and the petty trials or more harassing cares of life will be of minor importance. This constant watchfulness will cause a conscientious performance of every duty, and a yearning for holiness will be the result. To satisfy this hungering is the office of the Holy Spirit. "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come," says Jesus; and the Comforter never does come save when the soul is hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Faith is the gift of God. He says, "Ask and ye shall receive."

When the Holy Spirit has baptized the heart, a sacred, heavenly joy is experienced. No more does the soul feel like saying, Do I love the Lord or not? An assurance is felt that Jesus has sealed that heart for his own. There are no doubts, no fears,—the heart is at rest with God—with all mankind, and with itself.

No christian is in a condition to adopt the watchword unless he has attained this happy experience. No luke-warm follower, nor unfaithful one will gladly welcome the advent of the Messiah now. But the christian who daily looks for Jesus, whose heart is cleansed by the blood of the Lamb is continually on the alert to improve the passing moments, embracing every opportunity to give the cup of cold water, or perform some act of kindness in the name of the Master. Not, that thereby he will merit heaven, for his "righteousness is as filthy rags"; but through the merit of Christ he expects salvation, and when he is saved he will be but a sinner saved by grace. He feels that each little act of kindness done in the name of a disciple is done to Christ, and he would be about his Master's business when he comes. Oh, this watching and working Jesus loves! How the hearts of such glow with joy as they realize that the day is drawing near when Christ in his glory shall come to gather his children home.

Then let us not only watch, but pray and work, that he may find us, not idlers, but diligently improving the time.

TOBACCO.

B. TAYLOR.

I frequently hear discussions and read pieces against the use of tobacco,—sometimes from those who have formed the appetite, and sometimes from those who have not; but all arrive at one conclusion, viz., that it is a filthy habit; and yet some of these still continue its use.

I think that God created me a strong and healthy child, and I have grown to be the same kind of a man; and my constitution will bear a great deal of abuse. But I have applied the test of using tobacco for several years, and find I cannot bear that without injury, and therefore have broken away from the filthy and injurious habit, and stand today a free man. Now some one will ask me how I broke away from it. This question I have to answer a great many times, and have but one receipt for the evil, and it will cure every case, no matter of how long standing. How have you kept yourselves from committing any sin, that in former days you have rolled as a sweet morsel under your tongue? Have you done it by continuing to practice the same, and constantly asking God to help you to overcome it? No; never was a sin conquered in that way. Neither have you overcome by leaving off the practice of any sin for a short time, then when the temptation came strong, indulge a little, and thus break off by degrees. The only way you ever overcame a sin was discontinuing its practice at once, and then and there asking God for help. Now I think that every one that has discontinued the use of tobacco in this way, has been kept free from it until they have backsliden from God.

Those who do not profess to be governed by the Spirit of God have no right to practice anything which is injurious to their health, or degrading to their moral character. Show yourselves men! Break away from the vile habit, and let us see that you are what you claim to be,—men capable of governing yourselves; or else give yourselves into the hands of your Creator, and ask him to deliver you from one of the filthiest habits that ever disgraced humanity.

— It is good so to desire blessings from God, that we may be the better for enjoying them; so to crave water, that it may not be attended with bitterness.

EXPERIENCE.

L. ALLEN.

Over fifty years ago I started in the service of the Lord. He did for me all I asked him to, and that was to have mercy upon me a sinner, and forgive my sins. He did so, and more too; he filled me with his love. I lived on year after year, sometimes upon the mount, and then down in the valley; some of the time shouting happy, and then down below zero; sometimes condemned, and sometimes justified. I saw my older brethren, that enjoyed the blessing of holiness, more even in their enjoyment, and I knew they enjoyed more of the love of God than I did. And I knew the Lord was no respecter of persons, and at times I was under deep conviction for that special blessing of perfect love, or holiness. There was to be a campmeeting holden in Withington. I thought I would make arrangements to go to that meeting. I laid aside all worldly cares and anxieties. I really hungered and thirsted after righteousness. Such, I read, "shall be filled." The time came for the meeting. I took a blanket under my arm and started. I bade my little family "good bye," to be gone a week. I don't know but I felt some as Abraham did when he started with Isaac to offer him. To be sure I had no Isaac to offer, but I had poor self to offer. I went on meditating and praying. I thought I would not come home until the Lord gave me this great blessing. He knew I was in earnest, and I had not been on the ground long before he answered my prayer, and gave me what "greenbacks" cannot buy. Glory to God in the highest! on earth peace, good will towards men!

Be patient, brethren, I am most through. I can say truthfully, I feel this blessing in my soul while I have been writing this epistle. I want to say to my young brethren and sisters, Don't rest until you seek this fulness; for it will pay more than a hundred per cent. I think this is the last letter you will read in the Crisis from me; for I write but a little, as my hand trembles very badly.

AT REST.

TO THE MEMORY OF MRS. SUSAN DAVIS DENNETT, wife of the late Col. Nath'l. Dennett, of Portsmouth.

"We've laid her to rest—and now calmly she's sleeping—
Unconscious alike of earth's joy and its strife;
While angels around her their watch care are keeping,
Awaiting the summons to call her to life.

We've laid her to rest—but she soon will awaken—
The Life-giver cometh his people to save;
He'll rescue the captives death's strong hand hath taken,
And bring them in triumph from out the cold grave.

We've laid her to rest—but again we shall meet her
Where sorrow and sighing and tears are all o'er;
In the bright world to come soon with rapture we'll greet her,
Where death and the tomb can divide us no more."

Home & Health.

RAGGED TOM, THE SURETY.

One Sunday afternoon, a big boy stood at the door of the Sunday school. He was so bad that he had been turned out of school the Sunday before. His father and mother brought him and begged he might be received in again. The superintendent said, "We should be glad to do him good, but we are afraid he will ruin all the other children. It is very bad for a school when a big boy sets a wicked example."

"We know he is a bad boy at school," said the parents, "but he is ten times worse at home, and he will be lost if you do not take him back."

We could take him back, if we could secure his good behavior. I will see, thought the superintendent.

So he stepped back into the school, and rang the bell for silence. All listened while he said, "That boy wants to come into the school again, but we cannot take him back without making sure of his good behavior. Will any one be surety for him?"

A pause followed. The elder boys shook their heads. They said they knew him too well. The others did not care for him. But one little boy pitied the big bad boy, and was very sorry no one would be surety. The little boy went by the name of "Ragged Tom." It was not his fault that he was ragged, for his mother was very poor. The superintendent soon heard the little voice, "If you please, sir; I will, Sir."

"You, Tom, a little boy like you? Do you know what is meant by being surety, Tom?"

"Yes, Sir, if you please; it means that when he is a bad boy I am to be punished for it."

"And are you willing to be punished for that big boy?"

"Yes, Sir, if he's bad again."

"Then come in," said the superintendent, looking to the door; and the big boy, with a downcast face, walked across the floor. He was thinking as he walked, "I know I'm a bad boy, but I'm not so bad as that! I'll never let that little fellow be punished for me—no, never." God had graciously put that thought into the big boy's mind. He was helping Tom as a surety.

As the children were leaving school, the superintendent saw the big boy and little Tom walking away together. He said to himself, "I am afraid that boy will do Tom harm. I must go and look after them."

When he reached the cottage where Tom lived, he said to his mother, "Where is your son, Tom?"

"O, he's just gone up stairs with a great boy he brought in with him. I don't know what they are doing."

"May I go up?"

"O yes, sir."

The superintendent went softly and quickly up the stairs, and as he reached the top he could see through the door that Tom and the boy were kneeling together. He soon heard Tom's voice, saying "O, Lord, make this boy, who has been the worst boy in the school, O, Lord, make him the best."

The superintendent knelt down by Tom's side, and they all prayed together.

God heard them, and he made the big boy to become one of the best boys in the school, and raised up friends for "Ragged Tom," who put him to school, and after that sent him to college, so that at length he went as a missionary to the heathen.—Concord Statesman.

CARE FOR SPARROWS.

A little girl, seeing the servant throw the crumbs into the fire, said, "Don't you know that God takes care of the sparrows?"

"If God takes care of them," was the careless reply, "we need not trouble ourselves about them."

"But," said the little girl, "I had rather be like God, and help him take care of the little birds, than scatter or waste the food that he gives us."

So she carefully collected what was left of the crumbs, and threw them out of the window. In a short time several little birds flew eagerly to the spot, and picked up the crumbs she had scattered. After this she every day collected in a little basket the crumbs and bits of bread that had fallen around the table, and threw them under the window for the little birds; and during all the winter these little creatures came regularly after each meal to partake of the food thus provided for their support.

How beautiful it was to see this little girl trying "to help God," as she said, and thus early learning to be kind to the helpless of God's creatures! Children, embrace every opportunity of showing kindness to animals!

I LOVE JESUS.

'Tis a silvery, childish voice;
How it makes my heart rejoice!
It's pure, gentle accents well
Like a distant, clear-toned bell,
While she sweetly tries to tell,—
"I love Jesus!"

On each Sabbath day I greet
The soft patter of her feet:
How I love to see her raise
Her blue eyes to heaven in praise,
While her sweet voice gently says,—
"I love Jesus!"

Such as thee our Savior blessed,
To his bosom kindly pressed:
Make her, Savior, all like thee,
In her childish purity;
May her language ever be,—
"I love Jesus!"

—Sel. by W. D. Tucker

THE following anecdote, though old, will bear repeating: "A gentleman was once riding in Scotland by a bleaching ground, where a poor woman was at work watering her webs of linen cloth. He asked her where she went to church, what she had heard on the preceding day, and how much she remembered. She could not even tell the text of the sermon. "And what good can the preaching do you," said he, "if you forget it all?" "Ah, sir," replied the poor woman, "if you will look at this web on the grass, you will, see as fast as ever I put the water on it the sun dries it all up, and yet, sir, I see it gets whiter and whiter!"

FOOD.

No animal or plant can exist without nourishment. Food is the staff of life; and the quality of the food determines the quality of the plant. An inferior article of food will produce an inferior plant; thus, plants grown in the shade lack beauty and color. A field of wheat in the open plain stands a hundred-fold better chance of a crop than one in the shady grove. Plants require the stimulating influence of the sun's rays, as well as the nourishment which they obtain from the ground. Animals also need light, as well as solid food, to nourish the system.

If you build a house of decayed timber, it will not stand the weather, nor endure for many years. If you make a road of clay, or muck, or sawdust, it will soon become a bed of mud; but if it is of stone, and covered with nice gravel, you have a good road at all times.

So if you nourish the body with good, healthful food, you are taking a step in the right direction. It is the quality of the food which determines the quality of brain, bone, and muscle; and what articles of food are equal to grains, fruits, and vegetables, in imparting strength to the system? All meats are on the road to decay from the moment the poor animal is robbed of its life; and what an absurd thing it is to suppose that fat and grease can build up the system! Depend upon it, dear reader, if you would avoid scrofula and secure sound health, you must use hygienic articles of food.—Jos. Clarke.

SLEEPING IN DRAUGHTS.

Mr. Lewis W. Leeds, the distinguished writer on ventilation, offers, in the November number of the Sanitarian, views which will be regarded as novel on the subject of sleeping in draughts. He believes in it, and says; "I have not the slightest doubt that if every individual in the city of New York were to sleep on the house-top instead of in their stifling rooms, the rate of mortality would be reduced twenty-five per cent in three months; and if they could have blankets enough to keep warm, and be merely screened from the rain at night, without obstructing the currents of air—or, in other words, to sleep directly in all the draughts they could get—the mortality would be reduced one-half in one year." He holds that it is warmth alone that determines the amount of fresh air one can afford at night.

Where the body is kept warm, and pure air only inhaled, there is not one particle more danger of taking cold in sleeping directly between two open windows all the year round, than there is of taking cold in riding in an open sleigh when thoroughly warmed by wrappings of fur and robes, and such a thing as taking cold under such conditions never occurs, providing always the thorough warming of the feet and back, which are often neglected."

NECESSARY PRECAUTIONS.—The opening of the spring with its mild, damp weather and warmer suns, sets in fermentation all accumulations of filth, gathering during winter around houses, out-houses, and barns. This is highly productive of disease, to say nothing of the amount of nauseous matter which, finding its way from the surfaces of yards or from cesspools, poisons wells and causes fatal sickness. Deaths or severe sickness arising from these causes, are often looked upon as mysterious or providential occurrences, when they are simply the results of natural causes which may be guarded against and prevented. Let thorough cleanliness be observed, and, above all, the escape of offensive matter into wells be strictly prevented. Carbolic acid, coperas, chloride of lime, and fresh earth are all good disinfectants, and will absorb or destroy foul odors and gases. —Hearth and Home.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

ALL CREATION GROANS FOR THEE.

World! do thou the signal dread,
We exalt the drooping head.
We uplift th' expectant eye,
Our redemption draweth nigh.
When the fig-tree shoots appear,
Men behold their summer near;
When the hearts of rebels fail,
We the coming Conqueror hail.
Bridegroom of the weeping spouse,
Listen to her longing vows;
Listen to her widowed moan,
Listen to creation's groan.
Bid, O bid the trumpet sound,
Gather thine elect around.
Yet the awful hour is nigh,
We shall see thee eye to eye.
Be our souls in peace possessed,
While we seek our promised rest,
And from every heart and home
Breathe the prayer, "O Jesus, come!"
Haste to set the captive free,
All creation groans for thee.

WHAT NEXT?

Perplexity and contradiction involve the whole political world. No one can tell what is to happen next, or when it is to happen, or, when it has happened, to what end it will lead. It is the will of God that it should be so, in order to keep man humble, and to teach him to cease from himself, and to wait upon the Lord. Yet if we do sincerely wait upon the Lord, he will not leave us long in darkness or perplexity. He will open our eyes, as in the case of the prophet's servant at Dothan, and will grant us at least a partial sight of those horses and chariots of fire which are in preparation for the battle of that great day of Almighty God.

The present state of Europe is so evidently a calm before a storm that no one seems to doubt it. All the world is looking forward to some great event of some kind. The only question is, of what kind it will be. In anwer we would say, the next great concussion will be produced by a religious and political war. Not by political ambition only—not by revenge alone—nor only by a religious crusade; but by all combined together. . . .

It may be said, in truth, that we now stand in presence of the most dread necessity that ever arose to overshadow mankind first, and then to overwhelm them. We see before us the uprise of that necessity. We trace, day by day, its swift and gloomy growth. Its shadow falls upon the heart; but its crushing weight cannot yet be felt. It is in vain that such feeble papers as the Standard vent their small sarcasms and smaller wit against the pilgrimages of the day, and the crusade for which they are intended to prepare. In every case these third-rate journals have hitherto been mistaken.

The exaggerated tyranny of Bismarck is hastening on the fatal crisis, and immensely increasing its force and depth. France, we all know, is preparing for a new war. The Catholic world is bent upon restoring the temporal power; yet all this might produce but a secondary result, if it were not for the insane tyranny of Bismarck. He seems lately to have become a sort of mixture of Luther and Henry the Eighth. As great a reformer as the one, and as great a tyrant as the other. It is stated that his colleagues are terrified by the opposition which he has aroused throughout all Catholic Germany. It is said that the German emperor is alarmed, as he well may be. Yet the same desperate course is still pursued, and our Protestant journals seem to exult in the vigor of the Protestant champion, being, as always, entirely blind to the folly of such championship. You have now undone all that Protestantism had gained by the defeat of France, or by the expulsion of the Pope. You have looked with cold-hearted selfishness at the misery of your Crimean friend and ally—you have applauded the expulsion of the Pope, though an act of the most flagrant robbery, and now you must take the consequences of this twofold immorality. You have invoked the demon and how can you control him? The Prussian government at large is terrified by the opposition which it has aroused; but Bismarck, having conquered once, thinks he must conquer always, and urges on the persecution beyond all the limits of common sense. War is declared on both sides, and each side is forming its alliances, as a preparation for a war of a more literal kind. Prussia has gained over Italy, and fancies that she can as easily make sure of Austria. A triple alliance has thus been formed—and Prussia, confident in her strength, is driving the Catholics to desperation. But necessity and desperation are two formidable allies, as real and as formidable as if they were visible to the eye. They are both on the side of the Church of Rome. A triple alliance of Romanism, Necessity, and Despair, against the triple alliance of Prussia, Italy, and Austria. The alliance spiritual against the alliance physical! Which will overcome?

Europe has now arrived at a new turning-point of history. A new war, without a parallel, is about to commence. A war of spirit against matter—of mind against brute force; as if the spirits of the dead were to take the field against the armies of living men. In the past history of the world there has been nothing comparable to it. Ambition and avarice, those two great motives of war, are subordinate in the breast—and what are avarice and ambition but gross material passions resting altogether upon external things. The new motives of war are chiefly the mind, and rest upon the inmost structure of the heart. The spirit world takes up arms against the material world—the visible goes to war with the invisible. The invisible will conquer, for it can strike its enemy on every side, unsuspected and unseen. It can glide into his heart and read the secrets—it can steal into his council-chamber and corrupt his fellow-councillors—it can surround him with snares, while it looks him honestly in the face. It is like Perseus wearing the helmet of Pluto, and coming upon his antagonists unseen. With this helmet of invisibility the spiritual will conquer the material, and (like Perseus) cut off the Medusa head of Bismarck, and then deliver Andromeda (the Pope), who is now fastened to a rock, to be devoured by the sea monster, false Protestantism. Indeed Perseus seems to have been a sort of type of the present Catholic world, for though comparatively feeble, yet by the aid of invisibility he conquered all his opponents, though far stronger than himself. The secresy of Jesuitism, and the spiritual force of Necessity, Desperation, and Revenge, will outweigh all the gross materialism of Prussia and her allies.

To speak less figuratively—we see the German government determined to subdue Romanism, and Romanism determined not to be subdued. We see also, even the Germans themselves alarmed by the spirit which they have invoked. Yet at the same time neither party can retract. The party which gave way at such a crisis as the present would be extinguished forever. Prussia, knowing this, is forming her alliances—Prussia, Italy, and Austria. The Church of Rome, equally awake, by no means puts her trust in "spirituality" alone. Spirituality is the invisible hand; but the invisible hand must have a visible weapon. And there are weapons enough in the armory of Europe. France is the most powerful of them but France is not the only one. There are dangerous weapons in the midst of Germany itself. Those weapons are the daggers to stab Prussia from behind, while France, as the sword, is to attack her in front. The knights of old carried a variety of weapons, daggers as well as swords, and the Roman Church, which is always mediæval, will be mediæval especially in the multitude of its offensive arms. It does not trust to France alone, it trusts to Germany itself. Germany is, perhaps, the very strongest ally of Rome. In the first place the Neo-Catholics of Germany must, of necessity, be more zealous for Romanism than even the most zealous of the French, for the German Catholics are persecuted, but the French are not. We see, even in France, a strong reaction in favor of the Pope, though that reaction is merely moral and voluntary. What then will the reaction be in Germany, where the Catholics are oppressed, and where self-interest and self-protection will combine with religious zeal to preach a crusade in favor of Rome and the temporal power? Germany will soon be far more in earnest than France, and will outdo the reliigous movement of Paray-le-monial. For France those pilgrimages were only matters of feeling; but for Germany a pilgrimage of a different kind will be a matter of life and death—and a pilgrimage in which the scallop-shell and the pilgrim's staff will be exchanged for the waving crest and the deadly bayonet.

Nor is this all. The political parties of Germany will be as strongly in favor of a crusade as the religious. Does any one imagine that the princes and statesmen of Germany are willing to be extinguished by the German emperor and Bismarck. If so, it is the most extraordinary phase of human nature that ever has been presented. A man may submit to be eaten by a shark, but he does not like to be eaten. And it is but a small consolation to a man, when going down a shark's throat, that the size of the throat permits him to go down entire, with a perfect unity of all his limbs; and it is but a small consolation to the German states that the huge throat of Prussia takes them all down entire, in the most perfect unity. Unity in the shark's belly is but an uncomfortable unity. The largest states of Germany—Hanover, Saxony, Bavaria, and Wurtemburg—are all secretly disgusted. Bavaria being Catholic, is, of course, opposed to Protestantism. And it is said that Bavaria is most particularly vehement for the restoration of the Pope. Even Wurtemburg, though it is a Protestant state, is filled with indignation against the overbearing insolence of Prussia. So, also, are many of the smaller states. We have, therefore, the four largest states of Germany, as well as several of the smaller, equally indignant, equally disgusted, and equally prepared to unite with France against Prussian supremacy. All of them politically exasperated, and some of them under the twofold influence of policy and religious zeal. Whenever France is ready, she will find Germany fearfully divided against itself, and Prussia surrounded by enemies in her own camp. The outcry for German unity is only the cry of a party, not of a nation. It is the cry of the shark who eats the man (if sharks ever cry), but not the cry of the man who is going to be eaten. Was there ever such dullness before, as to imagine that German unity is longed for by the very persons who are to be extinguished by that unity? To mistake the joy of the shark in eating, for the joy of the man in being eaten!

Besides, we must remember that in the next war the state of the case will be far different from what it was in 1870. For in 1870 France went to war to seize the Rhenish provinces—and no German, worthy of the name, would consent to the breaking up of his fatherland. But in the next war, France will go to war, not for the Rhine, but for Alsace and Lorraine, and will profess the utmost veneration for the geographical unity of Germany. What she may do, if successful, is another question; but we may be certain that she will profess no other design but that of recovering her lost provinces, and then the discontented German states can join her with a safe conscience, speaking after the manner of men. And they may truly keep a safe conscience, even in a christian point of view, if they only remain neutral, and suffer France and Prussia to fight it out single-handed. When two lions are fighting, no man is bound to assist the one against the other, in order that the one whom he assists may be in good condition for devouring him. And we must also remember that Catholic Germany, especially Bavaria, is totally alienated from Prussia. If France should undertake to restore the temporal power, the whole of Catholic Germany will either unite with France, or, at the least, will remain perfectly neutral, and will look on at the struggle without any feeling but a secret wish for French success. It would, indeed, be impossible that it should be otherwise, since the contest between Romanism and Protestant Atheism has become a matter of life and death, and admits of no future alliance between the two contending factions.

The Roman Catholic papers contain the following ominous announcement: "It is good that it should be known that there are organizations, which may, at any moment, send the FIERY cross through Christendom, and link, in a new brotherhood of arms, the most wonderful the world has seen since the Crusades—nations the most opposite and various in race, in habits, and in aims." "And when the hour has struck, we must be ready to bear a man's and a martyr's testimony, to the honor and glory of the Church of God."

We have given the very words of the Catholic paper; and those words are sufficiently ominous after we have made allowance for every exaggeration. And the same paper has since added the following significant passage: "The Pilgrimages of the Middle Ages drew on the Crusades; and history is only repeating itself at the present day. Where the Cross has passed in long-drawn procession, armed men will spring forth from the soil beneath the tread of Palmer and of Priest." Such passages as these, indicate a desperate resolution, and an equally desperate preparation. It is all a preparation for the conflict of the Last Days, and for a strife, in which the dark materials of ambition, political hatred, and revenge, will be kindled into a flame by the torch of religious desperation. Every faction has an object of its own, and all are heaped together, like a funeral pile, till Jesuitism has applied the torch, but not with averted eyes. The Jesuits are the authors of this crisis—and it may be remarked that though the Jesuits often fail in their ultimate object, they never fail in throwing the world into confusion.

In the present case we think the Jesuits will be doubly successful. They will both raise the storm and enjoy the plunder of the wreck. We believe that the pilgrims at all the French shrines are as fully sincere as the followers of Peter the Hermit—as resolute in character—as determined in their objects—with that additional element of strength, a perfect knowledge of the world in which they move, and of the machinery by which that world itself is put in motion; while the pilgrims of the Middle Ages were a crowd of miserable wretches, half of them in rags, and all of them ignorant of the very position of the Holy Land to which they were directing their course. Yet those pilgrims liberated Jerusalem, and set up Godfrey of Bouillon as king. And will not the pilgrims of the nineteenth century liberate Rome from the government of Atheists, and set up the Pope, who, bad as he is, at least believes in a God and a Redeemer? With less weakness and absurdity than the pilgrims of old times, they are likely to have greater success.

But why waste words upon conjectures and abstractions, while we are surrounded by the certainties and the realities of the hour. The whole world is preparing for some enormous conflict. The Latin, and Teutonic, and Sclavonic races are collecting under arms in three distinct camps. The three great false religions of mankind, are arming (like three champions of the age of chivalry), not with spiritual arms, but with carnal weapons of the deadliest kind. There were, once upon a time, seven champions of Christendom, but now there are only three. St. Patrick of Ireland, St. Andrew of Scotland, and St. David of Wales, are all merged, for the present, in St. George of England. St. James of Spain will join St. Denis of France, and St. Anthony of Italy is already in alliance with a new and barbarous saint—St. Bismarck of Germany. We may add, that St. Patrick of Ireland is not altogether to be depended on as the ally of St. George, being always of a versatile temperament, and inclined in favor of St. Denis; but at present there are three champions, three great hostile races, and three forms of false christianity, Protestantism, Romanism, and the Greek Church; of these three Protestantism is perhaps the very worst and most corrupt, for it is largely but little better than Atheism.

The mind is confused in looking forward to the events which seem approaching. How shall we disentangle the iron threads of destiny? Almighty God is about to declare war against rebellious Christendom, and to turn every man's sword against his brother's. The Church of Rome has been stirred to its utmost depths. Day by day all the fiercest passions of that horrible religion are working upwards from the miry bed in which they have lain for nearly three hundred years. They float on that calm and crystal surface which the Roman flood has so long presented to the world. Elisha cut down a piece of wood and cast it into the waters, and that wood made the iron swim. The fall of the temporal power is that piece of wood, cast upon the waters of the Church of Rome, and making the iron terrors of that Church rise and float upon the surface. The now famous pilgrimages are completing their task, and well have they carried it on. They have roused up the ancient spirit of the Crusades, and have brought the Middle Ages into the nineteenth century. We believe it to be literally true, as stated by the Catholic papers, "that there are organizations, which may, at any moment, send the Fiery Cross through Christendom, and link in a new brotherhood of arms, the most wonderful that the world has seen, nations the most opposite and various, in race, in habits, and in aims." We equally believe that "when the hour has struck, there will be thousands ready to bear a man's, and even a martyr's testimony to the doctrines and the glory of the Catholic Church!" So the Catholic papers daringly announce, and so, we believe, it will be. Both parties have cast away the scabbard. A man of "blood and iron" has taken Germany in hand, as a man takes a sword, and declares for what we call Protestantism. The General of the Jesuits stands right before him, bearing in hand the Latin Races as a weapon of assault. Not yet quite ready for the combat, but growing sharper from day to day. There is now no possibility of a truce. One champion must live, and one must die; and England, having become old and toothless, can only mumble out a few words of moral "Suasion," which only provoke the laughter of the bystanders. Bismarck has openly declared that he looks upon England as a NONENTITY.

Every day we hear more and more of the vast preparations for the approaching battle. All the princes of Europe, from north to south, are in motion. Prussia is forming her alliances on a gigantic scale. The emperors of Germany and Austria have met—the kings of Italy and Denmark are in motion. The king of Belgium has been in Scotland, with the Queen and her foreign secretary—Russia has been in conference with Sweden—Austria and Russia are uniting together upon Turkish affairs—Austria has been encouraging the Servians in favor of revolt—the prince of Servia is with McMahon in Paris—and Turkey is perplexed—for Servia commands the entrance to the Turkish empire at large. Every statesman sees that France is determined upon more than revenge, and not without excuse; for La Marmora's new pamphlet has proved that Bismarck laid a snare to force Austria into war, and this fully justifies what we have always said—viz., that the same Bismarck equally laid a snare to force France into war. Therefore, France has an excuse for making every preparation—not for revenge, after all, but for retribution. And retribution she will have. The French preparations have been described by a foreign correspondent, as stupendous—and the fury of the French nation as actually awful. For well they know that they have been basely cheated, first, and then basely oppressed with a most exorbitant "indemnity" In the midst of these vast preparations, and burning for rage, France hears a sudden cry, wild as the battle-cries of the Middle Ages—"Sauvez Rome, et la France!" "Save Rome, and France!" What means this cry that has gone up from Paray-le-monial, and from all the shrines of France? What means this ominous conjunction? What brings France and Rome within the limits of one short prayer? Here, indeed, is prophecy fulfilled! From this day France and Rome are indissolubly joined. France and the Seven Hills, and the Scarlet Woman, are now united in one combined effort, and for one terrible destiny, It is wonderful how, beyond all expectation. France and the Seven Hills have been brought together, for good or evil, for life or for death—united by passions so exactly alike that they resemble an iron chain of the same uniform metal. They can no longer separate, they must rise and fall together.—Prophetic Times.

APOSTASY.

L. BOUTELL.

It seems almost impossible to keep out of this destructive channel. There is such an inbred tendency in this direction, that, unless we perseveringly guard against it, we are gliding down stream before we know it. This is so individually and collectively,—religiously and politically. It has never been known in any age that a body, having apostatized, ever reformed itself; but, following worldly policy, have grown more corrupt. And the only safety from utter ruin is to leave the dying carcass—"come out of her." This is done by keeping in the light which moves us forward.

In spite of everything that hinders, we have left the policy seekers and world pleasers far behind. The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ in this generation has been our cry. This was our God-given message,—this was our peculiar work,—this our preaching,—the Coming One. It must be stamped on all our periodicals, and written on and in all our books and tracts. It must be foremost and uppermost. All understand what "Advent believer," "Advent Herald," "Advent Messenger," "Advent preaching," "Advent campmeeting," and "Advent Conference" mean. What was expected at these meetings?—in these books, tracts and periodicals? The coming of the precious Savior to reward every man was made to stand out prominent, second to no truth however important. Notwithstanding the sacredness of our calling and message, with the accumulating evidence that we are in the "quickly," with the mighty responsibility of holding the sunlight certainty still higher, and letting it shine, the careful watcher can see a letting down of the standard,—conservatism creeps in,—the curative medicine must be diluted,—sugar-coated pills must be given,—improved names for the heading of papers, our churches, our chapels, and our meetings. Independent, Evangelical, Christian, and any name, is better than that old stigmatized name, "Second Advent." The change seems to say, We'll now wipe off reproach and be somebody. Thus the Lord's coming is made of secondary importance—kept in the background. These things ought not so to be. Is this standing up for Jesus? Is this the way to prepare ourselves or others for Christ's speedy coming? Is this the way to bear reproach for Jesus?

Dear brethren, hoist the standard that is trailing in the mud. Welcome all the reproach that comes from keeping our old colors high, so that they may be seen and known. If this is not done amid these last events that certify our faith, the cause will suffer, and we shall never hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful," "enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

PERSONAL PIETY.

O. R. FASSETT.

THE SAINTS FEW.

Real, personal, christian religion is greatly wanting in this age. A "form of godliness" is abundant, but "the power" is lacking. There is a great deal of talk about religion, and much boasting, and high-sounding profession of christian experience and attainment,—never so much, perhaps, in any period of the world's history. But where are the saints visible, as shining stars in our firmament of heaven? Where is real vital godliness manifested in a pure christian life? It is too painfully evident that there are but a few—a "little flock," who are in possession of real personal piety in this day; and this, with other evidences, gives startling proof that the end is near.

WHAT ARE THE CAUSES

of the low type of Christianity which characterizes this age? When we witness certain effects to be deplored, we search for the cause or causes which produced them, and remove or correct them, if possible. If pestilence is breeding in a city, sanitary measures are immediately taken to determine and remove the cause of the infection. If the inmates of a dwelling are suffering continually from disease, it may be owing to impure air, lack of sunshine, or suitable and wholesome food. If christians and christian churches are suffering,—being sickly, lacking in spiritual health, vitality and growth, there are causes for this state of things; and what is more reasonable than to conclude that it is for the want of the pure air of the Spirit, the lack of real gospel sunshine, and the need of the right biblical food necessary to a healthful vigorous growth? If so, are greatly to blame, who have the charge of "the household of God." Not wholly, of course; for there are personal responsibilities. But do not many of them shut the doors of their churches against the pure air of the Holy Spirit's workings? close the blinds to the sunlight of the true gospel of God, and give to the people from their pulpits "the doctrines" and "traditions of men" learned in the schools, instead of the wholesome Word of God?

THE MINISTRY

SENSATIONAL SERMONS,

and appeals to human sympathy, without instructing the people in "the Word of life," together with human forms, ceremonies and machinery, are made use of to create revival interest, awaken good emotions and good feelings, and rouse the conscience of the people to be good, profess religion, and join the church; as though the whole sum total of effort was merely to gain this end. The public, too, demand and the churches join in the demand, in order to fill the vacant pews of their costly and elegant temples of worship with paying hearers, who must meet the extravagant expenditures incurred. And the ministry, to please both the churches and the world and accomplish the herculean task put into their hands, must preach on popular themes to please the fancy and tickle the ears of the multitude, especially the rich and worldly proud; hence they give them "fables," for "sound doctrine" which they will not hear, using the Bible as a mere text-book.

POPULAR SERMONS,

Can it be otherwise than that the religion of such an age be merely emotional, evanescent, and of the lowest stamp, vanishing on entering upon the stern and sober duties and trials of life, and pass away as time is given for the good emotions kindled to disappear? Instead of being the ministry, in many instances, cater to the public taste, and serve up "spare dishes" of gospel, and bring from "their own pantry" themes and ideas the public like, to gratify their vitiated taste. And there is also an exceeding vagueness in all their sermons, so that the churches and people remain in blissful ignorance of real scriptural doctrines, and of even what their preachers themselves believe. Thus the world rushes on, unwarned of the approaching judgment; sinners of the real doom that awaits them; and the churches are unapprised that the advent of their coming Bridegroom and Lord and King is "near, even at the door!"

Now, the fact is, the gospel ministry fail of fulfilling their calling unless they "preach the Word"; except they use "the sword of the Spirit" with "two edges." Heb. 4:12; 2 Tim. 4:1. The people must have "the truth," "sound doctrine," "the Word of God," to convict, convert, justify, sanctify, make holy, and save them.

PROGRESS.

Christians should be making progress as the years pass on. They should be "growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." And for this they must have vital piety. This involves growth.

Growth is the evidence of life in nature. The branch which puts forth its leaves, and bears blossoms, gives evidence of life; and that it receives sap from the parent stalk. If a branch does not shoot forth leaves in the spring, we know it is dying or dead. A growing child, both in stature and in intelligence, we know is a living child. A dead child neither grows in size, nor has it intelligence; but it falls to corruption. Where life exists, even in manhood, there are constant vital changes going on in the system, by which the food received into the stomach is converted into material which repairs, or goes to make up the waste of the body. A dead man has no vital processes going on in his organism, but on the contrary all is stagnant, and the body is going fast to decay and putrefaction. So also in the spiritual world, where there is spiritual growth there is proof of the existence of spiritual life. And the absence of this growth gives unmistakable evidence of the want of spiritual life.

MESMERISM,

or spasmodic and fitful emotions under that influence, producing for the time being good impressions and joyful impulses, are no evidence of the presence of spiritual life. Galvanism or electricity may produce in a dead corpse the appearance of life for the instant. And electricity is a mysterious agent resembling and nearest akin to the inscrutable life-element, of anything in nature; but it is not life, nor can it impart life. Galvanic agency, rousing up the dead body into fitful action for a time, is one thing; but life in the living organism is quite another.

Animal magnetism, used by a speaker knowing how to use the power and exerting it, with stirring appeals to "seek religion," and this power concentrated by several persons during intense religious excitement upon individuals or a congregation, may start the mesmerized into the appearance of vital religion for a season; but unless these are "begotten by the incorruptible seed"—the Word of God, through the divine agency and power of the Holy Spirit, they will be dead persons, "in trespasses and in sins," still; and after a time will relapse into their cold and lifeless condition again.

This is not intended as disparaging protracted and religious efforts to save perishmen men, and promote true revival interests. Nor would we by any means ascribe all the results of such measures to mesmeric agency. God forbid! We tread on dangerous ground here, and without discriminating care may be guilty of "blasphemy against the Holy Spirit,"—in declaring what is most manifestly the work of the Spirit of God, to be the work of men or Satan. But be it remembered that often, "when the sons of God come to present themselves before the Lord, Satan comes also among them" (Job 1:6); and where the Holy Spirit's power is manifest, the adversary has his counterfeit! If this be not the case, why are not the fruits of modern revivals more lasting and effectual, witnessed in a permanent christian life? From the beginning of my own ministry, my only reliability in any permanent good being accomplished under my labors, has been in preaching "the Word of God, leaving "the Holy Spirit" to do its office work in the conviction, and conversion, and enlightenment of men.

THE HIGH CALLING OF GOD IN CHRIST JESUS.

C. COLGROVE.

There can be no possible question of the duty and delight of spiritual proficiency. Singular excellence of moral character is a noble object of sanctified desire. Inaction and unaspiring self-content can have nothing to charm or befit the believer touched and attracted by the power of Jesus. The ineffable and precious purity of the blood of the crucified Son of man, is ever renewing in the mind a sense of obligation, and the yearning for a more sacred and profound experience of its power. The sovereign agency of the Holy Spirit is yet more ardently courted in the work of quickening and transformation. Moved by new and speechless apprehensions of the magnitude of interests and possibilities which are disclosed and open to the heir of life eternal, the believer struggles with an ardor of pursuit which only God himself can understand, after moral excellence and perfect spiritual liberty. His cries of entreaty rise in appeals whose intensity and persistence he knows are abundantly justified by the exigency of of his necessities, and the transcendent splendor of the objects that kindle his desire and animate his hope.

Certainly the apostle, in considering the attraction and value of the prize of God's high calling, is keenly sensitive to the preciousness of sanctified affections. The excellency of the knowledge of Jesus is an attainment which he contemplates with a partiality and longing making every inferior possession contemptible in comparison. To be apparelled in his perfect righteousness, is a fruition and accomplishment so full of sweetness, and of such priceless value and advantage, that he counts no expenditure too great, and no sacrifice too costly to secure it. But is this the perfection of the picture that is presented to his mind? If we examine the Philippian letter, we shall see that his aspirations are not exhausted upon an object so glorious as spiritual perfection of character. In fact, it is perfectly certain that the grand prize of God's high calling is plainly a righteous resurrection from the dead. This is the completed result, the splendid coronation of all effort and attainment. For it is in immediate sequence upon the ejaculation of ardent desire that he might attain to a resurrection from the dead, that he protests his conscious failure of the high attainment and the grand perfection. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." But the prize of the high calling is in full view, and we consider it the potent voice of that shining Master over the whole domain of death, who shall shout to his beloved as he flashes with an apparition of tender brightness from above. It is literally the upward calling. It is in harmony with the assurance to Nicodemus of the magnitude of the new birth, or birth from above, which, we suppose, comprehends both a moral regeneration and a literal resurrection. And not only is this apostolic pressing toward the mark for the prize, immediately preceded, but it is also very closely followed by an explicit declaration of expectation for the grand act of God's majesty, in sending his Son, with plenary power, to raise his saints and glorify them with immortal brightness.

We may learn still further the relation of God's calling to the resurrection of the dead by Scripture citations. For example, in Eph. 1:18,—"the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." The avenue to the possession of the inheritance is evidently the first resurrection. The mighty God, even the Lord, shall speak and shall call the earth from the rising of the sun, unto the going down thereof. His invocation shall penetrate the tombs of the dead under the whole heaven. He shall come and shall not keep silence. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. His mighty mandate shall break from the celestial down to the aerial heavens, and thence down into all the misty depths of death, and the roused slumberers shall spring into the air. "Gather my saints unto me" is the order of that illustrious morning. The riches of the glory of the new inheritance is reached and realized by the act of a resurrection. Still further, the apostle—"And what is the exceeding greatness of his power toward us who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead." Exactly thus as the eternal One with might irresistible brought up the pierced Redeemer from the hewn tomb where the Arimathean laid him, will he raise the beloved kindred of God. This resurrection is the hope, the coronation and felicity of hope;—it is the hope of the calling, the hope of a voice calling to dead men to revive, a voice full of majesty and melody and affection, a voice which death can not refuse to obey, for at its mandate the most dread Egyptian despot shall let his prisoners go.

Again read in 2 Thess. 1:10. Here is the coming of Messiah in majesty. The incorrigible troublers, the saint-burners, the muderers with their chains and staples, their powder-bags and fire-brands, their ropes and sacks and dungeons, shall melt at his presence—"when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe"—"wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling." Is not this the electric summons? Is it not the vivifying voice of power to the holy dead? Is it not a divine articulation more mellow and yet more mighty than all the thunders of thrice twenty centuries.

Again see in 2 Tim. 1:9. "Who hath saved us" (prospectively), "and called us with a holy calling not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but it is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ who hath abolished death" &c. We submit if there is not here an allusion to the second coming of Christ, as well as to the first. The abolition of death is still prospective in complete accomplishment. It is certified by a demonstration so grand as the resurrection of the great Restorer himself. The Son of God hath thrust the lever under the castle of the terrible giant. He has abolished death in so far as seizing the key to all the dungeons of his dominion, and holding it fast and forever in his possession, can mean abolition. The decree of abolition is promulgated, but yet the consummation waits. So also, God hath called his people by his providence, Word, and spirit. But the final blessed call to immortality by the resurrection is yet future.

Again in 2 Pet. 1:10—"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." The saints call to sonship and obedience; what a gracious expression of divine benevolence; and what a marvel of condescension to man! This mark of distinction, how gratefully it should be heeded, and how affectionately cherished! Let it be confirmed by such a holiness of behavior that it shall mature in the sublime and electrifying call to immortal glory. The spiritual and expectant sons of God will feel the attraction of an energy that will raise them to see and meet their royal Beloved. The power of God will find a way to seize them into immortality, by virtue of that mark and seal of the Holy Spirit upon their very dust, which has its counterpart in the record of their names in the book of life.

O height, and breadth, and strength of that magic and masterstroke, that shall baffle corruption, and revivify the dead; that shall unlock ten times fifty million tombs; that shall astonish, and depose from his ghastly throne the despot, Death; that shall summon into new order and union the bones of martyrs; recompose dissolved organisms; restore lost identities; glorify unremembered sufferers, and fill heaven and earth with joy and wonder at a spectacle of faithfulness, power, and majesty, doubtless unknown in all the previous handiwork of God.

CHRIST'S PREDICTION.

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory."—LUKE 21: 25, 26, 27.

The Savior used this language in predicting the signs which will precede and be connected with his second coming. The language clearly and explicitly expresses the idea that just before his return to the earth there would be certain manifestations in the sun, moon, stars, and earth, which would cause men to fear that a continuance or extending of the causes of the convulsions already taking place would result eventually in dreadfully destructive calamities to men upon the earth. It shows that the causes, which produced the events of the signs, would be understood by men, and that they would calculate that a natural progression of those agencies would result in some catastrophe on the earth.

The prediction proves that the men who fear will calculate correctly as to the fearful events coming, for Jesus says of them, "Looking after those things which ARE coming on the earth." Then the very things which they anticipate with fear "are coming [or will come] on the earth." These men are not christians, for the Bible everywhere represents christians as looking for that day with joy and not with fear. Then they do not look for these things because the Scriptures teach that they are coming, but because they reason from cause to effect, and calculate that the causes which have produced the phenomena foretold by Christ, —"great earthquakes, . . . and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs . . . from heaven," "in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring,"—were produced by natural laws; and that the same agencies, governed by the same laws, will continue to increase the destructive forces of the deranged "powers" until the framework of our world shall be taken down and "removed like a cottage." It is, therefore, evident that the Savior predicted that these fearful calculations of coming earthly calamities would be made by learned men, who would study the causes of these strange convulsions in nature, and by the light of science would come to their fearful conclusions. We believe that we have come to the very time and events foretold by the Savior. Nature is certainly showing strange signs of fearful convulsions. The heavens and earth are in a perturbed state of unrest.

Learned men and scientists are now critically examining the disturbing causes which are producing these phenomena in nature, and some of them come to just such conclusions as the Savior predicted, as will be seen from the following from the Waverly Magazine:—

TERRIBLE PREDICTIONS.

"Few know the terrible import of the recent meeting of the American Scientific Association, at Portland. In its development of new horrors in store for poor humanity, it was awfully prolific. Its members vied with each other in predictions of coming convulsions of nature, and sustained their arguments with truths brought to light from the deepest and darkest wells of science. That humanity is to be obliterated was the gist of five papers, read by five of the most scientific, trusty, and celebrated members of the Association. A terrible and total extinction of animal life was foretold by all, the only question being, which of the five horrors would first develop itself, and perform the work of universal destruction.

THE SUN TO BE EXTINGUISHED.

Prof. Young, the most eminent living student of solar physics, read a paper on the sun. That body, he argued, is a gigantic bubble, whose crust is gradually thickening, and whose size is diminishing. There is a constant loss of heat, with its extinction as a producer of warmth and light. He quoted Faye, Secchi and others, to prove that the material of the sun is gaseous, and that these gases are retained by some kind of a crust. Through this surface the tumultuous inner composition is constantly spurting and outspurting with grand violence. He thinks that this crust "may consist of a sheet of descending rain—not of water, of course, but of the materials whose vapors are known to exist in the solar atmosphere, and whose condensation and combination are supposed to furnish the solar heat." As this peculiar rain meets the gaseous substance of the sun, it coalesces into a continuous sheet, forming "a sort of bottomless ocean, resting upon the condensed vapors underneath, and pierced by innumerable ascending jets and bubbles." This action of the sun's envelop will be a drenching of the great orb upon which we depend for heat and light. It will grow smaller and more compressed, and surrounded by the crust, until it will be so hidden and muffled as to be practically excluded from the economy of the universe. The result will be intense cold and darkness, a cessation of all animal life, and an immediate return to original chaos.

THE BUBBLE EARTH TO BURST.

Gen. J. G. Barnard described the interior of the earth as a molten fluid. Previous notions had given the earth, however, a rigid exterior surface from one to two thousand feet deep. He refuted this theory, and claimed for the globe upon which we live somewhat the construction of a rubber ball filled with melted lead. The surface is, he thinks, a pliable coating that has been gradually formed over the fiery mass inside. A globular form is maintained by rapid rotary motion; the inner fluid sustaining the soft shell in its position, so that the undulations are imperceptible to us. Thus we are being whirled through space on a huge globule, the surface of which floats on an interior of liquid fire. Only the rotary speed of this bubble keeps it together, and any disarrangement or change in terrestrial phenomena would transform it all into a fluid that would resolve itself into vapor. Gen. Barnard does not believe that the surface is of an essentially different composition from the liquid interior—it has only been condensed sufficiently to form a sort of capsule. The tenure of the world's existence, therefore, is exceedingly uncertain. Any greatly disturbing influence—the breaking out of a huge volcano, any change in the surface that would render it brittle, the impact of a heavy meteor or comet—may, in a moment, immolate it, leaving humanity to whirling death, amid the horrors of inorganic space.

DARKNESS, SILENCE AND DEATH.

Mr. H. F. Walling began an essay on the "Dissipation of Energy," by saying: "Since the days of the ancients it has been known that all motion is gradually developed by friction, and must finally cease, unless maintained by external power." The heat power of the sun, which he regarded as the motive power of the earth, is being exhausted by the prodigious lavishness of its expenditure. It is supposed, he said, that the satellite will fall into planets, the planets into suns, and suns into a common centre, after which, "darkness, silence and death will reign." He was not without a shadow of hope, however. He saw only two possible chances for a postponement, at least, of the dreadful catastrophe: First, a series of natural chemical evolutions attracting to the sun a vast amount of combustible material; and second, the infinite magnitude of the universe being sufficient to permit never-ending concentration of masses. One dreaded effect of a loss of sun power, he said, is a displacement of atmospheric forces. Tidal influences or planetary collisions may hasten the dreadful catastrophe, which will be a slowing of the machinery of the universe, until growing stagnation culminates in a total extinction of life forces.

UNIVERSAL DROUTH AND STARVATION.

Prof. Franklin B. Hough foretold a perpetual drouth, the result of a clearing off of the forests. "The contrast," he said, "between an open and sun-burnt pasture and one interspersed with clumps of trees, must have been noticed by every careful observer. The fact that furniture in houses too much shaded will mould, is an instance of the humid influence of trees; and the results of woodland shade explain the fulness of springs and streams in the forest, which dry up and disappear when the trees are removed." The rapidity with which forests are disappearing has already been a matter of alarm; but when we consider the effect upon streams—practical illustrations of large ones being lessened and small ones extinguished—there is cause for fright. Land will become unwatered, and consequently sterile; crops will lessen in volume until the arid and treeless plains refuse to respond to the incitement of the farmer; universal famine will ensue; and the world, entirely depopulated by starvation, will sink into uninhabitativeness, until some new change calls another form of life into existence.

INSECTS TO END THE HUMAN RACE.

Dr. Le Conte, the new President of the Association, read a paper on the enormous increase and destructiveness of injurious insects. The present actual damage done by insects to crops in the United States is over three millions of dollars, yet these figures give but an inkling of what the increase promises for the future. "Just now," says Le Conte, "a portion only of the insect tribes are sufficiently numerous by nature to inflict injury upon man and his possessions; but civilization destroys the balance of life, which naturally keeps down increase, and permits in the case of insects—those previously insignificant in numbers—to become prominent factors in a work of destruction." The only methods suggested by this scientist to avert a calamitous plague, were to "abandon the crops and starve out the noxious insects," or to establish "a system of checks on their increase equivalent to those existing before civilization interfered." Either of these plans are, of course, impracticable. The impending dilemma seems to be, such an increase of insects that the plagues of Egypt will be more than reproduced, and that all vegetation, and finally starving and helpless man himself, will be eaten.

All of which augurs an early dropping of the curtain upon the fleeting show of life. We quote:—

"I would not live alway; I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
The few lurid mornings that dawn on us here
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer."

We cannot vouch for the scientific correctness of all expressed in these learned men's essays, but the principles by which they argue, and the destructive nature of coming events, we are confident are in perfect harmony with the Savior's prediction, and we think their fearfulness a part of its fulfillment.

J. C.

BRO. KEENER writes, desiring some preaching brother to go to his place and preach the gospel of the kingdom. They are trying to sustain meetings, and build a church, and would be happy to have a man of God locate with them. We hope that the Lord may send one of his servants to that place:—York Furnace, York Co., Pa.

MEETINGS AT CHELSEA.

Our protracted meeting last week was truly a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. Bro. Stockman was with us, and labored efficiently, and to very good acceptance to large congregations who came out to hear. He preached on those neglected and unpopular truths which we love,—the personal and immediate coming of Christ, resurrection of the dead, the earth to be renewed and inherited by the saints, sanctification through belief of and obedience to the truth, holiness and heart purity—ingredients of Christianity here, and essential to eternal salvation hereafter. Divine power and much assurance accompanied the Word; sinners were convicted, saints rejoiced, and backsliders trembled. About twenty have made a special move for salvation. Some of these were sinners, but many of them were backsliders, lukewarm professors, who needed renewing and cleansing from sins of unbelief and disobedience just as much as those who had never professed Christ. The work appears to be thorough, with no undue excitement or wild enthusiasm.

The people are powerfully convicted that Christ is soon coming, and the harvest about to end, and that they must find a hiding-place immediately from the coming storm, or be exposed to the consuming fires of the judgment. These truths were especially designed by God to draw men up to the point of realizing the infinite importance of speedy and thorough preparation to meet their Judge.

The meetings continue very interesting to this time (Jan. 23d), some starting for the kingdom every evening. These special efforts to get the church into a gospel position of complete salvation, where it will be efficient in accomplishing its appointed work of saving the perishing around us, is of incalculable importance. The day of the Lord is at hand. Our dear ones must be rescued now as brands from the burning, or be forever lost. Do you comprehend it? Do you realize its vast importance? The Holy Spirit alone can impress us with the vastness of these eternal interests, and that they must be secured before reaching a point just in advance of us, or eternally lost.

CHURCH PROGRESS.

It has been believed by many that the world is growing better, and that its conversion to Christ and Christian religion must take place about this time. A vast amount of evangelical machinery, in the form of associations, and other arrangements, have been prepared for this work, but for some reason the anticipated result does not follow. The number of conversions are becoming less, infidelity is increasing, and church membership diminishing, thus confirming the prophetic Scriptures, "that in the last days, perilous times shall come." Every year, the spirit of worldliness, pride and foolish fashion, covetousness and cold formalism, are on the increase to an alarming extent. Many are beginning to awake to a sense of the sad state of things now prevailing. Of course, the only remedy, is by submitting to Christ; but this the people will not do, but are rejecting him more and more decidedly than ever before.

The prospects for the conversion of the world, as taught by many, are steadily fading away and disappearing, but some still try to prop up the system, although it is without foundation in the Bible, or facts corresponding. "Worse and worse" is the programme for "the last days," as declared in the sacred Scriptures. There is no room to hope for any general improvement before the coming of Christ.

We are aware that many christian people are still looking for a temporal millennium before the personal coming of Christ, but we must say most emphatically, that we can find no evidence for such a belief, but positive evidence to the contrary. The prophets, the Savior, and the apostles, have all united in declaring that the times just before the coming of Christ will be noted for abounding in wickedness, quite like what we now see on all sides.

One prominent reason for the declension of true religious interest at the present time, lies in the fact that the popular preaching of the day is so adulterated with false theology, and so poorly supplied with practical truth, that those who receive it are hardly improved sufficiently to make it perceptible to a careful observer. The outside world look on, and conclude that it will not pay to make much sacrifice to obtain a religion that will make no more improvement than what is seen in most professors. Instead of being led to Christ, they became decidedly skeptical, looking down with contempt upon what may be called a counterfeit christianity, which is but little more than worldliness dressed up in good morals, and even that is often but a scanty pattern. While it may have a fair, fashionable exterior, within it is all rotten with sin. It is like the whited sepulchre, of which the Savior speaks. As things are now running, such a system must die of its own disease, instead of giving health and happiness to others. It is like the salt that has lost its savor—"good for nothing."

He who ventures to now preach the pure religion of Jesus may expect to be treated about as the Lord's disciples were by the Pharisees, and be looked upon as an old fogy, especially by the leaders in the fashionable churches. We believe the popular church influence at the present time is one of the greatest obstacles in the way of the conversion of sinners. We do not wish to be severe, but think it is time to speak plainly, and sound an alarm everywhere. "Vanity fair" is crowded with church visitors at the present day, and but few pilgrims go by the way of the cross and "hill of difficulty."

Inasmuch as the popular religion of the day has lost its vitality by being mixed up with the spirit and manners of the world, thus crowding out Christ; and as the pure religion of Jesus is rejected by the same class as well as by the world, because it condemns both, it follows that we are rapidly approaching the period when it will be as it was in the days of Noah and Lot. Those who wish to be ready to meet the Lord in peace, must come out from the world and be separate, or run the risk of losing eternal life.

The following statistics are to the point. They appeared in the Chicago Tribune, Jan. 18th, 1874:

It will be observed that the decrease in the last decade has been alarming, showing a falling off of more than one third, when compared with the previous ten years. How long would it take to convert the world to Satan at this rate? It is a great delusion to believe the world is growing better, or that the ratio of saints to sinners is to increase between now and the end of the present dispensation. The little remaining time between to-day and the coming of our Savior will most certainly be loaded with a startling degree of wickedness. Let us hide in Christ, where we can rest in safety.

STRIKES.

The business men's prospects look very gloomy and uncertain at the present time. The laboring classes are becoming more and more uneasy and unwilling to submit to the present rates of wages. They are combining against their employers, holding mass meetings, at which exciting speeches are made, calculated to arouse their sympathizers to daring deeds. They talk of destruction and bloodshed, if their demands for higher wages are not met. Every strike made only increases the difficulty they wish to remove. If the employer is compelled to advance the wages of his workmen, he puts an advanced price upon his goods, so as to make the same amount of profit as before, and this advance is paid by the consumers, which are largely the laboring classes. The farmer raises the price of his produce, because he is obliged to pay more for his clothing, coal, furniture, etc., because of the results of the strikes. Thus in a short time after the increase of wages, in compliance with the demand of the strikers, they find themselves as deep in the mire as they were in the mud before the strike. The same would be true if their wages were put up to ten dollars a day. We think they were far better off when wages, produce and merchandise were low, and friendship prevailed between employers and employees than they will ever be again.

The bitter feeling arising between the laborers and capitalists must prove very disastrous to both parties, especially to the poor working men and their families. We can see no way out of the trouble now. Apparently, it has gone too far for a peaceable compromise. The bitter hostility keeps increasing, and the causes for it continue to multiply on both sides. Their wills are becoming fixed against each other like two nations just before they engage in open, bloody combat. The prospect is a dark one, with no apparent bright spot this side of the coming of Christ. Let christians keep out of the strife and all worldly organizations instituted for self-preservation, trusting wholly in Jesus, and all will be well.

POWER OF PREJUDICE.

Perhaps one of the greatest obstacles in the way of receiving the truth is prejudice, which consists in prejudging before the subject is carefully investigated. By this means Satan holds sway over a multitude of sincere christian people, besides the hosts of others who might be reached, if it were not because of their prejudice, which has arisen from some misunderstanding, or misrepresentation of the subject. Prejudice is often stronger than reason, argument, or even facts. Its ears, eyes, and all its senses seem to be perverted and rendered of no use by this blinding power. The first aim of Satan, when any important truth is advanced, is to cause some of its advocates to do or say something to make it unpopular, in order to stir up prejudice. This is his most successful way of attack. And when a stain is once fastened upon a system of truth in this way, it usually takes a long time to remove the reproach and prejudice. Whenever the subject is mentioned, the bad things or bad examples of its defenders come at once to mind, and thus the prejudice is kept up in the minds of sincere, honest and good people.

This is the case in relation to the all-important subject of the second coming of Christ. It has suffered more from its professed friends than from any other source. When we look over the history of the past thirty years, and see what has been done and said by some who have believed the doctrine, we wonder at the success which has been experienced while it was encumbered with such dead weights. Had it not been founded in truth, and favored by the Lord, it must have been buried in ruins before this time. But in spite of all the multiplied hindrances, caused by the errors and misconduct of some who have been its advocates, the subject of the speedy coming of Christ, and associated events, have not met a more hearty welcome for twenty-five years than at the present time. Large numbers are becoming anxious to hear, and are sending hearty invitations for preaching on the subject. Ministers are waking up to its importance in all parts of Christendom, and thousands of others would come and hear and believe, if it were not for their prejudice. He who is the instrument to produce this prejudice is doing a sad work, by causing people to stay away from the light, now shining so brightly. If the prejudiced ones could only be persuaded to listen to the strong evidences now existing in favor of the speedy coming of our Savior, there is no doubt but that many of them would embrace the truth rejoicingly.

Much prejudice has arisen because the definite time has been preached in relation to the second coming of Christ, and suppose that, because those times have mostly passed by, the whole thing is a failure. To such we would say, should they read this, that the failure of any time set by human chronological calculation has nothing to do with the main evidence on the subject, as brought to view in the chains of prophecy found in Daniel and John, and in the signs of the times. There is no failure in these, but they have spoken louder and louder every year, till their thunder tones are now being echoed over the world,—Jesus is coming soon; be ready to meet him.

WESTERN TRIP.

Monday, Jan. 19th, we left Chicago en route for San Francisco. We took the C. B. and Q. R. R. to Omaha, which we consider the best route. We found no sleighing. There is only a little sprinkling of snow, and the weather is quite moderate. It hardly seems like winter. We met with no novelties on the way worth reporting, while passing through the rich farming states of Illinois and Iowa. It takes about twenty-four hours to go from Chicago to Omaha. Leaving C. at 10 A. M. we are due at O. 9.45 the following day. The time of leaving O. on the Union Pacific R. R. is at 11.30. Thus far this winter, the trains have not been obstructed by snows on the way to California, and we are hoping to get through on time.

RELIGIOUS INFIDELS.—The statement—"We are infidels who believe in religion," sounds strangely. It was made by Mr. Gannet, at the "Free Religious Association," recently held in New York. In speaking of the Evangelical Alliance, he says:—

"But they call us infidels, and we accept the name and are glad, and would not have another name given us by them. Think of their platform. 1. Fhe divine inspirattion, authority and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures. We believe in the divine inspiration, authority and sufficiency of facts. 2. The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures. We believe in the right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of all facts. 3. the unity of the Godhead. Oh, how deeply we believe in that and the Trinity of the Deity. Why, that is the faintest mystery of what we believe. The utter depravity of human nature, by reason of the fall. We believe in the utter capacity of human nature by reason of the ascent. And the atonement for the sins of mankind, and Christ as a mediator. We believe that the one vicarious atonement is only a clumsy symbol of one of the greatest laws. We believe in every pure woman as a mediator who lifts us up to the higher."

WINNOWED HYMNS is the title of a new collection of very choice hymns and tunes, published by Biglow and Main, 805 Broadway, New York. It contains 128 pp.

Price $25 per hundred, 30 cts. single.

INQUIRIES.

1. Can it be shown that there have been just 1873 years since the birth of Christ?

2. If it is not certain that there have been just this number, how can we with confidence add this number to any other number before the birth of Christ, and thereby determine when the 6000 years will end, or the coming of Christ take place.

CHRONOLOGY.

It is stated by Usher, and assented to by most chronologers, that there is an interregnum of eleven or twelve years between the reigns of Amaziah and Azariah, kings of Judah. 2 Kings, 14th and 15th chapters.

Will some one who has adopted this position of Usher tell us how such a conclusion is arrived at?

I. I. LESLIE.

THE decision of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, announced in our cable despatches this morning to "suppress the violence of the French Ultramontanes," shows that the influence of Bismarck's policy has reached the authorities at Paris. The power of the Catholic element in France is gradually, but surely, waning. This is clearly proved by the fact that the Ultramontanes have allowed their organ, L Univers, the suspension of which was announced in our foreign despatches, a few days ago, to die without a vigorous effort to keep it in existence. The sheet was the Paris mouthpiece of the Pope, and not a few of its articles were said to be inspired by, if not actually written by, the ruler of the Vatican, and its death is a significant evidence of the weakness of those whose views it represented and defended. The decision of the Duc de Cazes, not to interfere with the existing condition of affairs in Italy, is another evidence of the drift of public opinion in France.

IF you would be pungent, be brief; words are like sunbeams; the more they are condensed, the deeper they burn.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

"SUPPORTING THE MINISTER."

J. M. WHITMORE.

I object to the phrase. It is unfair, unjust and uncourteous. The minister is merely a man among men. He is neither a lord nor a slave; neither a prince nor a pauper, nor should he be treated as one. The ministry ought not to be considered a privileged class. Caste is an odious term in America, and deservedly so. The theory of our constitution is that all citizens are equal before the law, nor does society, religious or secular, act wisely when it permits anything that tends to abrogate or nullify this wise provision of our republican government. In England and elsewhere, where Church and State are united, religious preferment depends very largely upon political influence. This is but a legitimate result of a system where the State supports the church, and makes a privileged class of its ministry.

In the church of England an ecclesiastical charge is called a "living." This has a commercial value, and is rated at so many pounds, shillings and pence annually. This practice holds good, I believe, through all the gradations of rank from the curacy to the archbishopric. Fortunately this is not the case in America. Our churches' expenses are paid by the voluntary contributions of the people. This is right and just and scriptural. This being the case, we ought not to talk about supporting our ministers any more than we talk about supporting our farmers, mechanics, merchants, lawyers, or doctors. It is either right or wrong to pay them for their services. If it be right to pay them at all, then it is wrong not to pay them properly,—just as wrong as not to pay any other justly incurred debt. Churches want honest ministers, men who pay their debts and keep their word. This requirement is an eminently just one. But how can a man who is dependent upon his own exertions for a livelihood,—how, it may be asked, can such a man give all his time to the ministry without receiving any pay therefor, and yet remain honest or maintain his self respect?

Robert Collier's recent letter in favor of ministers paying full price for value received has provoked considerable discussion. On the one hand it is claimed that half-fare tickets on railroads, twenty per cent discount from regular price on books, stationary, clothing, furniture, etc., allowed to certain persons because they are ministers, may be defended not only, but commended because they are favors shown to a needy and illy-paid class of useful persons. On the other hand, it is claimed that the bestowment of privileges and perquisites of money value on a class as a class, and not for services rendered or value received, has the direct tendency to create a caste, and what is still worse, to destroy the self-respect of the very persons who are thus sought to be favored. Another objection to the practice of extending half fares, discounts, etc., to ministers is, that the churches knowing this, look upon such favors as part of their pastor's pay, and consequently shirk their own duty.

For my part, I believe Mr. Collier is right. No man who values self-respect and independence of character can afford to go to his butcher, his tailor, his grocer and his merchant, and ask them to discount their usual and regular prices for their goods to him, because he is a minister. A minister has no better right to expect half price railway fares than he has to expect to buy butter, flour, meat or potatoes at half price; and he has no better right to expect either than the shoemaker, the cartman, hod carrier, or any other common laborer. People who ride with free passes over our lines of railway, or have free tickets (complimentary, they are called,—though they are not that to either party) to the lecture, the concert, or the library, are called "dead-heads." Now it must be owned that the term is not very elegant, though it is sufficiently expressive; and I doubt if any church would feel honored by having its minister called a "dead-head." No! the true minister can not afford to earn such odious names as "dead-head" and "dead-beat," nor could any self-respecting church afford to let him earn them if he were willing to do it. He can only afford to be an honest, industrious, self-respecting christian gentleman. No minister is bound to starve or to be dishonest. If a competent man who gives his whole time and energies to the work of the ministry does not receive sufficient pay to enable him to meet his necessary expenses, and to pay his honest debts necessarily incurred while engaged in such work, who will say that he ought to remain in such place or work? There are some who will say he ought, but not I. No man has a right to do evil that good may come. Exitus acta probat is a worldly, not a heavenly maxim.

Many a time my cheeks have burned with shame when compelled to listen to appeals publicly made for money for "the support of the minister." If these well-meaning men would say to the church plainly and fairly, "We owe our pastor —— dollars, that are justly his due; let us pay our debts,"—it would be appeal enough to make to any christian congregation. The way that such business is generally conducted in our churches is far from commendable. Christians ought to be able to transact their business in as self-respecting a manner as men of the world.

But imagine a tailor's dismay should a dozen or more of his patrons call upon him in a body, and one of them should feelingly appeal to his fellow-patrons for money to support their tailor, when they owed him for the clothes they wore! It may, indeed, be said that there is no analogy between the gospel and broadcloth, or between preacher's work and the tailor's, nor do I claim any such analogy. I only claim that both preacher and tailor are workmen, and both alike deserving what they earn; and that it is just as absurd to talk of "supporting" a minister, as it is to talk of "supporting" a tailor.

I give utterance to these thoughts all the more readily since I have nothing personally to complain of. While many of our ministers are less than half paid, and are compelled to eke out a scanty living by some secular business, I have been fairly treated and been able to pay my necessary expenses. When I can no longer do this, I shall do the next best thing I can.

NO MORE SACRIFICE.

D. D. REED.

I saw in the Crisis of Dec. 17th, a letter from A. Devereux, in which he stated there was no more sacrifice for sin after a christian had backslidden to a certain degree. Now, to encourage the backslider to repent, and call upon his God again, however deep he or she may have gone into sin ("For there is mercy in our God, who will abundantly pardon, and forgive all our backslidings and love us freely"), I will try to give the true interpretation and meaning of the Sacrifice, and treading under foot the blood of the everlasting covenant.

In the sixth and tenth chapter of Hebrews you will find this language of Paul: "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sin." He means this,—that God has not another Son to die as a sacrifice for us. It does not say, there remaineth no more sacrifice for the backslidden, for our heavenly Father has said, "Return ye backsliding Israel, and I will heal all your backslidings."

The great labor of Christ and the apostles was to make the Jews believe that Jesus was the Christ, and the only sacrifice that God would ever make for Jew or Gentile. Now, says Paul, if you reject this Christ, and do not believe that he is the only begotten Son of God, and do not count his blood any more than any common man's blood, then there remaineth no more blood to be shed for you, but a "fearful looking for of fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." "For our God is a consuming fire."

The apostles were greatly troubled through all their ministry with Judaizing teachers which went about teaching that Jesus was not the Christ. And after the apostles had left the infant churches and gone into new fields, these men would creep in and teach that Jesus was a false Messiah and an imposter; and by their false teaching they turned away many a true christian, who denied Christs being the true Sacrifice. Then, of course, there remained no more sacrifice for them.

The apostle, in these chapters, has no reference to our sinning and losing our religion; but especially to that class of people who have denounced Jesus Christ as being the Son of God, and consequently the true Sacrifice. There remaineth to such no more sacrifice for sin, for said Jesus to the Jews, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." For there is no other name given under heaven, and among men, whereby man can be saved. So the apostle could truly say, "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sin" if they rejected Christ.

A young Bro. came to me some time ago in a pitiable condition, saying that he had backslidden, had sinned against the Holy Spirit, and there was no more mercy for him. He was in a sad state of mind. I said to him, there is just the same sacrifice for you now, that there evar was. I then showed him that Paul had reference to those who had rejected Christ as being the true and only Sacrifice. There was not another Christ to die. The Bible does not say, There remaineth no more mercy or salvation for those that have backslidden from God. The Bro. raised his hands, and said with joy, "I see it, I see it." He took courage and commenced praying, and now is a happy man rejoicing in his Lord. Let us be careful how we lead the erring ones astray.

If there is any class of people on the earth that I pity, it is those who have gone out of the way. When they desire to return, the devil always brings up this passage,—"There remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation." And not understanding what the sacrifice means, they often get discouraged, and give up in despair.

Our prayer should ever be, Lord, open our understanding to understand the Holy Scriptures aright. As the Word of God was given by inspiration, we must have that same Spirit to understand it. The Lord give sound minds and pure hearts.

Correspondence.

From H. A. H.

We are strangers, but pilgrims journeying to the same happy land, advocating and looking for the not-far-off coming of our blessed Lord and Savior.

I have for years been a professing, but I fear not at all times a possessing christian. There has been much of the time when an unsettled, restless feeling pervaded my whole being. A longing of the heart for something I did not possess. I strove to love my Savior, strove to do my duty unto all, yet there was an unsettled state of mind in relation to many of the teachings of the Bible, and the doctrines of my church.

About two months ago, I was shut up in my house by ill health, when one of my kind neighbors brought to me a few copies of the "Crisis" and the "Bible Examiner." He asked me to read them without any orthodox prejudice, and tell him what I thought of them. I told him I was not so biased in religious views but that I was willing to listen to truth when measured by the Bible standard.

I had not read one copy of each, through, before the dead, dry scales were being torn from my eyes by the Spirit of divine truth as it shone from those illumined pages, and I said to my wife that I had read thus far, and had found more genuine Bible truth than I had heard from the pulpit in five years. "Truly," said I, "this is an age of progress." Here are divine, precious truths which have lain buried up in God's Word, for ages; and even in this age of enlightenment and education, our ministers have failed, either from ignorance or willful neglect to unfold their richness to us; and many like myself, have been groping in the dark. I must say, that had it not been for the firm belief I had in a once crucified but risen Redeemer, I should have been utterly carried away by some species of infidelity which have swept over our land. But I can raise my heart to God to-day, and praise him with my whole soul, that his grace was sufficient to keep me, and that through all my conflicts I was enabled to keep my eye of faith in Jesus. He has been my guide, my protector, my Savior. He has never forsaken me.

I have been very much edified and strengthened by the rich gospel food I have obtained from your publications. Without any spirit of flattery, I say to you that the Crisis is the best religious paper in all respects, that I ever saw, and I have seen and read many. There is real solid food for a hungry soul in it. In it can be found the right kind of gospel sustenance for the young, the middle aged, and the aged, of those who are "striving to enter in at the strait gate;" and if an impenitent one, an unbeliever should run his or her eye over it, they cannot fail, in a single copy, to find some kind word, some earnest admonition to call them to repentance. They will ever find Christ set before them as their only hope, their only Savior; and they kindly admonished that if they would have a part in the first resurrection and be Christ's at his second coming, they must immediately give themselves to him, and be his in time, or they will fail to be his in eternity. All classes and conditions of men can be blessed in perusing its pages if they will read with the desire for truth and light.

Go on, dear brethren, in your noble work, and whether the coming of our Lord shall take place in one, five, ten or fifty years from now, you may be happy in the assurance that if found engaged in it when the summons come for you to arise and meet him, your reward will be all, yea, more than your hearts can now conceive.

Buffalo, N. Y.

From Bro. G. W. Denny.

We are still being blest in New Haven, and we have abundant evidence that the dear Lord is still on the mercy seat. Several have been converted recently, and give blessed testimony to this great fact. Last week ten put on Christ by baptism in our own chapel. We are not now dependent on other churches, as we were last winter. We have just completed a baptistry in our chapel. People will turn out to witness a baptism in a church, when they would not go to a river or sea-shore. Thus we have access to the unconverted that we could not get otherwise.

To-day (Sunday) fourteen happy souls were received into the church by the right hand of fellowship. All but four of them were young men and women. Others are seeking Christ. Some started this evening. We are having three meetings during the week, besides Sunday meetings. There is a panic here. Had it not been so, we should have made extra efforts before this for the salvation of sinners. But the Lord is very willing to bless the people of New Haven. Thank his dear name. Young men, who went all through the revival of last winter, unmoved to all appearance, have yielded and been converted this winter. We have been waiting and hoping that the times would change, so that we could send for Bro. Grant to come and hold a series of meetings in the Howe St. church; and we hope to be able to do so yet. We have a dear good church that loves to pray for sinners. O that the Advent christian churches were fully alive to this great work all over the country. Pray for us.

From Bro. Geo. Thomson.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—As I suppose many are anxious to hear from me, I will try to indite a few lines for our beloved friends. I am about the same as I was when I wrote my last letter,—sometimes better and sometimes worse. It is now about seventeen months since I have stood on my feet; most of the time been confined to my bed. My suffering is very great, but the good Lord has sustained me wonderfully so far. O how good he has been to me in my afflictions and utter helplessness! He has raised up kind friends to care for me and my children, and above all has granted me pardon, peace, patience, love, and joy in the Holy Spirit. How often I feel to praise him in the night watches!

Dear brethren and sisters, I am waiting for Jesus. When he comes my suffering will be ended, because he has promised to change this vile body, and fashion it like his own glorious body. When I am tempted to anything like despondency, I think of the long years of suffering experienced by Sister Weaver and others; also the extreme suffering of my dear Savior, and then I feel no disposition to complain.

I am still cheered by reading our papers, and letters from dear sympathizing friends, which are always more than welcome. I will acknowledge with many thanks the favors received, and hope still to share an interest in the prayers and sympathies of God's dear saints.

Arena, Wis.

A. B. Cushing writes, "The good Lord is reviving his work here. Bro. John Evans was here last fall, and held some meetings, and the work has been going on ever since. Thirteen have already been baptized, others reclaimed, and some are ready to go forward the first opportunity. We have a good little chapel to hold meetings in at Drew's Mills in this town. To God be all the glory."

Barford, P. Q.

The Indian Famine.—Imagine an area of country as large as that covered by the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, within which is crowded a population as numerous as the whole people of this Union. Suppose that this district has to grow all the food which its swarming population requires, and that about 999 out of every 1,000 persons are absolutely dependent for the means to purchase food on the returns of agricultural labor. Suppose, further, that there are no means of flooding the rice fields save by rain, and that the rain is withheld at the only season in which it ever comes—what are the prospects of a large proportion of these 40,000,000 of people for living through next year? Of savings they have practically none, for the laboring masses can only earn wages enough to keep body and soul together, and if they had the chance of earning more, they would prefer to contract their time of work, to proving any surplus against a day of possible misfortune. One line of railroad touches part of the district, but as a means of bringing food to mitigate the famine that already stares the people in the face, it is all but useless. For the country is as lamentably destitute of good roads as it is of canals or widely-extended water-courses, and the commissariat services of a half a dozen great armies would utterly break down were they suddenly called upon to feed the millions who will shortly be reduced to starvation point throughout that parched and stricken land.

These points afford only a very inadequate outline of the preliminary conditions of the Bengal famine. What the state of things will be if the famine fairly gets beyond the reach of the machinery of relief which is being devised to arrest it, defies all attempts to imagine. Observers describe the past experience of such visitations to be accompanied by a sacrifice of life, in comparison with which the slaughter of a desolating war is a trifle. Hundreds of thousands of emaciated wretches drop down and rot like sheep; the highways are strewn with corpses, and the river brings them down like the debris of an inundation. In all its features—in the perfect helplessness of the people, the brazen sun and the iron-bound earth, the superstition that compels multitudes to starve rather than save their life at the sacrifice of caste, and the horrible effacing of all the decencies of life and of death—an Indian famine is the most fearful of all the evils that affect mankind.

The latest news from the parched district is to the effect that all the old rice will be consumed by the end of the year, and that the miserable harvest of the new crop will last only till March. After that, all the imports which can reach Bengal will not suffice, "unless American maize and wheat be attracted." It certainly proves that modern science has not quite subdued space yet, when the Western farmer finds corn the cheapest kind of fuel, while the famished millions of the valley of Ganges are in danger of dying for want of it. The Indian Government has got a task of enormous magnitude before it, and qualified judges in Great Britain seem to doubt whether they are sufficiently prepared to meet the advance of the terrible foe that threatens to lay waste several provinces.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Jan. 20. It is learned from Rome, on the highest authority, that the Pope has, at the instigation of the Jesuit Cardinal Tarquini, resolved on the election of a successor to the Pontificate by acclamation of the cardinals present at his death. All opponents will be excluded from the conclave to take place after that event.

The Duc de Cazes, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, acting under the influence and on the recommendation of Prince Bismarck, has announced the determination of France to respect the existing order of things in Italy, and also to suppress the violence of the French Ultramontanists.

A Paris despatch states that Mr. Washburne, the American Minister, yesterday, on behalf of the French residents of Philadelphia, presented ex-President Thiers with a gold medal. In his speech, on the occasion, Mr. Washburne alluded in terms of warm praise to the friendship shown by France for the United States during the American revolution. He also eulogized the French people who have taken up residence in the United States. M. Thiers feelingly replied. After expressing his thanks to his countrymen in the United States for their repeated manifestations of confidence in him, he declared that the Republic was the only Government possible in France, consequently the bond of friendship between the two nations would be strengthened.

London, Jan. 22. A St. Petersburg despatch says that the approaching marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh and the Princess Maria Alexandra is the chief topic of discussion in social circles there. The wedding dress of the Princess Maria will be of purple and ermine, over white and silver. The trousseau, of the bride is displayed in the Winter Palace, consisting of fifty magnificent dresses, exclusive of the ball dress, the lace of which is worth 1000 roubles a yard. Extensive preparations are being made for the occasion, and it is said the toilettes will be unsurpassed in richness and variety. The ceremony will take place in the Winter Garden, after which the festivities will continue for several days, ending with a grand ball.

This is a strange story of shocking wastefulness by professed christians at a time when more than forty millions of people are published as being exposed to famine. J. C.

Berlin, Jan. 16. The North German Gazette to-day says if the policy of France is made subservient to the temporal aims of the Papacy, the peace of Europe will be compromised.

There was an exciting scene in the Landtag to-day. Herr Mallinckrodt, an Ultramontane deputy, quoted a passage from a recent work of Gen. La Marmora, alleging that Bismarck, in 1866, discussed the cession to France of a portion of the Rhinish territory.

Prince Bismarck arose and pronounced the statement an audacious and malicious falsehood.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The so-called "working men" of New York seem determined to bring things to a crisis, and are represented as reorganizing for the purpose of "having it out" with the city authorities. It is a significant fact that of the force of 20,000 men which the Provisional Committee, as it styles itself, reported as ready for action, which our despatches show are not less than five hundred are of American birth. The Germans are set down at 10,000, the French at 4000, and the English, Italian and other foreign nationalities at a little more than 5000. At a public meeting, held on Monday night, one of the speakers said:

"We have nothing to expect from those in authority except oppression and ill-treatment. We want bread. The time has passed for us to sit and quietly discuss plans for labor reform. In many cases, our families are absolutely starving. We know where to find bread, and are strong enough to take it."

That is strong talk, but what shall we say of this:

"We do not want reform; we want revolution. The rich refuse us work, and use their wealth merely to oppress us. We will destroy their wealth if necessary, and free ourselves."

This is the key-note of the whole movement, and such utterances ought to open the eyes of those honest workingmen who may have been deluded by the fair speeches of the Communistic leaders. There seems to be a fair prospect for trouble yet, notwithstanding the present postponement.—N. Y. Times.

San Francisco, Jan. 19. This afternoon, Randolph Mitchell killed his wife, Annie Mitchell, who ran away from him in Wisconsin, recently, and came here. He followed, and when she refused to live with him, killed her and himself with a razor.

In Brief.

— A sad disaster took place at Bennington, Vt., Tuesday afternoon. The gas exploded in a knitting mill, setting fire to the building. Two women are known to have been killed and it is feared that seven more perished in the flames.

— The Senate in executive session yesterday unanimously confirmed the nomination of Morrison R. Waite as Chief Justice of the United States.

— The diamonds and point lace worn by the wife of ex-Congressman Ben Wood at the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum ball in New York last week were valued at over $140,000.

— A colony is to be formed in Arizona, to which only Roman Catholics will be acceptable. It will start from St Louis in February next.

Notices.

Another Impostor.

A young man recently called on Bro. Field, Jeffersonville, Ind., representing himself as the nephew of Bro. H. Munger, and soliciting aid to pay traveling expenses. He represented himself as a book agent, and as preparing for the ministry. He requested Bro. F. to refer him to some Brn. in Cincinnati. He did so, and the young man went to those Brn. and obtained money of them under false pretences, contradicting his first statement to Bro. F. Bro. Munger says he knows nothing about him. Has no such nephew.

We have recently had a number of such cases. In these times of lying and robbery, such traveling strangers, who ask for money without an equivalent, should not be trusted a moment, for it is indirectly encouraging deception and fraud. Brethren, beware of them. J. C.

Quarterly Conference.—A quarterly session of the Mass. A. C. Conference will be holden in New Bedford, Mass., to commence Tuesday evening, Jan. 27th, and continue over the following Sunday. Meetings afternoons and evenings, when preaching may be expected. We hope our brethren in all that region will make an earnest effort to come, especially the preaching brethren. Our business at this meeting is to make an effort to save the perishing. C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

P. S.—The church at New Bedford extend a hearty invitation to all who desire to do or get good, to come and labor in and enjoy the meetings of the Conference. Brn. Mathewson and Couch are expected. Bro. Stockman is earnestly desired, and all other preaching brethren who can attend.
A. M. Higgins, Pastor.

Revival Meetings.—If the Lord will, we shall commence a series of meetings at the school-house in the corner of Hardwick, Greenwich and Enfield, Sunday morning, Jan. 25th, to continue days and evenings through the week, and as much longer as may seem best. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity are requested to come up with much prayer and fasting to the work of the Lord in this place.
Samuel Ayres.
W. G. Ruggles.

Conference.—The second session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held at the Reed meeting-house in Richmond, on Thursday evening, Jan. 29th, and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, with hearts full of love and union, and then we shall be prepared to labor for the good of the cause, and shall not be ashamed of our work when it is done. We hope our preaching brethren will not forget this meeting.
H. D. Reed, President.
H. S. Mitchell, Secretary.

The third Quarterly Meeting of the Eastern District of Wisconsin will be held with the church at Cassell Prairie, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 13th, 1874, and continue over Lord's day. We hope to see a large gathering of the saints at this meeting. Let us come with hearts full of the love of God. We expect there will be several of the preaching brethren present to assist in preaching the Word. E. P. Graves.

Quarterly Meeting.—The Third Quarterly Meeting of the Iowa Christien Conference, for the current year, will be held with the church at Floyd, commencing Feb. 19th, 1874, and holding over the Lord's day. A general gathering of ministers and members is expected. We hope that all will come in the unity of the spirit, praying that God may revive his work among us, that we may be prepared for the great day which is just before us. J. W. Burroughs, Sec.

Acknowledgments.—D. D. Reed, Santa Clara, $5; Jas. Crawford, Castile, $2; J. B. Cook, $2. Many thanks. Caroline Tuller.
West Point, Ky.

There will be a protracted meeting in Great Falls, N. H., commencing Tuesday evening, Jan. 27th, and continue over Sunday, Feb. 1st. Brn. and Srs. are invited to come and help us.
C. S. Shattuck.

Rockbridge, O.—I expect to visit the church in Rockbridge, Ohio, on Wednesday, Jan. 28th, and remain one week, and preach Jesus and the resurrection. I expect also, if the Lord will, in the future to visit them once in eight weeks, and minister to them in spiritual things.
Frank Burr, Pastor.

Will the preaching brethren who are passing through Newark, N. J., give us a call? Please drop a note previous, to prevent any conflict, either to Bro. J. Libby, 42 Rennington St., or to me, 126 Bank St. Wm. Shepherd, Sec.

Those wishing to preach at Farmington, will confer a favor to the church worshiping there by publishing their appointments in the Crisis. We have often had two at a time.
N. H. Berry, in behalf of the church.

Feeling it duty to feed the scattered flock, and warn men to prepare for coming judgment, we have decided to travel and labor as the door may open, and brethren may desire. Our first meeting will be at Franklin, N. H., evening, Jan. 26th. So any wishing to have protracted or evening meetings can address us at that place to that date. From F. we have thought to go into the upper part of this State, and Vermont; but we will calculate to go where the door is open, and the good Lord leads, and stop as long as duty seems to require.
J. G. Smith.
John Parsons.

Having studied my duty, in the light of the "blessed Word" and past providences, I feel to place myself in the channel of God's opportunities to be moved in any direction, by his revealed will, through his children. Any church that would like to have me visit them, will please address as soon as convenient, Eld. Franklin Douglas, 347 W. 36th St., New York City.

Rise of Price.

"History of the Advent Message." $3.00 sold by subscription. Our proposition to get out a "history of the Second Advent Message—doctrine and people" has met with a hearty response, with many words of encouragement from our chief ministers also.

Many have urged us to add portraits of such of our "pioneers" as can be obtained. We have concluded to add some fifteen or twenty portraits, and to make other additions to the work beyond what we had intended, at a considerable expense, which will make it a work to well compare with four dollar books.

All who subscribe before July 10th, shall have them at $3.00 each. We are now preparing the work, and hope to have it ready to deliver in July next. No money called for until the book is ready.
Yarmouth, Me. I. C. Wellcome.

A New Work.—Papal Rome.—Prophetic Utterances and Historic Sketches concerning its Glory, its Gloom, and Destiny. By Eld. S. S. Brewer. This is the most thrillingly interesting work on Rome and its present dying condition we have ever seen. It contains much historic matter in a condensed form, which every Protestant minister and teacher should have at hand. We have just published the above pamphlet, and shall furnish it at $10 per 100 copies, by express or by mail. Postage extra. Postpaid, 15 cts. single. For sale at the Crisis Office. Price 15 cts.
I. C. Wellcome.

If any of the friends desire my labors in Northern New York, they can address me at my residence: New London, Oneida Co., N. Y.
Wm. Morrell.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." For sale at this Office. Ag't.

"The Broken Seal," or Personal Reminiscences of Samuel D. Greene, on the Abduction of William Morgan by Freemasons in 1826. For sale at the Office of the World's Crisis. Price 50 cents.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. A'gt.

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

MY HOPE.

GEO. W. HOWARD.

I am trusting in my Savior,
For he shed his blood for me;
I was once a poor lost sinner,
But his grace has made me free.
I am in his love abiding,
And I praise his name to-day;
Sinner, will you come and prove him?
Will you walk this narrow way?

O the peace, that's like a river
Springing up within my breast,
Gives me hope that soon forever
I shall be with Christ at rest.
And my hope is like an anchor
That is cast "within the veil;"
Nought this blessed hope can sever,
It is sure—it will not fail.

If we want to come up higher,
Where our hope will be complete,
We must learn to get down lower,
For 'tis found at Jesus' feet.
If we would receive the blessing
Which God has on some conferred,
Then we always should confess him,
And must take him at his word.

O 'tis good to trust in Jesus
While we journey here below,
For we know he will be with us
Everywhere he bids us go.
Jesus, help me to grow stronger!
Keep me in the narrow way!
And when time shall be no longer,
Save me then, dear Lord, I pray.

Stowe, Me.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

PRIEST MANRETH AND THE POPE.

I have considered the following extracts, taken from an interesting little book entitled "The Pope and the Gospel," written by a converted and protesting priest, sufficiently entertaining to give to the readers of the Crisis:— W. K.

I separate myself from the Pope to attach myself to Jesus Christ.

1. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say with St. Clement, Bishop of Rome, who died A. D. 81, Jesus Christ is with the humble only; he is not with those who exalt themselves above his flock. Our Lord Jesus Christ, notwithstanding his power, came not into the world in pomp and pride.

2. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say with St. Ignatius, martyr Bishop of Antioch, A. D. 108, Whoever blindly follows those who wander from the way of truth, shall not inherit the kingdom of God; and whoever is able to distinguish truth from error, but does not make use of this faculty, and abandon a teacher of lies, God will punish.

I separate myself from the Pope, because I say with St. Justin Martyr, A.D. 163, he who is truly pious and wise, will value the truth he has been led to discern above all things; and reject the opinions of the ancients (masseum opiniones) as soon as he perceives the falsity of them.

3. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say with St. Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage, A. D. 258; neither ought any bishop in the world to pretend to be a bishop of bishops, nor to exercise any constraint over the faith and actions of his colleagues by threats or punishments (tyrannico terrore) for every bishop has full liberty, and may use his spiritual power according to his own convictions; and if he does so, he ought no more to be judged by another than to judge other bishops himself.

4. I separate myself from the Pope because I say with St. Hilary, Bishop of Poitiers, A. D., 369, Because of that Antichrist, you do wrong to attach importance to the walls of temples, to regard a building as the church of God, or to repeat the name of peace under their roofs. Is it, then, doubtful that Antichrist may not establish his throne there? the mountain, the forest, the lake, the prison, and the cave, are to me safer places.

5. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say, with St. Basil, Bishop of Cæsarea, A. D. 379, Let us compare the discourses and writings of our teachers with the doctrines of the Bible, and accept that which is conformable to the Scriptures.

6. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say with St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, A. D. 397, The Lord has forbidden us to call any man master in matters of religion, because we have only one Master, Jesus Christ, the anointed one, who is always ready to enlighten our understandings, if we shut not out His light from our souls, our faith in the Church (i. e., in its visible heads) must be tried by the declarations of Scripture, and we must admit the Church as our guide only when it can be proved Christ dwelleth in her.

7. I separate mself from the Pope, because I say, with St. Jerome, A. D. 420, Bishops are all equal amongst themselves. Let no one imagine that the Church of Rome differs essentially from any other church in the world. The Gauls, the Britons, the Africans, Persians, the Indians, and the whole earth, in a word, all Christian nations acknowledge the same Jesus Christ for their common Savior, and have the same rule of faith, viz., the Bible.

8. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say with St. Augustine, A. D. 430, If disputes arise in the church, who shall be the arbitrator? None but Christ and the apostles, that is to say, their written word. When Peter confessed that Jesus was the Son of God, the Lord said to him, "Upon this rock," etc., that is to say, he will build his church, not upon Peter, but upon the faith that Peter had in the rock and corner stone of the church, and this rock was Christ himself.

9. I separate myself from the Pope, because I say, with Theodoretus, Bishop of Cyprus, A. D. 460, A blind faith is, on the contrary, the source of all the errors and all the evils of the church. Of all heresies the worst and most dangerous is that which is raising its head so high and so mighty in our days, that, namely, which requires of man, with equal absurdity and injustice, to renounce his understanding and not to examine his religion; and thus prevents him from ever attaining a firm and living faith. Faith is called a blind assent to dogmas that have no force, and are based upon no proof.

10. I separate myself from the Pope because I say, with Gregory I., Bishop of Rome, A. D. 604, If a Bishop is called by the name of universal bishop, then when this bishop falls, the whole church must fall with him. Away with such folly and levity, such blasphemy which deprives all other priests of the honor that one, in his folly, arrogates to himself alone. To accept such a title is no less than to make shipwrecks of the faith. The Bishop of Constantinople (says the same writer) had the audacity to call himself Universal Pope, Catholic Father, Bishop of all the Bishops; but can this unexampled pride, this criminal ambition, be ought else than the forerunner of antichrist?

11. I separate myself from the Pope, because the Word of God says to me: Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them that believe and know the truth.

12. I separate myself from the Pope, because the Word of God says to me—"Come out of Babylon" (the Church of Rome) "my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues; for her sins have reached up to heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities."

But in separating myself from the Pope I attach myself to Jesus Christ.

1. I attach myself to Jesus Christ because Simon Peter says, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious, and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.

2. I attach myself to Jesus Christ because St. Paul says: According to the grace of God, which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder I lay the foundation and another buildeth thereon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.

3. I attach myself to Jesus Christ because St. John says: And now little children abide in him (Jesus Christ), that when he shall appear we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

4. I attach myself to Jesus Christ because he says himself, "I am the way, the truth, and the life. He that believeth in the Son hath everlasting life." "Come unto me," saith again this good Savior, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

BEAR EACH OTHERS BURDENS.

A. P MOORE.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—GAL 6: 2

As fallen beings, we are so constituted, that human aid and sympathy are absolutely indispensable. We are in a world of trial, sorrow and care, and often when the heart is burdened to its utmost capacity, a few words of sympathy and cheer, will roll off the burden, or a part of it at least. We are commanded to "bear one another's burdens." I know many are apt to think they have all they can bear of their own troubles, but it often lightens them to enter into sympathy with others.

Burdens are not always equally distributed in the family. Often some one is allowed to carry a double or a triple burden, while others take their necks from the yokes entirely. During a protracted meeting once, in a certain place, there was one family that kept the preacher three full weeks, and the most of the time more than half a dozen others besides, which made a family of from fifteen to twenty, and one "hired girl" to do the whole work. The burden was a heavy one. The good sister or lady of the house, would visit with the company during the forenoon, and afternoons and evenings attend the meetings. The "hired girl" was not a christian. One spoke to the lady about such a burden on the girl, and her reply was, "I pay her for it," little thinking how cruel and heartless it was, or how the girl must look upon such religion. Had this woman and one or two of the visitors taken hold of the work, and thus lightened the burden of the girl, they might have talked "Jesus" to her, and she would have listened, and undoubtedly have been converted and saved.

Often the mother has to bear the great burden of the family, while the daughters dress up, play the piano and receive callers, until the poor mother breaks down with overwork, and fills a premature grave; and those daughters learn, too late, that if they had helped bear the burden with mother, she might have been spared to cheer and shed light on the household. But the lesson was learned too late.

Another woman has an ungodly husband, that is cruel, abusive, and heartless toward her. She is a firm and consistent believer in the coming of the Lord, and kindred unpopular truths of the Bible. Her children belong to a popular church, and so she has to bear her burden alone so far as human aid is concerned, and has no comfort in her husband or children. Those children may be convinced that her faith and hope are biblical, and hence true, but they love themselves so much more than they do the mother that often her heart is so burdened that she sighs for one word of sympathy and comfort from them, and not getting it, she pines away and dies.

In the church, "burdens" are not equally divided. One brother, because he has a heart to work, has to be sexton, committee, Sabbath school Supt., and leader of prayer-meetings, and has to carry a heavy burden, while others carry none at all. Burdens equally distributed make light work.

Ministers often are compelled to bear very heavy burdens without sympathy or help. A pastor is supposed to know all the trouble and sorrow there is within the bounds of his church. Every one thinks they have a perfect right to tell the minister, or his faithful wife, all their sorrows and burdens, and they have to sympathize, comfort, counsel, and aid in every way possible; and often have to bear the burdens of the whole church. But does the church think the pastor can have burdens which they ought to bear? Many a faithful minister has been allowed to bear his own burdens, till they became so heavy, and he so distressed, that he cannot bear them any longer, and gets disheartened,—thinks this is a cold, heartless world,—stops preaching,—goes to work to earn a living for his family, and then people say, "Why did he not tell us of his burdens?" Why did you not ask him? Those ministers who do let their wants be known are accused of "preaching for money," and he thinks the burdens of his heart too sacred to be laid open to unsympathizing persons that will give him a slur, and pass on, only to increase the burdens.

It is an indispensable duty for christians to "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." As he sympathizes with us in our cares, trials, and infirmities, so must we with each other. The world is getting more and more selfish every year. Let us come out more from it, and be more and more like Jesus. We must, if we hear him say, "Well done" when he comes. What we do for any of his "little ones," even, we do for him; and what we neglect to do for any of them, is a neglect of him. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

QUAR. CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Farnham Quarterly Conference in connection with The Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec met as per appointment, Jan. 1st, 1874. The business session was opened by Eld. C. P. Dow, President of the Conference, by an address setting forth the designs and purposes of the Conference, and making such suggestions as were thought to be of interest and benefit to the District; viz.:—

1. That in said District there be an effort made to organize several churches as should be deemed expedient, which may be represented in the General Conference by its properly authorized officers, according to Art. 2nd of the Constitution.

2. That a President and Secretary of the District be appointed, whose duty it shall be to look after the interest of the District and report the same to the President of the General Conference; all of which after some discussion was adopted unanimously. Whereupon Eld. L. Marsh was elected President, and E. G. Chadsey Secretary. Bro. J. Ward of Montreal was present, and gave an account of the Advent cause in that city; stating that regular meetings were held every Sunday in a hall hired for that purpose. Numbers not large, although many who now attend other places of worship sympathize with them, and would join them and assist in supporting the meeting had they a permanent place in which to worship. But their limited circumstances would not allow them to provide one. If brethren in other places would kindly assist to purchase the ground, they would endeavor to build a house.

After listening to the above statement, the following resolution was carried unanimously: "Having listened to the statement of Bro. Ward, and believing it to be for the glory of God and the good of the cause that they have a church in which to worship; therefore, Resolved, That we as a Conference and people do sympathize with our brethren in Montreal, and that we will assist them as far as possible by our influence and example."

The meeting was well attended, and a kind christian feeling manifested. The preaching was of a character to do good, and we trust seed was sown that will yield abundantly in the great day of harvest.

SEPARATION.

C. MENDENHALL.

"And before Him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a sheperd divideth his sheep from the goats."—MATT. 25: 32.

When a man arrives at the age of accountability, he enters upon a state of probation. It becomes a matter of individual choice with him whether he will take good or evil, life or death. God never interferes with man's free agency, but he sets forth the advantages and disadvantages of the respective courses in life, leaving it to our intellects to decide whether we will enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, or live in righteous preparation for a more enduring substance in a future dispensation.

At present the two classes of persons which this arrangement produces are dwelling together, being found side by side in church, state, and domestic relations.

Man being fallible, appearances deceptive, and the motives of others in a measure undiscernible, we cannot in all cases with even approximate certainty determine where the dividing line falls; nor is it required of us, lest in our zeal to pull up tares we uproot the wheat.

In our temporal relations we are compelled to associate and have dealings with our fellow creatures, whether they are righteous or otherwise. It is true men have forgotten that there is a time for every purpose under heaven, and have anticipated the proper time in an unwise isolation of themselves in monasteries or as hermits; but this cannot be pleasing in the sight of God, because it is shirking from the duties and responsibilities of this probationary state. On the other hand we are not to be unequally yoked with unbelievers in their various associations for selfish support and aggrandizement. Under the existing circumstances it would seem the part of wisdom for man to hold a conservative position; avoiding irrational extremes, looking to Jesus for abundant supplies of that faith which will overcome the world, and enable us to be in it without being of it.

The time mentioned in our text is fast approaching when there shall be called a convention,—a mixed assembly of all peoples, tongues, and tribes, the good and bad, high and low, rich and poor;—all will be there; none forgotten or overlooked. When the "Son of man shall come in his glory," we must all appear before him in judgment—the grand assize of the world at the end of the present age. Then shall be the work of separation by Him who is able to discern the intents and purposes of mankind. He will know who are the hypocrites, the false brethren, and the mere formalists. "He shall discern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not."

They are represented as the chaff and the grain, as the tares and the wheat, and as goats and sheep. Having all been united or associated, they must be separated, even though it sunder families and friends; for with this Judge there will be no partiality nor respecting of persons.

In this life business or pleasure may separate friends for a time, and often it is a severe trial; but it certainly must be a thought accompanied with dread and awe, that this final separation admits of no limit, because the doom of those who are classified with the chaff, tares and goats, is "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power." On the other hand the righteous, figuratively denominated "wheat" and "sheep," are promised "eternal life," immortality and an inheritance incorruptible; for we read, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

There will be no restoration from condemnation, nor falling, in Paradise;—the case of the wicked will be settled beyond appeal, and the righteous will be everlastingly preserved.

These facts suggest important queries: Are we ready for this time of separation? Are we now in the sheep-fold, or among the goats? Let us not judge one another, but examine ourselves according to the Scripture rule, weigh our thoughts and motives by the gospel balance, and pray for help to supply deficiencies and to remove superfluities. Let us all so live now that the future will be shorn of its terrors, because we stand reconciled to God through Christ, and are under the Chief Shepherd.

This is no time for indecision. Let us, in God's own way, make our calling and election sure, thereby receiving the blessings which are for those who are to take their place at the right hand. Let us be careful in conversation and in life, ever remembering that as free agents and accountable beings we must give an account for the deeds done, and the time employed. Soon Jesus will come, "and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."

Sinner! improve the time of the long suffering of him who would have all men saved, and with the saved ones enter into that reward of which Paul thus speaks,—"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 1 Cor. 2: 9.

WAY-MARKS.

O. W. STETSON.

An imprecation is pronounced, in Deut. 27: 17, for removing landmarks, and not less than four times was the admonition repeated to Moses that he should make the tabernacle and its appurtenances like unto the pattern showed to him in the mount. Not less than twice is this distinctly referred to in the New Testament (Acts 7: 44, and Heb. 8: 5), and king David says, concerning the temple of Solomon (God's representative house), in 1 Chron. 28: 11-13, 19, when he had given to his son the pattern of the various parts, "All this the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern." Paul says that this service was like unto the example and shadow of heavenly things,—a shadow of things to come; but the body, i. e., the substance was of Christ. Heb. 8: 5, Col. 2: 17.

Here, then, we have God's "waymarks," pointing out to us how to work, how to build, whither we are tending, and how and when we may reach the place of final destination. The all-important inquiry now is, How many of the plans and devices put forth for divine teaching, for guides into "the world to come," are fac-similes of God's handwriting? How many are in harmony with the plan given? How few, rather, are like the pattern? How small the number, comparatively, who are studiously endeavoring to carry out the design and be guided by the waymarks through to the end. But how vast the number who seem to think—as shown by their work in teaching—that they can improve upon the original.

Take, by way of illustration, the temple stones and building, from the quarry to the dedication, when the house was glorified. The quarry represents man in a state of sin. The stones, men individually,—rough and unfit for the builder's use. To prepare them, they must be quarried—separated from the ungodly by "the word of truth." They must be squared, smoothed, and fitted in shape and size for their place as designated in the plan. And when fully wrought out and finished, they must be put aside with their fellows until the remaining stones needed to complete the building are all quarried and finished for their places. The stones thus made ready for the building must then be transported (every stone in its own order, i. e. the foundation or "corner stone" first) to the temple site. And when all the stones are brought thus together, they are put, every stone, into their several places in the building, but they are not yet perfected. One thing is still wanting. That one thing was not in the stone when quarried or being fitted, but it was with and in him who was to build the house, and to be imparted to each and every stone after the building should have been "raised up"; and that one thing is the immortal, divine nature, which is the nature of the agent employed in fitting the stones for their places in the building; and that agent is the Holy Spirit.

In common parlance a man is quarried out when he experiences religion, or submits himself to the Lord. That is the starting point, and from that point it takes all the days of his mortal life to complete his transformation into a polished stone, "fitted for the Master's use." Then he is numbered with them that rest,—"sleep in Jesus,"—waiting for the "holy convocation on the first day of the seventh month," when they will all be gathered unto the Lord. On the tenth day of the same month shall the atonement be announced, the blessing conferred, "even life forevermore"; the house of the Lord be glorified, the church be presented by the Son to the Father. Then will be the feast of dedication,—the marriage supper of the Lamb.

One by one the stones are quarried, fitted, and laid aside to rest. But all the stones are gathered and glorified together.

In our day it has come to pass that men teach otherwise,—that a stone is fitted when it is only quarried; that no blowing of trumpets is needed; that there need be no numbering, nor resting, nor waiting; no gathering together, and no raising up, before the stones are put into their places in that future temple,—that beautiful, glorified, spiritual house "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." When the Shekinah descended and entered into that temple of Solomon's, then, and not till then, did it become the emblem of a living temple. Then, and only then, was it properly called God's house.

Of that temple the Savior said, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up again." His body was called a temple, for the very same reason that Solomon's building was so called, viz., because God himself dwelt in that building and in that body of Jesus. So is the body of every true christian called a temple—a house—a tent; not because the believer himself dwells in that body; not because of an immortal soul as an entity, another immaterial man dwelling in him;—but so called as was the temple—as was the body of Christ; because God himself dwells in the believer by his Holy Spirit; and the believer's body is the believer himself; and he—the believer—the body—the temple of God.

Not once in the whole Bible can it be found where an unregenerate, unsanctified, unholy man's body is ever spoken of as a house, temple, or tent. Work to the pattern. Remove not the ancient landmarks.

MEETING AT RAYMOND, IOWA.

For the encouragement of our brethren we will give a brief report of our late protracted meeting at Raymond. We commenced Dec. 26th, with a very small congregation, but, as it was remarked, "every one that came, came back the next evening and brought another with them," until we had a large and attentive audience, and soon a revival. We held meetings each evening until Jan. 10th, when we organized a church of forty-one members. There are eight or ten more who will probably unite soon. The most of the converts were heads of families.

Bro. Banton has lived there alone in his faith for many years, letting his light shine in the right direction, i. e., living a consistent christian life. I hope other isolated brethren will take courage and let their light shine likewise. Not simply living so as to be known as "Adventists," but as christians. If they will live a holy life, consecrated to the Lord, being at peace with their neighbors, paying their honest debts,—in short, "live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present [evil] world," those around them may, by seeing their good works, be constrained to turn from the evil of their ways and seek the Lord with full purpose of heart. Live, brethren, so that when you get a minister to come and preach the word, he will not have to labor for your conversion first. Pray in secret,—pray in your family,—pray to God, and not simply to be heard of men. Jesus is soon coming to save all devoted, honest-hearted christians. May God grant that he may save both reader and writer now and evermore. Amen.

THE PILGRIM HOME.

W. N. LANGLEY.

O let me stand by life's fair river,
Far, far away;
For that my heart is yearning ever;
There's where the holy stay.
O this world is dark and dreary
Everywhere I roam!
Here the christian, sad and weary,
Sighs for the pilgrim's home.

O let me walk in Eden's bowers,
Changeless and pure,
Blooming with unfading flowers,—
There's where the bliss is sure.
For all this world is transitory,
Everywhere I roam,
Far, far from the world of glory,
Far from the pilgrim's home.

O let me rest where troubles never
Come to annoy;
Where my Savior reigns forever,
Where there is fullness of joy.
Often here in pain and sorrow
Sadly I roam,
Hoping for a bright to-morrow,
Safe in the pilgrim's home.

Home & Health.

HEADACHES.

Probably few need be told that, in our physical bodies, while we are taking through our food and drink and the atmosphere, large quantities of nutritious material which is to become part and parcel of our tissues, to be bone and muscle and nerve and gland, and do us good service in these several capacities, there is also constantly accumulating in our bodies, material which has been part of our tissues, which has served its purpose as such, which is so to speak, worn out, and is, to all intents and purposes, dead matter. This, in technical language, is called effete matter; and must, in order for health to continue, be as constanly cast out of the body as the food and drink are taken in. This discharge is effected through the kidneys, lungs, skin and bowels.

It is a law of the human economy that no very great excess of this matter can be retained any length of time within the body without doing injury, and it happens that one of the first of the deleterious effects is upon the head. And this is the explanation of many of these headaches. A woman takes little exercise, remains in-doors and breathes air not the best, drinks largely of tea, and coffee perhaps, becomes constipated, all her physical energies become weakened, the excreting organs become sluggish, and she has the headache day after day, and no wonder; it is a wonder more of such don't have it and have it more and harder.

Few women who live on farms can be classed in a category with this one; yet a few may be. A man after months of active out-door exercise all at once stops work, sits down to study or do nothing, and takes no exercise, but continues eating as heartily and with as much zest as when following the plow; he complains of the headache, and no wonder, taking food freely and by inactivity allowing the excreting organs and excretion to become sluggish.

In winter the atmosphere is, from the cold, more dense than in summer. We take in from it by the lungs more oxygen and cast out more effete matter through it. When the summer approaches, and the air becomes rarified and the excretion by means of the respiration must grow less, this overplus of effete matter must be expelled by other emunctories, other excreting organs must take on increased activity and do partial double duty; they do not do this as rapidly as the season changes and the effete matter remaining in the body is in excess, so we have the headache.

A dirty man allows his body to go for a half year without bathing, and then growls because the headache is a daily visitor. No wonder he has the pain; but to hear him growl makes one feel like saying "good enough for him."

The remedy for this condition we need hardly discuss. A free action of the organs we have classed as excreting structures, by means of regular and proper exercise, good air, bathing, proper food—correct habits in every regard—constitutes about all that need to be gained. If these means fail, then so-called medicines will fail too. The excretions must be natural or health is impaired. We may say, however, that probably more cases of this sort can be remedied by proper and judicious exercise than most people are inclined to think.

ADVANTAGES OF TEMPERANCE IN EATING.

The ancient physicians of Egypt ascribed all diseases to the overloading of the stomach, and the materia medica was limited to emetics and cathartics, and abstinence from food was their chief advice. Certainly the surest method to preserve constitutional health and strength is to eat less than we are in the habit of doing.

Cheyn said that if we would keep our stomachs clean, we should find our heads clear. The lamentable prevalence of brain diseases is more attributable to the overloading of the stomach than to the overworking of the brain. The brain is weakened by the general prostration of the whole system, and first proclaims the misuse of its powers.

The ancient philosophers, from Pythagoras, all agree that it was needful to relieve the stomach by a careful abstemiousness, when they desired to make demands upon the imagination or reason, for the exercise of all their forces.

Mr. Pitt, when he intended to deliver an oration before the House of Commons, dined on cold mutton.

Newton confined himself to a slight diet while he was composing his dissertation upon colors.

Boerhave remarked that the oppression of food on the stomach almost extinguishes the active powers of the mind.

A mathematician can resolve a problem before dinner, while after a full repast his mind would be too dull and inactive either to study or demonstrate. A blind man who had learned to distinguish colors by the touch, could do it only when fasting.

Law, the founder of paper credit, and a financier of great ability, was remarkable for his great abstemiousness, and ate the smallest possible amount to support life when engaged in subjects of deep calculation.

The newspapers of the day are filled with notices of sudden deaths, attributed to heart disease, when often the verdict should be, "Died of over-eating."

Habitual over-eating produces dyspepsia, nausea, headaches, colics and many of the other ills so common to mankind. The quality of our food and its preparation, are often as of much importance as its quantity. We all eat too much grease, condiments, rich sauces, and gravies.

Sir James Eyre, physician to Queen Victoria, says perhaps we might lay it down as a rule, that the majority of men eat twice as much as is really required for the support of health and strength; but, in most cases, the error is to be referred to ignorance of the laws of health, rather than to the mere pleasure of over-indulgence. It is a common mistake among all classes, that the more we eat the stronger we shall be, and nothing is more fully believed than that our vigor depends upon the quantity as well as the quality of our food.—S. O. J., in Country Gentleman.

MIRTH VS. CHEERFULNESS.—Addison says: "I have always preferred cheerfulness to mirth. The latter I consider as an act, the former as a habit of the mind. Mirth is short and transient; cheerfulness fixed and permanent. Those are raised into the greatest transports of mirth who are subject to the greatest depression of melancholy; on the contrary, cheerfulness, though it does not give the mind such an exquisite gladness, prevents us from falling into any depths of sorrow. Mirth is like a flash of lightning that breaks through a gloom of clouds, and glitters for a moment; cheerfulness keeps up a kind of daylight in the mind, and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity."

CORNS.—Scrape a piece of common chalk, put a small portion of it upon the corn and bind it with a linen rag. Repeat the application for a few days, and you will find the corn come off like a shell, and perfectly cured. The cure is simple and efficacious.

DIDN'T THINK.

Opening the door of a friend's house one day, I made my way through the entry to the small back court where Ned, the only son, was crying bitterly.

"Ah, Ned, what is the matter?"

"Mother won't let me go fishing. Harry and Tom are going down to the harbor, and I want to go." Here Ned kicked his toes angrily against the post, to the great danger of his new boots.

"Whose little dog is this?" I asked as a brown spaniel came bounding up the garden walk.

"It is mine," cried Ned, in an altered tone. "Did you not know I had one?"

"No, indeed. What a fine little fellow. Where did you get him, Ned?"

"Father bought him for me. He is so knowing, and I teach him many things. See him find my knife;" and Ned, wiping away his tears, threw his knife into the clover. "There, Wag," said he, "now go and find my knife."

Wag plunged into the grass, and, after a great deal of smelling and wagging, he came triumphantly forth, and brought the knife to his young master.

"Give it to him," said Ned, pointing to me; and Wag laid it at my feet.

"This is a knife worth having," said I; "four blades."

"Tis a real good one," said Ned; "Father gave it to me on my birthday; and he gave me a splendid box of tools, too." Ned looked up brightly and quite forgot his crying.

"Let me think," said I. Was it this knife that you hurt your foot with?"

"Oh no," cried Ned, "that was done with an axe; but I've got well now."

"I was afraid you would be laid up all the spring."

"Well, it was mother's nursing, the doctor says. Mother and father took very great care of me. It was lonely staying in the house so; but mother used to leave her work and read to me, and father often stayed with me."

"I should think you had very kind parents, Ned." The boy looked down on the floor, and a slight pout puckered his lip.

"I suppose there are none who have your interest and happiness so much at heart."

"But I want to go fishing," muttered Ned.

"And can't you trust them, Ned, and willingly agree to their wishes? You may not, indeed, know the reason why they object to your going; but, from all your experience of their kindness and wisdom, are you not sure that they would not cross your wishes without good reasons for doing so? And surrounded as you are by so many proofs of their love, will you sit there and murmur and cry and fill your heart with angry and stubborn thoughts against them, because of this one little denial of your wants? Is not this a poor and ungrateful return for all their kindness? It is little enough that a child can do for a parent, but that little he ought to do most cheerfully."

NO SUCCESS WITHOUT INDUSTRY.

I really believe, young friends, that idleness is the ground of most vices. I am acquainted with certain young men who are running about the streets, whom I see stepping out of drinking saloons. Some of them are sons of reputable parents. I remember last summer, meeting a young man, one of the best dressed lads in the city—a young man whom I met in the omnibus frequently riding up and down; and I had seen him so often, and always with such a leisurely air, that I said one day, calling him by name, "What are you doing?"

"I have not any particular business," he said.

"Well, hav'nt you anything to do?"

"Nothing in particular, he answered.

It was somewhat impertinent, but I said, "Well, I suppose now you are out of school, you mean to get into something pretty soon?"

"Well, I have not anything just now in view," he replied.

To make a long story short, the poor fellow has not anything in view, never did have much of anything in view, and never will have much of anything in view. Drifting, drifting, drifting! Down, down, down! He is not the boy that he was when I conversed with him last summer. There is nothing truer, though trite, than the adage: "An idle brain is the devil's workshop." Unless there is an aim, a plan, a purpose in a man, there is depravity, and appetite, and lust, and passion. It is idleness that fills our jails, and our prisons. It is idleness that rolls up millions and millions of dollars for spirituous liquors every year.

Industry, my young friends, is the first law of success. Some one asked a man who was counted a great genius, to define genius, and he said, "Genius is industry." Things never come about of themselves. The man who writes a great book, never wrote it in a day, or a week. The man who has reported a great invention, did not combine wheel and piston in an hour, or a month; but it was the industry of inquiry, the industry of application. Industry is the first law of success.—Chicago Pulpit.

LIKE JESUS.

I want to be like Jesus,
So lowly and so meek;
For he one cross or angry word
Was never heard to speak.
I want to be like Jesus,
Obedient when a child;
He kept his parents' words, and lived
So holy and so mild.

I want to be like Jesus,
So frequently in prayer;
Alone upon the mountain top,
He met his Father there.
I want to be like Jesus,
For I never, never find
That he, though persecuted, was
To any one unkind.

I want to be like Jesus,
Engaged in doing good;
So that it might be said of me
That I've done what I could.
Alas! I'm not like Jesus,
But I will pray to be;
Kind Savior, take my sinful heart,
And make me more like thee!

THE LITTLE WITNESS.

One evening "mamma" asked little Bertie, four years old, whom she "loved best in all the world," supposing she would say "papa" or "mamma," but he promptly replied "Jesus." She asked why he loved Jesus best, and after a moments' thoughtfulness he said, "because Jesus loves me."

Then going off to his play again, he repeated over to himself. "I love Jesus, and Jesus loves me," and in a minute, looking up brightly, he said, "I'm sure of it, ar'nt you?"

Dear reader, shall this little one be a more faithful witness than you? Will you not say to your associates and friends, "I love Him because he first loved me," following the acknowledgement of the personal experience "I'm sure," with the personal question of little Bertie, "ar'nt you?"

"And they overcome him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."—Ex.

THE GROWTH OF SIN.—A single snow-flake is but a very small thing; so one sin indulged may appear of but little consequence. But a number of snow-flakes falling all day long, hiding the land-marks, drifting over the doors, gathering upon mountains, to come down in avalanches, and to cover trees, houses, and even whole villages,—each one alone may be small, but altogether they are all but irresistible. So sin indulged grows and increases until it becomes a mighty power, which, but for God's help, will wreck our souls. We must strive by God's grace to put away all evil from us. Children, be virtuous, noble, and good.

SOLOMON said, many centuries ago, that even a child is known by his doings,—whether his work be pure, and whether it be right. Therefore, when you see a boy slow to go to school, indifferent about learning, and seeking every opportunity to neglect lessons, you may take it for granted that he will be a blockhead.

When you see a boy anxious to spend every cent as soon as he gets it, you may know that he will be a spendthrift.

When you see a boy hoarding up his pennies, and unwilling to part with them for any good purpose, you may set it down that he will be a miser.

HOPE'S SONG.

I hear it singing, singly sweetly,
Softly in an under-tone,
Singing as if God had taught it,
"It is better farther on!"

Night and day it sings the same song,
Sings it while I sit alone,
Sings it so that the heart can bear it,
"It is better farther on!"

Sits upon the grave and sings it,
Sings it when the heart would groan,
Sings it when the shadows darken,
"It is better farther on!"

Farther on? How much farther?
Count the mile-stones one by one,
No! no counting, only trusting
"It is better farther on!"

THE BURNING OF ROME.

R. H. BATEMAN.

Of late my mind has been strongly exercised upon this subject. A late article from Bro. Grant has thrown important and weighty evidence upon the probability of Rome being burned just before or in close connection with the Lord's second advent. I do not think it wise to be over sanguine upon the accomplishment of unfulfilled prophecy, especially where literal, metaphorical, and symbolical representations are used in close connection. Those who are much given to the study of prophecy, know that some of the important prophecies of the Bible, never were, and could not be clearly comprehended until they were fulfilled in God's own time and order. These same prophecies when fulfilled, have served a double purpose. 1. As a key to unlock and understand to a greater degree of accuracy portions of God's word that was as yet unfulfilled. 2. In being an important link in the great chain of foretold events that were to span the entire length of this world's history.

I do not purpose in this article to set forth any peculiar views of my own, but simply to arrange in order, a few plain and positive facts, and then leave the reader to judge for himself. Rev. 18: 8—"Therefore shall her plagues come in one day; death, and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Who is this that is spoken of by the pronoun "her" and "she?" The same that is called in verse 2 "Babylon the Great?" Who, or what is "Babylon the Great?" Rev. 17: 4, 5. "And the WOMAN was arrayed in purple and scarlet color. . . . And upon her forehead was a name written, mystery, BABYLON THE GREAT." Who is this "woman" that is called "Babylon the Great?" vs. 18. "And the woman which thou sawest, is that GREAT CITY which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Thus far all is plain.

Has there ever been a city, either in ancient or modern times that has borne before the world the name of "Babylon the Great?" Never. But, says one, Do we not read of an ancient city by the name of "Babylon," from whose proud throne she ruled the world and the kings of the earth? Yes. We read of such a city in God's word, but her name is simply "Babylon," while this that John speaks of, is called "Babylon the Great." Quite a notable difference between the two.

In the description of "Babylon the Great," she is said to be "drunken with the blood of the saints, and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Was ancient Babylon ever drunk "with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus?" Never. Babylon lay a heap of ruins before Jesus was here on earth. In Rev. 4: 1, it is said, "Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter." Then we must look for the fulfillment of those things that John saw and was told should come "to pass hereafter," after they were revealed unto him, and not before.

Now has there ever been a city on the earth that has fulfilled the description of "Babylon the Great" in its three prominent points? 1. That has ever been "drunken with the blood of saints, and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus?" 2. That is built or sits upon seven mountains or hills. 3. That has ever "reigned over the kings of the earth?" We answer, there has.

Every one that knows anything of the past history of the church, knows that Rome was the seat of the great persecuting power against God's people, and all that are conversant with profane, as well as church history, know that Rome did for centuries reign over the kings of the earth. The school-boy is familiar with the fact that Rome is built upon seven hills. God has called it "Babylon the Great," and men have called it Rome.

In the great prophecies of Daniel we find that there are to be but four universal kingdoms on earth before the establishment of God's kingdom under the whole heavens. Daniel tells us the names of the first three kingdoms, but to the fourth he gives no name. He does however, present us with an accurate description of its peculiar characteristics. In Revelation, John takes up the description of this last kingdom, and agrees in every iota with Daniel, but goes farther and gives a more comprehensive view of it, and at last calls it "Babylon the Great," in its last form. Then according to God's word, the first kingdom is "Babylon," and the last kingdom in its divided state is "Babylon the Great." Here then is the type and the antitype,—the shadow and the substance. As the antitype is greater than the type, and the substance greater than the shadow, even so "Babylon the Great" compares with "Babylon." Ancient Babylon was as much purer than Rome, as gold is purer than iron; as they are represented in the "Image" of Dan. 2nd, taken from the comparison of the two metals.

Again, Rome was as much stronger in point of prowess than Babylon was, as iron is stronger than gold. As the type represents the features of the antitype, and the shadow makes plain all the outlines of the substance, so the history of Babylon tells us of the fulfillment of Rome. As Babylon first rose and became a unit in civil power, and ruled the world, so did Rome rise in greater power, and as a unit controlled the world. As Babylon received her complete overthrow by a succession of falls, so Rome must sink to rise no more, by a series of like falls. As Cyrus was the man appointed of God for the breaking up of the Babylonian kingdom in its first fall; so Jesus, by the power of the Holy Spirit incited his followers to carry his cause not only throughout all the Roman realm, but into the very heart of Rome itself; and the religion of Jesus was the secret power by which the Roman kingdom in the fifth century fell from its lofty height, as a unit, and became divided by this religion of Jesus producing internal strife and commotion.

As Darius stood for a very short period as the first head of the government in Babylon, so the civil and oldest power stood at the head of Rome for a short time after its downfall or breaking up. As Cyrus succeeded Darius to the throne, so the ecclesiastical succeeded the civil power in Rome. As Cyrus united the two powers of the Medes and Persians in his own person, so the ecclesiastical won over the civil power in Rome, and both civil and ecclesiastical were embodied in the form of Popery. As the laws of the Medes and Persians were inexorable, much more so were the inhuman cruelties that were devised by the ecclesiastical body, and carried into barbarous effect by the civil arm.

As Alexander the Great conquered Babylon in its second fall, so Napoleon Bonaparte conquered Rome in the close of the 18th century, and abolished the power of the Papacy, and established a republic in its stead. After the conquest of Babylon by Alexander the Great, it continued to lose its power by a gradual process, until its last final and complete overthrow. Thus with Rome. Since the invasion of Napoleon she has continued to lose her power by a gradual process, slowly yet surely losing her proud position before the world.

But some may say, This does not mean the real city of Rome, but the system of Papacy incorporated in its midst. Then, neither do the prophets, who spake against ancient Babylon, mean the city itself, but the wicked powers that ruled there. If this hypothesis be true, which, if it is in one case, must be in the other, why was it that the real city of Babylon, that was made of wood, stone, and brick, should be thrown down and become a heap of shapeless ruins? Why was Sodom and Gormorah destroyed if he only meant the people? Why did not God send some terrible plague among them that should sweep them off in a few days, and leave those cities for others to afterwards inhabit?

Again, why did God allow Jerusalem to be demolished, and made a heap of ruins? I admit that the city itself, the inanimate wood, stone and brick, of which it is composed, are not to blame for anything that wicked men may do. But past judgments of God, which are plain facts that none can gainsay, prove that God shows his displeasure, not only by destroying evil systems, and the ungodly men who have devised and carried them into effect, but also by destroying their cities, the works of their own hands, which were their retreats, their strongholds, their castles, in which were centred their great wealth, and from whose secret chambers, foul iniquity walked forth like a ferocious lion from his lair.

This has been the case with Rome. From the cloisters of the Vatican the monster fiend has marched forth and bathed his sword in the life-blood of over fifty millions of God's elect, and that sword, all covered with human gore, is still held in threatening attitude, waiting for a favorable opportunity to plunge it again beneath the crimson flood, and bathe it afresh as of old. God has already begun his judgments upon her by first destroying her systems and power; for she says, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow."

On the 18th of July 1870, the Pope declared his dogma of infallibility, thus virtually saying, "I sit a queen and am no widow." "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day; death, mourning, and famine." On the 1st of Nov. 1870, the Italian government issued the following decree. "All the political authority of the Pope and the Holy See is abolished and will remain so." His. of Italy by Abbott. On the 20th of Nov. 1870, four months after she declared herself "a queen," the Italians entered Rome. But a few hours before they entered, it is reported that the Pope said to one of his dignitaries, "The hand of Providence has already written for me the Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin. My days are numbered. My acts are weighed in the balance of divine justice, and I hope they will not be found too far wanting. My empire is fallen into secular hands." How are the mighty fallen. Listen to the cry, vs. 2 "Babylon the Great is fallen, is fallen." Thus in one day (year) did "death, mourning, and famine" come upon her, and it has continued ever since.

Again we quote. Rome, Monday Oct. 20th, 1873. "The General Society of Jesuits, was to-day notified by the government, that the Order of Jesuits must immediately evacuate the premises now occupied by them in this city. The Committee on the Liquidation of Ecclesiastical Property appointed under law for the abolition of religious corporations, to-day took possession of six convents." Not long since the "Tablet," a Roman Catholic organ, reported the following proposition by the Italians, "To levy income and property tax on the Pope, and all the inmates of the Vatican." Should this be carried into effect, it would reduce him and his associates to the level of secular citizenship. In her proud claim that she "shall see no sorrow," God vindicates his authority by taking "the cup which she hath filled," and filling it "to her double."

John says, "And I heard another voice from heaven saying, Come out of her my people." You have all read of the heroic conduct of Father Grassi in lately coming out of her. He stands not alone in this act. Hordes of intelligent Catholics have for some time, and are still, leaving "Babylon the Great" the "Mother of Harlots." Throughout all Germany and in many other nations the Pope is fast losing his adherents, who are gathering together under the royal banner of Jesus waiting for redemption. Neither is the city of Rome itself an exception, for with the wane of the Pope's temporal power therein, not a few of his previously fettered subjects have knocked off the shackles of their servitude and come out in the light of the glorious gospel of Christ.

And now comes the last scene, in the last act of the drama of Rome's existence. "And she shall be utterly burned with fire." Let us now take a final look at the type, ancient Babylon. Jer. 51: 63, 64. "And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates; and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her." What was the last act in the desolation of Babylon?

"About 130 years before the birth of Christ, Humerus, a Parthian governor, who was noted as excelling all tyrants in cruelty, exercised great severities on the Babylonians, and having burned the forum, and some of the temples, and destroyed the fairest parts of the city, reduced many of the inhabitants to slavery on the slightest pretexts, and caused them, together with all their households to be sent into Media." Watson's Bible Dictionary, p. 122. Thus we see the fulfillment of Jeremiah's prophecy; that as the book with the stone bound to it did sink in the midst of Euprates; so Babylon at last did sink beneath the element of actual fire, burned to the ground, never to rise again.

Now view the antitype. In what way shall "Babylon the Great" finally be thrown down? The angel answers it in Rev. 18: 21st verse. "And a mighty angel took up a stone, like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." How shall this be fulfilled? Must it be in the same way as was the type? The 8th verse answers it.

"And she shall be utterly burned with fire." Must Rome then be burned the same as Babylon was? Let God's word and plain facts answer it. Are there any evidences outside of God's word in the present condition of affairs at Rome that seem to declare that Rome will be burned? Listen, while I quote from a late article of Bro. Grant's. "A society has been formed in Italy called the Alfieri Society. Its object may be seen by referring to their articles of agreement. Art. 5th reads as follows. To devise and prosecute the abolition of Papacy; the removal of the Pope from Rome, and the suppression of the civil rights of the priests. Art. 6th reads, In case of foreign war, the society shall proceed to operate upon its field of action, even before hostilities shall have been formally declared. First, by burning as many churches as possible, and especially the Vatican. Second, in compelling all the priests, and those whose principles are manifestly hostile to the nation to emigrate; and third, in exciting the masses to the historic traditions of the Sicillian vespers."

You observe they are not to wait until "hostilities shall have been formally declared," before they carry their purpose to burn her into effect. With such a society, enrolled for a purpose like this, in the very midst of a frenzied zeal, and those too, whom "God hath put it into their hearts to fulfill his will," how easy it would be at the midnight hour for a thousand torches at one and the same moment to send forth ten thousand tongues of forked flame, in as many different places, that would in one short hour wrap a startled and terrified city in one mass of flaming fire.

And now, dear reader, lest you may purpose in your own heart to wait and see whether this great event does actually take place or not, before you make a full preparation to meet your Lord when he comes, I would caution you against so fool-hardy a step. Listen again to the voice which John heard "from heaven saying," "For in one hour is she made desolate. Rejoice over her thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her." How can those apostles and prophets who are dead "Rejoice over her?" In none other way than by virtue of a resurrection. What shall raise them? "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." What is the next event that John brings to view? The marriage of the Lamb is come and his wife hath made herself ready." Not is going to make herself ready, but "hath made herself ready." The bride's work is all done. She now awaits the marriage feast when Christ "shall gird himself, and shall make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them."

Not long since a friend told me of a certain minister not connected with us as a denomination, who said, "If I ever live to see the day when the Vatican is burned, I'll go forth at once and proclaim the Advent doctrine." I fear he would not go far, for a voice more powerful than man's would then take up the message and sound it forth in tones that would reach the ears of not only all the living, but would pierce the earth and awake the slumbering dead. "And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. 2: 8.

Does not the type, and the past fulfillment of prophecy show very strongly that Rome "shall be utterly burned with fire?" Do not the Scriptures show that in close connection with this event, even while she is yet burning, that Christ will come and raise the righteous dead, so that the "holy apostles and prophets" may "rejoice over her."

I will not presumptuously say I am right in this conclusion of the future of Rome, and the close proximity thereto of the advent of Christ. That would be unwise. But I do ask every reader's careful attention to this subject. We cannot tell how far in the future this event may be, we must leave that to unfold itself. Meanwhile let us be watching and waiting, and giving "the household meat in due season.

Let us seek and attain unto perfect love that casteth out fear. "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

Lockport, N. Y.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

THOMAS W. GILS.

Is it a literal city? Many are of the opinion that the description given by John the Revelator is highly figurative, and either ignore or spiritualize it all away. But he says that he "saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." He also affirms that it lieth four square; the length being equal to its breadth. The angel measured the city with a golden reed, twelve thousand furlongs. If we are to understand that this is the measurement of one of its sides, and apply our standard of measurement to the city, it must be a very large place, and would doubtless, hold all the redeemed of the Lord. Twelve thousand furlongs would be fifteen hundred miles square, and contain two millions, two hundred and fifty thousand square miles; which are equal to one billion, four hundred and forty millions of acres; or two hundred and thirty billions, four hundred millions of square rods. This would be equal to sixty-two trillions, seven hundred and twenty-six billions, four hundred millions square feet, including its walls, and would cover a territory two hundred and eighty-eight times the size of the State of Massachusetts.

Let us suppose the wall to be two hundred and sixty-three feet thick. Its foundation surface would contain eight billions, three hundred and thirty-one millions, five hundred and sixty-three thousand, three hundred and twenty four square feet; which, taken from the superficial contents of the city, would give us sixty-two trillions, seven hundred and eighteen billions, sixty-eight millions, four hundred and thirty-six thousand, six hundred and seventy-six square feet within the walls of the city, and would be surface enough to hold fifteen trillions, six hundred and seventy-nine billions, five hundred and seventeen millions, one hundred and nine thousand, one hundred and sixty nine persons, allowing each four square feet to stand upon.

This would surely be a vast company. It would take a person more than four hundred and ninety-six thousand years to count them, at the rate of one a second, without any time for rest or refreshment; and would require more than eighty births a second for six thousand years to make the number above stated, and would exceed seven thousand five hundred times the present population of this globe.

The city was pure gold, like unto clear glass, and the street of the city was also pure gold, as it were transparent glass, surrounded by its jasper walls, adorned with its twelve pearly gates and standing upon its twelve foundations of precious stones. There will be the river of the water of life, with the tree of life on either side yielding her monthly fruitage, whose leaves shall be for the healing of the nations. The tabernacle of God shall be with men. All tears shall be wiped from their eyes. Sickness, sorrow, pain, and death shall be felt and feared no more. No more need of the sun or moon to light up this city; for the glory of God and the Lamb shall be the light of it. The saved nations shall walk in the light thereof. The throne of God and the Lamb shall be there. It will be a glorious jubilee to all those who have been waiting for their Lord and King, and are prepared to enter this city of refuge, when "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein, shall be burned up."

We shall behold in the city of our God, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, the patriarchs, apostles, prophets, the christian nartyrs of every age and clime, our neighbors, friends, and relatives who have died in the cause of Christ, and also Jesus our Savior who is to be crowned king of Paradise restored, occupying the throne of his father David, and to whose kingdom there shall be no end. Then shall be sung the song of Moses and the Lamb.

O, christian friends! is not a home in the city of the New Jerusalem a sufficient incentive to be faithful in the cause of Christ? Let us consecrate ourselves more fully to his service, and labor more ardently for the salvation of our race.

Sinner, come to Christ while probation lingers. There is hope. You will need a shelter from the impending storm that is about to burst upon an ungodly world. If you are housed away in this city of refuge, you will be the recipient of eternal life; if not eternal death will be your doom.

THE DAY OF THE LORD.

JEHIEL JUDD.

"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand; a day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains."—JOEL 2: 1, 2.

There never was a time since people began to multiply upon the earth but that God had a few faithful ones who would hearken to the word of the Lord, and obey his commands. This is the case to-day, and it will be as long as time shall last. Although the words of this text were uttered by the prophet very many centuries ago, yet he looks forward through the many events of the world's history down to the end of time, and there he takes his stand. The scenes of the last day are wonderfully portrayed before his prophetic eye, and as a faithful watchman on the walls of Zion, like one giving meat in due season, now that the right time has come, he speaks forth the command, "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm," etc., adding, "let all the inhabitants of the land tremble." Will there be an immediate cause for trembling? The day of the Lord will be not only a day (or time) of exceeding darkness, in consequence of clouds, but there will be a destructive army. There will be "a great people and a strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations. A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth; the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen so shall they run. Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap; like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array. Before their face the people shall be much pained; all faces shall gather blackness. They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks; neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path; and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded. They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief. The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble; the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining; and the Lord shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible, and who can abide it?"

Here is a subject that interests me much, and I think should interest every one. It is a subject that we should understand, lest the day of the Lord's wrath come upon us suddenly and unexpectedly, and we be taken in the fatal snare. Almost invariably I am told, while presenting this subject to individuals, that this time of darkness is already in the past; but I think this is a mistake. It is a fact that one dark day has been experienced, but undoubtedly this is that which the Revelator saw should come to pass under the sounding of the fourth trumpet, when the sun, moon and stars should be smitten, so that the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise. Rev. 8: 12. This was but a symbol of what is yet to take place in a more unlimited sense. It was but for a sign unto us that the end of all things is at hand. A more terrible day than has yet been realized is about to dawn upon an ungodly world; but I thank God that there are a few holy people yet living who can meet the evils which are but just ahead, and who can look up and rejoice because the time of their redemption is at hand.

I cannot do justice to this subject, but since the Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy? Let us all, who fear God, watch for the sword of the Lord, so that, seeing it approaching, we may be able to go forth to warn the sinner of his impending fate, to ask him to flee from the wrath to come by laying hold on Christ, and accepting him as his deliverer.

Although this sword has not yet fallen upon us, yet to-day it is being drawn from its scabbard by the hand of the Lord, and we must give the alarm, because "woe" is pronounced upon "them who are at ease in Zion." Soon, very soon the armies of the nations will be gathered together to the battle of that "great day of God Almighty." "Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision; for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake." Joel 3: 14-16. Zephaniah also says: "And it shall come to pass at that time that I will search Jerusalem with candles" (1: 12). But, thank God, better days are coming. In the midst of this darkness and strife Christ leaves the mediatorial seat, the gloominess is cleared away, and the perfect day is ushered in.

IMMORAL USE OF WORDS.

J. H. WHITMORE.

Words are the medium of communication, the currency of thought, the expression of mind, the indices of articulate language, the indispensables of science, poetry, history, and all literatures. Words are representatives of things, and since they are also used as descriptive names, great care should be used in applying them as epithets to men and their acts.

One of the immoral uses of words is where a bad thing is given a good name as a disguise to conceal its true nature, or where euphemism is employed as a gloss for some crime or evil habit. Thus when murder is called "homicide," when theft is called "a financial irregularity," when lying is called "equivocating," when the betrayal of one's country is called "a change of political sentiment," when a bribe is called "a valuable consideration," when slander and libel are called "freedom of speech" and "freedom of the press," when drunkenness is called "inebriety," and gluttony "epicurism," the euphemisms are intended to have, and do have the effect of smoothing over the sins mentioned. The principles of right are eternal. No time-serving, no toadying, no misuse of words will ever make wrong right in the sight of Heaven; and he who deliberately attempts to make sin plausible and harmless by giving it a good name, brings upon himself the woe of them "that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter."

The fact that words are used as the currency of thought, or more accurately, the fact that words when used by a speaker or writer are supposed to express his thoughts, makes the subject of names one of vast importance. Of course it is not claimed that names change moral qualities. They have no power to make good evil, or evil good; but where a good act is given a bad name, or where a crime is given a good name, or a euphemism is employed as a disguise, then harm is done to society, for its currency is debased, and no society is any better than the language it habitually employs. Shakspeare makes Juliet say to Romeo, after asking, "What's in a name?" "That which we call a rose, by any other name would smell as sweet." And so it would, but the illustration does not reach the point under consideration. The nameless Quaker who said to a cross dog, "I'll not kill thee, but I'll give thee a bad name," and immediately cried out "Mad dog!" (whereupon the poor brute was killed by the bystanders), understood full well the power of evil names. What a bitter irony the French employ when they call their brandy eau de vie,—literally, water of life, but more truthfully, water of death! The untutored savage was truer to nature when he called the accursed drink, "fire-water." There is something shockingly profane to pious minds in appplying a name derived from some of the most cheering promises of our Savior to a drink that has been the fruitful cause of disease, crime, madness and death. Better by far to say with Cassio,—

"O, thou invisible spirit of wine,
If thou hast no name to be known by,
Let us call thee devil."

Another misuse of words is where different epithets are applied to different classes for the same offences. Thus when a poor man, urged perhaps by hunger, steals a loaf of bread, he is branded as a thief; but when a cashier in a bank steals $10,000, he is called an "embezzler"; when a State Treasurer steals $200,000, he is called "a defaulter"; and when some government official of high rank and station steals half a million, his crime is called "a financial irregularity." "Steal" and "thief" are two old Anglo-Saxon words of such definite and expressive meaning, and withal so odious because everybody knows their exact meaning, that they are worth a bushel of Latinized euphemisms as designations of the crime and the criminal. How oddly it would sound were we to paraphrase the commandment, Thou shalt not steal, by "Thou shalt not commit financial irregularities"! The English toady, who aptly enough describes the common laborer's condition after taking in a large supply of bad whiskey, by using the contemptuous words, "dead drunk," would say of the Lord Mayor in the same condition that his Lordship was "slightly intoxicated"; of the Duke of Cambridge, "His Highness was slightly inebriated; of the Prince of Wales, "His Royal Highness was slightly elevated." Such a use of words is manifestly immoral.

"Through tattered clothes small vices do appear.
Robes and furred gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it."

Men for the most part are more ashamed of base names than of base deeds. Thus if you call a man who has "put up" "a corner" in the stock market a shrewd financier, he will receive the appellation as a compliment; but if you are bold enough to call him by his right name—thief—you will make him very angry indeed. A wicked man or a wicked act, under the guise of a good name, is but a whited sepulchre, fair without, but foul within. All good people ought to unite in vigorously opposing such immoralities of language. Unless great care is used in calling things by their right names, our moral consciousness and fine sense of right will become blunted, and we shall gradually lose sight of not only the distinctive difference between good and bad names, but between good and evil themselves.

It is an immoral, false, and unmeaning use of words to call a man who retails liquors by the drink to his fellows, "a wine merchant," or to call his den of iniquity "a sample-room." Such a man is a grog-seller, and his place of business is a grog-shop. "Sample-room" is one of the latest devices of the devil. The right names have a good healthy odium attached to them, and are for this very reason, and because they tell the exact truth, the proper ones to use. I know of no good reason why a man who sells rum should not be known as a rumseller. Whatever of odium justly attaches to the name, rightly belongs to him who earns it. The attempt to sweeten "bar-room" by giving it the hitherto innocent name of "sample-room" should arouse the indignation of every honest man. Its history is one of deceit and shame, and for my part I have more respect for a man who owns he keeps a bar-room, than for one who shamefacedly sneaks behind a partition labeled "sample-room," and there unblushingly carries on his nefarious traffic.

"Church lotteries," "wheels of fortune," "ring cakes," "post-offices," "fish-ponds," etc., etc., are only euphemisms for gambling apparatus to be used by pious (?) people for "religious (?) purposes." Church folk, who would have a proper abhorrence of gambling in unconsecrated saloons, have no conscientious scruples against gambling when it is carried on in a church for the purpose of raising money they could not otherwise get. As though the name and the place could sanctify the act!

There are many other instances where words are immorally used, but I fear I have already written at too great length, and will close by exhorting all who read this to join with me in calling things by their right names, whether fair or ugly, good or bad. To use Milton's fine sentiment, "Let us learn to hate the cowardice of doing wrong in word or deed.

HOW THE LORD HAS LED ME.

L. ROBBINS.

About four years since the Holy Ghost deeply impressed upon my mind the necessity of a clean heart, though I had been much blest many times. I believed that Jesus came to save his people from their sins, and that he was able and willing to do it. It seemed to me there was a better way for his children than to live sinning and repenting. At length I came to the full decision that if there was such a state for me I must have it. I immediately set about this work by fasting and prayer, resolved I would never yield the point. I sometimes thought I should never attain it, but I saw clearly it would be death to go back. I fasted and prayed for a number of days. Then I would consecrate myself to God and try to believe, but had no special blessing. One morning rising while it was yet dark, once more to ask God for help, I felt an inward consciousness that my all was upon the altar, and yet no blessing came. I saw my own helplessness, and that none but the Almighty could help. I ceased struggling, and in simple faith cast myself upon the dear Savior, believing his word,—that he is "faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Immediately a sweet peace filled my poor heart, such as is better felt than described. I told my brethren what the Lord had done for me. Some of the leaders did not believe in such a work, and thus I had some persecution; yet I went to work among my neighbors, talking and praying, and scattering tracts and books, and I trust some good was accomplished.

TRIP TO CALIFORNIA.

We are now (Tuesday, Jan. 20th, 1 P. M.), west of Omaha, on the Union Pacific R. R., passing through the nice farming lands in Nebraska. We arrived in Omaha at about half past ten, Chicago time, and departed for the west after an hour and a half. Omaha is on the west bank of the Missouri river, occupying an elevated, uneven surface. It bears a strong resemblance to Dubuque, in Iowa, on the west bank of the Mississippi. It has many pleasant residences, and some twenty thousand inhabitants. Its situation on the banks of the Missouri river, and at the terminus of the U. P. R. R. is very favorable for rapid growth.

The U. P. R. R. extends from Omaha to Ogden, a distance of 1,032 miles. The first grading was done in the autumn of 1864, and the first rail was laid in July, 1865. It was finished May 10th, 1869. It is substantially built, and conducted with much care, hence but few accidents occur. The average speed of the trains is about five hundred miles in twenty-four hours, or twenty miles an hour. On this road there are 1,402 culverts, trestle-works and bridges, amounting in all to 69,281½ feet. The earnings of the road in 1870–71, were not far from twelve million dollars. It is estimated that five hundred and twenty-five miles of the road cost $16.000 per mile; three hundred and sixty-three, $32,000 per mile, and one hundred and eighty, $48,000 per mile. The road is protected by over seventy miles of snow fences, and some seven miles of snow-sheds. At Ogden it connects with the Central Pacific road, which extends to Sacramento, Cal. The Central Pacific Co. commenced grading at Sacramento Jan. 8, 1863. Sacramento is one hundred and thirty-eight miles from San Francisco, and seven hundred and forty-three miles from Ogden, making eight hundred and eighty-one from Ogden to San Francisco, 1,913 from Omaha, and 2,415 from Chicago. The rolling stock on the U. P. R. R., including engines and all kinds of cars, amounts to 3,338. The fare from Omaha to San Francisco is one hundred dollars, from Omaha to Chicago about twenty dollars. If one is going to Omaha and return, they will do well to buy a mileage ticket for one thousand miles for thirty dollars. The fare from Boston to Chicago is twenty-four dollars. We give these facts for the benefit of any of our readers who may think of going to California.

Tuesday, 5 P. M. We have now passed Fremont, Schuyler, and Columbus, which are flourishing towns in Nebraska, in the great Platte River Valley. The river is some twelve hundred miles long, passing through an immense grassy plain, having a rich, deep soil. The river is wide, but so shallow as to be of no use for any kind of navigation. It is dangerous crossing it, because of its quicksands. It is said to be an extremely treacherous stream. It will take several hours to cross this plain, as it is hundreds of miles in extent. Thus far our trip has been prosperous and pleasant as could be expected. We are supplied with hygienic food, consisting of unleavened Graham gems, oatmeal pudding, beans, condensed milk, and apples; also a few figs and raisins. We eat our food with thankfulness and pleasure, having perfect peace in Christ. As it is becoming too dark to write more, we bid our readers good night, hoping for a happy to-morrow.

Wednesday morning, Jan. 21st. We are approaching the end of the great Platte river valley, which is over four hundred miles long, and some fifty miles wide. Thousands of cattle are kept on this plain by herdsmen, accompanied by their shepherd dogs. At present there is no snow on most of the plains. It is said cattle do well here. Eastern people would not think of wintering cattle in such a place. This vast plain is free from trees and shrubbery, excepting a little by the river side. This vast plain is in Nebraska, which is bounded on the east by the Missouri river, west by Wyoming teritory, north by Dacota, south by Kansas. It was organized into a territory in May, 1854, and has an area of 122,007 square miles. It has a pure, dry atmosphere, and is said to be a good place for persons troubled with lung difficulties.

In the western part of Nebraska we pass Prairie Dog City, where the prairie dogs abound. They are about the size of a Guinea pig, and resemble a grey squirrel. They burrow in the ground, which they dig up, quite to the annoyance of the farmer. They bring out a bushel or two of dirt into a heap at the entrance of their hole. When the train approaches, they run to their burrow, and then stand up on their hind legs like a woodchuck, to watch the movement of things, or else dodge into their hiding place. It is said that owls and rattlesnakes burrow with them in pleasant harmony. Their cities often cover spaces from two to three miles square. It is said their burrows have subterraneous connections. They are quite an interesting little animal, and would make a pretty home pet for the children.

Wednesday, 3.30 P. M. We are now climbing up the Rocky mountains, drawn by two engines, puffing heavily as they rise towards Sherman, where we reach an elevation of 8,242 feet above the level of the sea. This is the highest on the route, and said to be the highest railroad station in the world. It is a wild, rock-bound region, from whence one can look away to "Long's Peak" and "Pike's Peak" to the southward, and Elk mountain is to be seen in the west. Some stinted pines are scattered about on the mountain, and a great variety of strange rocks in multitudes of grotesque shapes, which look as though some fashioning hand had moulded them into their peculiar forms, and that they were but the remains of some old castles in ruins. The mountain cuts for the road are protected from snow-drifts by snow-sheds, or lines of fences and stone walls, varying from one to six, behind each other, and a few rods apart. The road is now well protected against snow storms, such as produced the blockade in 1871–2. There is only about two inches of snow on the mountains at present. In the summer they afford fine grazing land, and many cattle are still remaining. Aside from the rocky portion, there is some fine, level land on these mountains, where farming might be carried on successfully. Most of the land is free from all trees and shrubbery. The weather is mild, like November, and thus far it has been quite calm, making the trip more pleasant than usual.

There is much heavy teaming required to transport things connected with the mining districts along the route. To-day we passed seven wagons, each having from six to seven yoke of oxen attached. Those doing business in these western wilds are obliged to endure many hardships, that would appall our New England friends. Again we bid our readers good-night.

Thursday morning, Jan. 22nd. We are feeling nicely, as fresh as when we first started. The night was rather sharp, and we found it necessary to get pretty near the stoves to keep warm. Sleep was not abundant, but with our air pillow placed against the side of the car, we frequently fell into the embrace of forgetfulness, or had pleasant dreams of unseen things. We expect to reach Ogden at 6.15 this evening. During the day our route will be through very interesting and wild scenery, as varying as the objects in a kaleidoscope. It seems as if nature had made special efforts to prepare charming and wonderful scenery to please the traveler over the western wilds. On account of these things the trip is agreeable; when otherwise it would be very tedious. The first day of the journey seems the most fatiguing; after that, one feels but little weariness, as a general rule. We spend a portion of our time in writing pencillings for the Crisis, and notes to our friends, and the remainder in conversation with fellow travellers and watching the wonders by the way. The days do not seem long and tedious, as might be expected by those who have not had the experience.

During the night and to-day, the country looks more wintry, on account of about two inches of snow on the ground. We have met with no obstructions on the way, and are passing on pleasantly and rapidly to the end of our journey, in the "Summer Land."

From Cheyenne to Ogden we had one very disagreeable nuisance in the car, which was tobacco smoking. We spoke to the conductors, but the smoking was still allowed. Passengers, including porter and conductor, came in from the palace car to smoke in the only first-class passenger car on the train, excepting the sleeping cars. We had no idea when we paid for a first-class ticket, that we should be compelled to ride in a smoking car. We were glad when we got to Ogden, and stepped on board the cars on the Central Pacific road, where such things are not allowed. We shall be glad when we get to a land where we shall not be annoyed with tobacco smoking, puffing, chewing and spitting. We expect none in the kingdom.

SIN AND DEPRAVITY.

What is the difference between sin and depravity? Another term for depravity would be the Adamic nature, which his posterity have inherited, and for which they are not to blame, any more than they are for having two eyes, two ears, and two feet with ten toes. No one thinks of asking forgiveness for having an Adamic, or human nature, because it is an element in his constitution. Sin consists in voluntarily allowing that nature to lead us to disobey a known law of God given to man. It is the fruit of the working of the Adamic nature unrestrained. This nature in man before sin appears is quite like the seed in the soil before it germinates. It lies dormant till warmth and moisture cause action among its elements, that results in the production of a plant. So the Adamic nature, or human depravity in man, is quiet till aroused by temptation into active operation, when sin is the result, unless the temptation is resisted and overcome. Sin is the legitimate fruit of the working of the Adamic nature, as holiness is the only proper fruit of the Holy Spirit when allowed to take the control of men. Then the human, or depraved nature, becomes subject to the divine nature, and the person thus enters into harmony with his Creator, and delights in all purity, while he abhors that which is evil.

Independent of the active power of the Holy Spirit, we do not believe any one can live a holy life; and there is no time when one feels more conscious of this fact than when all is given up to Christ for safe keeping. The freer one is from sin, the more he feels the need of the keeping power of Jesus. Unaided by the Lord, man is not able to cope with the devil and his angels, or even to keep his own inherent nature in full subjection to the will of God; who has provided in Christ and the Holy Spirit a complete armor by which we may overcome the enemy in every conflict. But when a little sin is permitted to have a hiding place in the heart, it is like allowing an enemy in the fort to plan its destruction and deliverance to an advancing foe. Give up the keys of the heart to Jesus, and ask him to take absolute control of your whole being, without the least possible reserve; then it may be known what it is to have the Adamic nature kept as quiet as the seeds in the soil that feel no warmth, and have no moisture to cause them to grow. M. G.

COMMERCIAL IMMORALITY.

Commercial immorality is doing commercial business in an unjust, defrauding manner, giving some undue advantages over others. It is extortion, and wickedness, and indicates that the standard of moral character is low. In fact, the true moral character of any people may be determined by the moral character of its commercial transactions. The honest integrity and virtue of men's hearts are as really tested in that department of worldly experience as in any one. From this stand-point the moral character of the world may be clearly seen and judged. When business men are losing confidence in each other, and bargains are more frequently broken, obligations more often disregarded, and men are more inclined to distress others to fill their own coffers, we may confidently calculate that the moral standard is going down. When men are educated in their churches to gamble for funds to support the extravagancies of worldly, unscriptural worship, thinking that the end justifies the means, they may be expected to gamble in their financial business, excusing themselves that they will pay tithes to Christ. The National Republican uncovers the cancer on the social body, thus:—

"GAMBLING IN WALL STREET.

One of our statisticians has taken the trouble to compile a brief table, giving the fluctuations of railroad stock during the year which has just closed. In the two or three inches of figures in which it is embraced may be found by the novelist or the historian the material for a picture of a phase of our life and morality which might be extended through volume after volume. It presents in the most forcible and effective way an illustration of the commercial immorality of the time, a grim photograph of the debauchery, the depravity, the crime and the wickedness of a class of men, who, to our shame be it said, enjoy high reputation, socially and politically; who, many of them, are the leaders in our religious movements; the models who are held up to our young generations as exemplars and guides in the march and battle of life."

The same paper in another article giving a more general view of the diseased political body and its rapid progression to a fatal termination, says:—

"The United States of 1873–'4 are widely different from the United States of 1860. We have grown in population, increased in wealth, advanced in civilization. New States, as large as empires, have come to us with the natural growth of the country. The political and social condition of millions of our citizens has changed in a manner which has no parallel in history. Diverse interests have arisen among our people, complications in social and political economy, which must be reconciled and regulated, so as to blend all into one harmonious whole. Let us look for a moment at the situation. In all the large cities, the working classes are suffering as they have not suffered since the panic of 1856–7; the workingmen, skilled mechanics, are on strike, or preparing to strike, by the thousand, and the ten thousand; the farmers of the West, for the first time, are organizing in secret lodges for politico-social purposes, maintaining a menacing silence, and brooding over real or imaginary grievances; the finances are in disorder; merchants look anxiously into the new year, endeavoring to see through the gloom and darkness in which it is shrouded. In addition to all, we have angry mutterings from the great centres of population, reminding us of revolutionary scenes in other countries, and to which, up to this, we have been happily strangers. Party ties are no longer as binding as they were five years ago; a spirit of unrest is abroad, which, at any moment, may sweep the country like a hurricane.

How will Congress meet all these questions? Has it within it the power to ameliorate the condition of affairs? Can it point the way out of the difficulties that surround us? These queries are more easily asked than answered. But it seems to us they might be answered in something more effective than mere words; that some plan might be devised by which the great railroad monopolies and corporations shall cease to prey upon the people, that shall prevent the acquisition of thousands and thousands of square miles of territory by a dozen or a score of persons who have the wit to bend, fairly or unfairly, a legislature to their purposes. It seems to us that we might begin to make an end of chartered, legalized robbery, and goodness knows we have only too much of it. If we could only gain even this one point in the coming Congress, it would be a triumph which would do more to restore the confidence of the people in their legislators and in their party than anything else that could be accomplished."

Can a Congress, many of whose members have been bought and sold like cattle in the market, be depended upon to redeem a nation from the vortex of ruin, when it may sweep, as the Editor confesses, like a "hurricane" to destruction? No; a nation can never purify itself from political and social corruption. For how can a corrupt people produce a legislative body more pure than itself? Can a fountain raise a stream above its own level? If more virtuous legislators has suffered the moral standard to decline, can less virtuous ones raise it up? No; the history of all the past proves that political purgation is always produced by judgments from God, revolution, war, subjugation, overthrow, destruction.

The consuming fires of social corruption in the Old World were quenched by the waters of the flood. The festering sores of the cities of the plain were burned out by the caustic fires of brimstone. The wicked oppressions and debaucheries of Babylon, Persia, and Grecia were terminated by bloodshed and revolution. So it was with ancient Israel. Repeated captivities and judgments kept them upon their land, and restrained them from universal idolatry until the Messiah came and offered to redeem them by his mighty arm; but they were too corrupt to accept the offer. God suffered Christ's people to fall by "sword," "flame," "captivity" and "spoil," "to purge and to make them white," through nearly all the ages of the past. Since the church has been released from this restraining external persecution, wicked divisions have rent her, ritualistic conformity, worldly vanity and self-righteousness have robbed her of her spirituality, until the masses are "twice dead, plucked up by the roots."

How will the corruptions of this age end? We answer by war, desolation, and the purgating fires of the last judgment. But some tell us that the divine government is not immutable, but is to be radically changed, so that in the last days the Jews and Gentiles will be politically, socially reformed through human instrumentalities, without corrective judgments. Be not deceived! These sinking nations who are put to their wits' end to know how to stay the rising tide of immorality and out breaking sins can never be reformed by their own effort. Nothing but the judgments of God and the exterminating fires of his indignation will accomplish it. J. C.

BIBLE QUOTATIONS.

The Scriptures are sacred, and every sentence was designed by its Author to express some fact or sentiment important for us to understand. When we read it we should exercise care to read it correctly; and when we quote it, in speaking or writing, we should be exceedingly careful to quote it as God has given it to us.

Brethren and sisters, when you write for publication, please take the Bible when you attempt to quote its sayings, and be sure that you give them correctly. Your Editors feel a weighty responsibility in this important matter, for we realize that God will charge us with sin if we carelessly publish for divine truth that which is a human mistake. It takes us four times as long to find a misquoted passage, and correct it in the copy, as it would the writer to take the Bible and quote it correctly. Will our contributors be more particular in this matter, and relieve us of an unnecessary burden? Time is so short, and duties so numerous and pressing, that we should assist each other all we can in these little matters, so that we may be enabled to do all we can for those perishing around us.

God help us to love each other as brethren, and work together in perfect harmony unto the end. A word of wise counsel to a christian is always sufficient. J. C.

SHORT LETTERS.

We want more brief, spiritual letters from our brethren and sisters, in which the overflow of a pure heart shall be expressed. We do not mean arguments; we have a good supply of those; but we want to hear of your deep-toned piety, fulness of divine love, richness of true christian experience, stability of a well-grounded hope, joyful expectation of soon seeing Jesus coming in his glory, and the interests of Christ's cause in your churches. A letter covering one or two pages of note paper is about the length we desire. Many of our readers want such epistles. Shall we have them? J. C.

CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

Are sinners saints? We think every one would say, No to this question. Let us reverse it, and inquire, Are saints sinners? Is not the answer to this question as easy as to the first? What constitutes the difference between a saint and a sinner? We think but one proper answer can be given; the sinner is in his sins, and the saint is "free from sin," as saith the Scriptures. Does any one grow out of sin, and thus become a saint? We believe it to be a fact, that there is only one way to get out of sin, and that is by pardon from the Lord, after a person confesses and forsakes his sins. All our sins remain upon us till they are pardoned, and will never become any smaller than when first committed, only by being forgiven through the atoning blood of Jesus. No one is prepared to grow up into Christ as long as his sins remain unpardoned. A little sin left may leaven the whole man.

Sin is an active principle, just like leaven in meal. Instead of growing less, its nature is to increase and spread. It does not remain in a man like a bullet lodged in his arm or leg; but is like the living, growing cancer, continually spreading, till it ends in death.

A person may grow in grace, or gain strength to keep in subjection his evil propensities, or Adamic nature; but they are not eradicated by growth, but by the power of the Holy Spirit, which may do the work very quickly, when our subjection to Christ is complete, without reserve. After many fruitless years of effort to grow out of inbred sin, it has been favored by happy experience in the history of a great multitude, that what we cannot do, in a life-time, the dear Savior can accomplish in a moment; and that when his cleansing spirit fills these bodily temples, then we are just in a condition to grow up into Christ, our living head. When the weeds are out of the garden, then the vegetables can grow; so when sin is out of the human heart, and the Lord takes possession by his power, then we can make steady progress in divine life. It is sin that prevents "christian growth." Keep in mind that the Bible says: "He that sinneth, is of the devil." Let us live in Christ, and out of sin. "In him is no sin." M. G.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES.

A. P. MOORE.

I have just returned home after an absence of five weeks, attending meetings nearly every night. I left home Dec. 17th, for the Eastern District Conference at Aurelius, N. Y., from the 19th to the 21st. Owing to the bad roads the meeting was small, but good. The Conference left a good impression on the minds of the community, and many seemed very much interested; and if the meeting could have been followed up by a protracted effort, much good might have been accomplished. But a "Christmas Tree" must be attended to, and so the Lord's work must be postponed for "a more convenient season," which I fear they will not find. God's time should be our time.

Monday several of us visited the State Prison at Auburn. It was a sad sight indeed to see twelve hundred and thirty-seven convicts in one prison;—by far more than ever before, showing conclusively that the fabled millennium has not yet come, but instead the world is rapidly increasing in wickedness. If the Lord does not come very soon to put an end to wickedness, the present capacity of our State Prison will be far too small to hold the criminals, and they are talking of building another prison at Elmira. What a sad sight to see that vast army of criminals, in their striped suits, march in to dinner, "single file," and seat themselves at the tables. I thought there were many mothers throughout the State, if they could stand where I did and see their own boys march in thus, whose hearts would bleed. O for the time to come when these scenes will pass away forever, and prisons no more be needed!

Leaving that place, Bro. Miles and myself went six miles and held meetings four evenings. Eight started to serve the Lord. It was a very rich farming community, where all were so rich that they did not think but that poor preachers could travel and work for nothing, and live on "God bless you; do come again!" A peck of hickory nuts was our salary, and as Bro. Miles had some, I had all the nuts to bring home.

Went from there to Pineville. This is Bro. B. P. Stevens' field of labor. He has preached there every other Sunday for some time. He was with me the most of the time, and Bro. Miles also about a week. Here we had a hard battle in the name of the Lord. Were there four Sundays, and evenings between. The Methodists started meetings after we did, but we paid no attention to them or their worldly policy, but kept at the work of the Lord, and, as a result, last Sunday Bro. Stevens baptized six, and in the evening received twenty into the church by the hand of fellowship. We had a complete victory in the name of the Lord. It was a day long to be remembered. The Lord help them ever to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." The devil is not yet dead, but is doing his best to pull down all we build up, and often works through those that people have the most confidence in to accomplish it.

The present state of society shows us conclusively that the end is at hand. I long, sigh, and "groan" with "creation" for redemption; but am willing to "suffer" and toil on, and wait patiently for the Lord. Pray for poor me.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

J. H. ELLIOTT.

I will come again. How glad I am that Jesus ever left those words to his waiting church. Why should the church look for his coming with such bright hope? Because he told them that if he went away he would come again, and receive them unto himself. How cheering! to think that Jesus, the one that was rejected by men, and died that we might live,—this same Jesus is coming back to earth to receive his chosen people, and set up his kingdom. His kingdom will be an everlasting kingdom.

He is coming as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, to inflict judgment on such as will not obey the truth, but to show mercy to the faithful. He is coming to give life to those that have gone down in death, and to change the living that still remain on the earth. How sweet must have been his words to his disciples. After telling them he must go away, and what would come to pass, they were almost discouraged; but we hear him saying, "Let not your hearts be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." And in the same chapter he said, "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." I can rejoice with those dear disciples in the return of our Lord to earth again.

Let us be in a state of readiness to await his coming. If we are not ready, we shall be left with those that will be lost. Lift up your heads, dear pilgrims, for your redemption draws nigh. Jesus is soon coming, then our trials will be over forever, and to our joy there will be no end.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM P. G. BOWMAN.

Dear Brethren:—I have just returned from a trip to Reynolds, Ga., distant about three hundred and fifty miles. Reynolds is a beautiful village on the R. R., about midway between Macon and Columbus, and about forty miles this side of the Alabama line. They have a Baptist and Methodist church, and a Primitive Baptist church, nearly in sight of the place. The Sabbath I was with them there happened to be no service in any of the churches, and as my appointment had been published some time before, and many expected to hear a setter-forth of strange gods, the result was I had the entire community out. Men were there who had never been seen inside of a church before.

I tried to preach on the nature of man, the redemption, the kingdom of God, etc. I did my best every time, as I always do, whether I have ten or ten hundred hearers. The blessed Jesus by his Spirit was with the preacher and the congregation every time we met to worship him; and before our meetings closed every soul in that crowded house who made no profession of religion rose for prayers,—something that was never seen before in Reynolds. When I left the pulpit, some of the prominent men of the place came and took me by the hand and asked me to continue the meetings. Some of the brethren—Methodists and Baptists—said they got more light in a few minutes on the nature and design of baptism than they had ever received before. If there was a soul in the place when I left who did not subscribe to our views of the Scriptures, I did not hear of it.

I never met with a more hearty welcome by all classes than I did in Reynolds. The Baptist brethren kindly gave me their church, and told me I could have it as long as I stayed. God bless the Baptists, Methodists, and everybody else in Reynolds. I carried a number of copies of Bro. Wellcome's work on Baptism; they were all taken at once, and I left a large number of tracts for distribution. I might relate many interesting private interviews I had, but perhaps it might not be best at present. I was strongly solicited to send them a preacher, and they must have one. I believe that whole country is now ripe to examine or re-examine the principles of orthodoxy, and see how far they agree with the teachings of the Holy Scriptures. The Platonic dogma of immortal-soulism with all its train of evils must give way to the teachings of the patriarchs and prophets, of Jesus and the apostles.

A few tracts were sent two years ago to Sister Scarborough, a pious and intelligent member of the Baptist church at Reynolds, whose parents and sister are members of our band in this county. She then subscribed for the Crisis, and now see what God has wrought! A whole town aroused! The Lord bless every man and woman who ever gave one cent to the tract fund!

I hope the Board will send to Mrs. L. W. Scarborough, Reynolds, Ga., one hundred copies of "Key to Truth." She ought to have Bro. S. Hall's last work, and Ives' and Constable's, to assist her and others in spreading the light in south-west Georgia.

HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Conference assembled at Hebron, N. Y., Jan. 23d, A. W. Sibley in chair, and H. K. Flagg Secretary pro tem.

There was a considerable attendance from abroad, including six ministers. Besides the churches represented by preachers, there were delegates from Hoosick—N. Robertson and S. Worthington; White Creek, W. M. White; Hampton, I. N. Howard; Hebron, E. Woodward, W. Howard. Ministers: Elders Sibley, Mosher, Flagg, Baker, Blanchard, Himes. W. L. Himes being invited to become a member of the Conference, was duly received.

The reports of preachers and delegates were of considerable interest. Sandy Hill had enjoyed a revival, with eight additions to the church. Sunday School also revived and prospering, with eighty-seven members.

Hoosick church—Was outriding a storm. Efforts to create a division on the Sabbath question had so far failed. Having enjoyed the liberty of the gospel, they could see no good to take upon themselves "a yoke of bondage." Were making spiritual progress, and arranging for regular preaching.

White Creek—A little company who had waited long for help, meanwhile keeping up their prayer meetings, seeking purity of heart. Brn. Baker and Blanchard's labors had been blessed in the conversion and reclamation of three souls.

Hampton—Had only a Sunday School. [When the scholars grow up, perhaps they will have a prayer meeting if not preaching.]

Hebron—Interest better than for four years past. Comparatively only few remain faithful; but the few are being strengthened. They make a point of sustaining a weekly meeting on Sunday, minister or no minister, and God blesses them in this social gathering.

The preachers had been active in their various fields, and seemed to be in the spirit of trying to do more and do it better than ever before.

Elds. Z. D. Baird (by letter) and A. P. Bump (personally) desired to withdraw from the Conference, being no longer in sympathy and full fellowship with the body. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That as Elds. Z. D. Baird and A. P. Bump appear from their own statements to be no longer in fellowship with this Conference, and are not now co-operating with us, that we comply with their request and drop their names from the list of members.

The office of Secretary becoming vacant by the resignation of A. P. Bump, W. L. Himes was the unanimous choice of the Conference to fill the vacancy until the next Annual Meeting.

Bro. Sibley presented the bill for printing the Constitution and By-laws of the Conference—300 copies. The deficiency of $1.80 was made up at once. Those wishing copies can obtain them by sending a one cent stamp with their P. O. address to A. W. Sibley, Sandy Hill, N. Y.

There was a deep interest exhibited upon the subject of obtaining stated preaching for all the churches in the Conference not now supplied. Some thoughts of practical value were elicited, and the Board were requested to reduce these suggestions to a system, to be presented for consideration hereafter. The usual vote of thanks to the hospitable church was adopted, and the Conference adjourned. W. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

Correspondence.

From L. C. Truell.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—In looking over the past year, I find the Lord has been very kind to me, and I can exclaim with the Psalmist, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." God has in a peculiar manner opened a door in this city for the gospel to be preached in its purity by our dear Bro. Halse, of Cambridgeport. He left his home on Saturday evenings to labor for, and with us during the past year. We have not seen the multitude in our place of worship, or sinners converted; but much of the prejudice, opposition, and scoffing has, by the help of the Lord, been overcome, and it seems there never was a time when blessings attended our efforts as now. Thanks to God's dear name, that he does commission some, even now, to go out and preach "glad tidings" to dying men.

Our services are held in the chapel used by the City Missionary in the morning, and the afternoon we have the use of it, through the kindness of the directors; in the evening we unite with them in social service, and truly the Lord is with us. Sunday evening the 18th one mother arose and desired the prayers of God's children. O it is blessed indeed when we can banish sectarianism and formality, and in unity of the spirit labor for the saving of precious ones.

I look with interest each week for the Crisis, as it brings cheering news, and spiritual strength and light to help me on the pilgrimage. Dear Brn. and Srs. of "like precious faith" who are looking for, and earnestly desiring speedy deliverance, do read and heed the words of Brn. Boutell and Owen in the Crisis of Jan. 14th. I do rejoice that the older watchmen on Zion's walls see the necessity and importance of encouraging young preachers, and I pray that strong churches and old pilgrims may be more alive to their duty in this matter, remembering that, "inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." [Christ.]

In all places where the doctrine is new, there must necessarily be an untiring effort on the part of the few who are willing to sacrifice friends, and the pride of this day for the truth.

Dear Brn. and Srs., believing as we do that the "Judge standeth at the door," shall we let personal feeling, or indifference prevent us from doing our every duty in this great cause? God forbid! If we believe it, live it; and not stand in the way of others. We read in God's Word, "He that is not with us is against us, and he that gathereth not with us scattereth abroad.

It is too true that in our day, and in many places, professed Adventists injure the cause more than the scoffer, or believers in other denominations. Not long since in conversation with an old pilgrim of '43, I remarked, that it behooved us, as a people, to be more united and earnest in teaching the immediate coming of our Lord. The reply was, "Had you been in the cause as long, and been disappointed as many times as I, you would be less zealous than now." Had I heard this when unsettled on the subject, and not out in the full light and liberty of the gospel as I now am, I should have been discouraged, if not shipwrecked. We ought to be careful how we speak to young preachers, and young converts whose eternal interests are involved.

My daily prayer is, that we who have so much light, may be more united in our efforts to spread the "good news," and labor to save the perishing.

Taunton, Mass., Jan. 22nd, 1874.

From Sr. J. L. Avery.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in the Lord:—I have been thinking of the position we hold as believers in the speedy coming of our blessed Lord and Master, and the consummation of all things earthly.

Are we living at this moment under no condemnation; as we would did we know it to be our last? Do we show to the world by our every-day life that principle of Christianity within that will stand in the great burning day? Do our acts show to the world that we remember—"Thou God seest me?" We should remember that God, who is over all, sees and knows our very thoughts; and can we feel that he is pleased with what we do? If so, we need not fear what man can do. O how blessed to know that our heavenly Father gives us his approving smile, and that we are his children. If we had a piece of work to do for a loved friend, would it not be our aim to please the friend for whom we were doing it? Most certainly it would. Then let us seek to please God, who will reward us as our work shall be; for he has promised, and his promises are "yea and amen in Christ Jesus."

How glad I am we have such a Father, and man is not our Judge; but we have a righteous Judge, one in whom we can trust our all with safety. Then "let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. We may have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. Let us be wholly given up to the Lord, willing he should make us just such beings as he can use to his glory. Let us humble ourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he will lift us up. We should be very careful that we do not exalt ourselves, for "he that exalteth himself shall be abased." Finally, let us be "living epistles, known and read of all men"; then we shall not be stumbling blocks in the way of sinners. Our faith will be known by our works. We shall not say we are looking for the Lord, and be preparing to live here many years.

I pray the Lord to wake us up to a sense of our duty, and search our hearts as with a lighted candle, and fill us with that love that passeth all understanding. Then we can take sinners by the hand and point them to Christ, and we shall be ready to meet our Lord and Master, and hear the "Well done."

Newfield, N. J.

From Bro. T. P. & Sr. M. Hubbard.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I feel it duty to write, in hope that these few words will be inserted in the Crisis, that the readers of the blessed messenger may know my whereabouts, and that I am still in the precious faith and looking for the soon coming of the blessed Lord to take his weary pilgrims home to that rest where the wicked will cease from troubling. My companion and myself are the only ones here that are called Adventists. We have the Crisis every week, and it is a great blessing, and we feel very thankful to hear from the dear friends. Their exhortations and words of comfort buoy up our saddened spirits. Go on, dear brethren, we are bound to meet you in that blessed Eden land.

Oregon Hill, Lycoming Co., Pa.

From Sr. J. Foster.

"I am the resurrection." When Jesus uttered these words to Martha, what a glorious declaration he made. No marvel that her sister Mary, who sat at his feet so much, should bathe them with tears of gratitude. O, dear ones, who long to see him face to face, do not get weary in waiting. Ye unregenerate, make a mighty rush into his arms, so long extended to receive you, that you may know, when we say he is "altogether lovely," that nothing near the one half is told. One looking for Jesus.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. CHARLES ECKHART writes from Upper Providence, Pa.:—"I am a member of the Baptist church. Have been a subscriber to the World's Crisis for about three years. There are quite a number in this neighborhood who believe in the second coming of the Lord, and are willing to be persecuted for believing so.

A few weeks ago, Eld. Geo. A. Brown, of Phila., and Eld. J. M. Stetler of the same place, held meetings here, with good success. Saints were made to rejoice, and several, who have served Satan and the world long enough, expressed a desire to serve the Lord. My wife was among the number. Thank the Lord! We expect to have meetings here as often as we can get some one to preach the word. We have established a weekly prayer-meeting, and to-day organized a Bible class. We feel encouraged, and trust the Lord will bless this means of bringing the truth before the people. We have a great deal of opposition; but find no serious trouble in answering all questions from the Bible. Your Bro. in the hope of eternal life."

BRO. O. GARLAND writes from Hampton, N. H.:—"Dear Brn. in Christ; as another year has rolled its round, and with it many of our near and dear friends have gone the way of all the earth; and knowing that we have no abiding place here, I am led to ask, What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? I have had about thirty years' walk toward the kingdom, and while looking over God's Word there are many promises that encourage me still along the journey. One is, 'He that overcometh shall inherit all things.' It is really comforting to know that if we overcome, all things are ours. Some, I think, try to claim many things here which the gospel does not allow; such as tobacco, the fumes of which fill and render impure the air, to the injury of the user, and the annoyance of those about him. Dear reader, whoever you may be, think of Him who lived our example. Did he practise such habits of life? Consider this, and follow his example."

BRO. J. T. ONGLEY writes:—"The good Lord is blessing his truth. Four weeks ago we organized a little church at South Creek, Pa., of twelve members. There is much opposition there, yet we were permitted to go into the water and plant in the likeness of the Master's death one soul that has lived a good many years in sin and folly. Others will go forward next time. We organized a church at Buffalo. The other day I received a letter from my wife stating that seven had put on Christ since the new year had come in, at home. Yet there is room. Let us be found without spot and blameless at his coming."

BRO. S. C. GOVE writes from Aurelius, N. Y.:—"Our Conference had a glorious effect. Some ten or twelve have since given their hearts to the Lord, and more are thoughtfully engaged in searching to know the truth. May the Lord give them grace to find Jesus precious, and willing to save all who will come unto him."

Obituaries

CLARKE. Fell asleep in the sunny South, at Galveston, Texas, Jan. 2nd, 1874, Melville Clarke, aged twenty-five years and ten months.

The deceased was a son of Bro. Nathaniel and Sr. Elizabeth Clarke, of Dayton, Me. He was a young man of promise, in whom many fond hopes were centered, whose moral character was unsurpassed, kind and respectful to all; but he found, like the young man that came to Christ, one thing he lacked, and as the fever preyed upon his physical system, he sought Christ in earnest prayer, and his last words were, "Into thy hands I commit my spirit," with a smile upon his countenance, which told that the commotion within had been succeeded by the peace which Jesus alone can give. His body was received by his friends, and buried in Maine Jan. 20th.

Words of comfort to the mourning friends were deduced from the Word of God by our beloved Bro. W. H. Mitchell, assisted by Elder Lane, of Biddeford. May the Lord sustain the dear afflicted parents in this hour of their sore bereavement, is our earnest prayer. J. HILL.

FELCH. Killed on the cars, Dec. 19th, 1873, Bro. Milan C. Felch, of Seabrook, N. H., aged twenty-two years.

Bro. Felch was converted some five years since, and was baptized by Bro. J. C. Smith, at Seabrook. His death was without a moment's warning, but he was ready. He was a faithful christian, beloved by all who knew him; and his sudden death has cast a gloom over the entire village. He loved his Bible, and was seen reading it just before the accident.

A father, mother, and brother are left to mourn. Brethren, pray for them. At the funeral a large congregation of sympathizing friends and neighbors listened with solemn interest to a sermon from Prov. 14: 32,—"The righteous hath hope in his death." J. W. WHITE.

EATON. In Concord, N. H., Jan. 1st, 1874, Sr. Mary Eaton, aged ninety-two years.

After long suffering, during which she never murmured, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. She leaves four children. Fifty-nine years ago she chose Christ for her friend, and ever after walked worthy of her profession. She went down to the grave leaning upon Jesus. The Mighty Conqueror will soon open the tomb, then mother will live again clothed with immortality and eternal life. We were comforted from the words of Holy Writ, by Brn. J. G. Hook and O. W. Kimball.

"Sleep, dearest mother, sleep,
Death shall not hold thee long;
And in the morning thou shalt rise,
And join the blood-washed throng."

JANE BEAN.

POWERS. In Avoca, N. Y., Jan. 11th, 1874, of consumption, Almira Powers, aged forty-three years.

Sr. Powers was a living exemplification of those graces and virtues that have ever adorned the christian character. In her death the church sustain the loss of a worthy member. The blessed hope of the soon coming of Christ to raise the unconscious dead, sustained her to the latest hour. She leaves a husband, one son, and other relatives to mourn her loss. A discourse was preached by the writer. E. C. COWLES.

MIX. In Bristol, Ct., Jan. 10th, 1874, Sr. Anna Mix, wife of Asahel Mix, aged seventy-nine years.

Sr. Mix was among those who expected to see their Lord in 1843; yet amid all her disappointments and trials she has been enabled to bear them with a remarkable degree of fortitude and patience. For the past few years she has been a sufferer, but has borne her sufferings without murmuring. She possessed a quiet and generous disposition, which won her many warm friends. She sleeps in Jesus. G. L. WHITE.

FALL. Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 20th, 1873, at his residence in Ossipee, N. H., Bro. Daniel P. Fall, aged fifty-three years.

He embraced Christ as his Savior about seven years ago. He was a cheerful christian, always pleasant, benevolent, and kind-hearted. The church will miss him greatly. May the Lord bless and give comfort to Sr. Fall and her children. M. S.

LORD. At Lapeer, Mich., Jan. 14th, 1874, Ida A., aged five years, only daughter of Bro. and Sr. Lord.

Sermon by the writer, from Jer. 31: 15, 16—God's comfort. JOHN H. PATON.

JOHNSON. In San Francisco, Oct. 3d, 1873, Lucy C., wife of Elihu Johnson.

God bless the bereaved husband. J. COUCH.

EASTMAN. In Cambridgeport, Mass., Jan. 14th, 1874, of consumption, Lucy H., only daughter of John and Sarah Eastman, aged thirty-three years.

TAYLOR. In Norridgewock, Jan. 8th, Jessie F. Taylor, daughter of John and Julia Taylor, aged seventeen years and ten months.

Married.

RIDLON—FROST. At Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 12th, 1874, by Eld. J. W. White, Mr. BENJAMIN F. RIDLON, of Saco, Me., and Miss LIZZIE FROST, of Biddeford, Me.

ORR—CILLEY. In Concord, N. H., Jan. 7th, 1874, by Elder John G. Hook, ROBBINS T. ORR and ROSANNA M. CILLEY, all of Concord.

BARRETT—BEAN. In Concord, N. H., Jan. 13th, by Eld. John G. Hook, ERNEST C. BARRETT and ETTA BEAN, all of Concord.

SAULPAUGH—BOTHWELL. In Manchester, N. H., Jan. 1st, 1874, by Elder E. A. Stockman, Mr. E. CURTIS SAULPAUGH, of Goffstown, and Miss LUCY E. BOTHWELL, of Manchester.

ANDERSON—SATTERLEE. In Cohocton, N. Y., Jan. 7th, 1874, by Eld. E. C. Cowles, Mr. DAVID E. ANDERSON of New York and Miss SAMANTHA F. SATTERLEE, of Cohocton, N. Y.

FOREIGN NEWS.

BERLIN, Jan. 14. The returns from all parts of the Empire show definitely that one hundred Ultramontanes and two hundred and thirty Ministerial Liberals have been elected to the Reichstag. The number of candidates elected by the other parties is respectively insignificant.

ROME, Jan. 21. Visconti Venosta has received from the Duke Decazes a dispatch warmly expressing the friendly feeling of France toward Italy.

LONDON, Jan. 15. A special dispatch from Rome to the Daily Telegraph, reports that Cardinal Antonelli is dangerously ill. His disease is gout in the stomach. The Pope has administered extreme unction.

Jan. 21. Private letters from the Gold Coast report that great sickness prevails among the troops of Sir Garnet Wolseley, proving fatal in many cases within a few hours after its attack.

Jan. 26. Intelligence has just been received here of the death of Dr. Livingstone in the interior of Africa. He died of dysentery while traveling from Lake Bembe to Unyanyembe. His body has been embalmed, and is being conveyed to England. It will come by the way of Zanzibar.

Jan. 29. A despatch from Zurich says that Marshal Von Gablenz of the Austrian army committed suicide to-day, by shooting himself with a pistol. Heavy losses on the Exchange drove him to the act.

SIR GEORGE BOWYER wrote to Earl Russell, remonstrating with him respecting his announced intention of presiding at a meeting to be held in London, to express sympathy with Bismarck's persecution of the Catholic church in Germany. The old Earl, who once thought himself an honest advocate of civil and religious liberty, replied:—

"PEMBROKE LODGE, Richmond Park,
December 4th, 1873.

"Dear Sir George Bowyer,—I am very sorry to differ from you in the step which I have taken of consenting to preside at a meeting at which it will be proposed to express our sympathy with the Emperor of Germany in the declaration he has made in his letter to the Pope.

"I conceive the time has come foreseen by Sir Robert Peel when the Roman Catholic Church disclaims equality and will be satisfied with nothing but ascendancy.

"To this ascendancy, openly asserted to extend to all baptized persons, and therefore including our Queen, the Prince of Wales, our Bishops and clergy, I refuse to submit. The autonomy of Ireland is asserted at Rome. I decline the Pope's temporal rule over Ireland."

"I remain, yours very truly, RUSSELL."

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Toronto, P. Q., Jan. 23. Reports to-day from various parts of Western Ontario show that the greatest freshets known for many years have visited the whole country. Bridges, dams, and in some instances houses were carried away. At London the suburbs were flooded higher than at any time for forty years.

The water in the Thames rose so rapidly that houses in the lowlands were flooded before the occupants were aroused. Many were rescued in boats with much difficulty. Some live stock and a vast quantity of movable property was swept away. Three bridges in the city were carried down the river.

San Francisco, Jan. 22. A telegram was received here to-day from Port Townsend, Washington Territory, announcing the total loss of the ship Panther, Capt. J. W. Balch, with all on board.

Columbia, S. C. Jan. 25. A locomotive on the Greenville Railroad exploded last night, sixty miles above Columbia, killing the engineer, John Lane, and mortally wounding the colored fireman.

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 27. Dr. William Smith was arrested last night, charged with poisoning several members of the family of James McDonald. Dr. Smith was McDonald's family physician for some years. A few years ago he was convicted of passing counterfeit money and sentenced to the penitentiary for five years, but was subsequently pardoned and resumed the practice of medicine. The case creates considerable excitement, and a number of sudden deaths which have occurred recently among his patients are now thought to have been the result of poisoning. A stomach was analyzed and arsenic found therein.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 24. Not far from half-past ten o'clock this forenoon, as Mr. Arnold Horton, a carpenter in the employ of the American Screw Company, was engaged in making repairs in the forging room, his jacket was caught in the shafting, whirling him around at the rate of sixty revolutions per minute. He was released as speedily as possible, but died in about twenty minutes. He was forty-five years old, and leaves a widow and two or three children.

In Brief.

— The Communists in New York are getting rampant. They are cutting rods for their own backs.

— Serious results from eating diseased pork are reported from Indiana.

— Indictments have been found against two or three of the sugar poisoners in New York.

— Thirteen murderers are in the New York Tombs at present awaiting trial.

— It is said that there are more than a hundred women studying law in the United States.

— Seventeen thousand people are living on charity in Chicago this winter.

—Fifteen couples have been divorced at the present term of the Supreme Judicial Court in Bangor.

— The hardships of the settlers of Northwestern Iowa continue. Four thousand persons are still suffering for want of food.

— About 18,000 persons are in State prisons of America. Seven-eighths of them committed the crimes for which they are locked up while under the influence of liquor.

— There are said to be 50,000 children in New York under the age of fifteen years who are employed at labor which deprives them of any educational advantages.

— Congressmen are henceforth to receive six thousand dollars, being one thousand over the old rate. The advance to Senators, to the President, and other officials amounts in all to over $1,000,000 a year.

— Sixteen persons were recently instantly killed by a railway collision between Glasgow and Edinburgh.

— A Mr. Canning, of Exeter, N. H., who has been sick a long time, has vomited up a large blood-sucker, and is now rapidly recovering.

— J. G. Falkiner, Cashier in an establishment in Montreal, has stolen upward of $40,000 and decamped.

CONFERENCE.—The Lord willing, there will be a Conference held at Melvin Village, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, March 4th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Brn. E. A. Stockman and A. Ross are expected to preach the Word. A general invitation is extended to all, to come over and help us. Come, Brn. and Srs., in the name of Israel's God. Come with the armor on, to labor for the salvation of the perishing. Rally once more to the "old battle ground" at Melvin. Sinner! the invitation is extended to you. Come and go with us! Come to Jesus! "Now is the accepted time. Behold now is the day of salvation." T. W. PIPER.

ELD. E. A. STOCKMAN will commence a series of meetings at Alton, N. H., Wednesday evening, Feb. 11th, to continue over the following Friday (afternoons and evenings). Should it please the Lord to send some one or more to labor with us, we will continue them over Sunday, the 15th. We cordially invite our brethren and sisters in other places to come and help us.

For the Church, J. M. JENNESS.

THE third Quarterly Meeting of the Eastern District of Wisconsin will be held with the church at Cassell Prairie, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 13th, 1874, and continue over Lord's day. We hope to see a large gathering of the saints at this meeting. Let us come with hearts full of the love of God. We expect there will be several of the preaching brethren present to assist in preaching the Word. E. P. GRAVES.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The Third Quarterly Meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference for the current year, will be held with the church at Floyd, commencing Feb. 19th, 1874, and holding over the Lord's day. A general gathering of ministers and members is expected. We hope that all will come in the unity of the spirit, praying that God may revive his work among us, that we may be prepared for the great day which is just before us. J. W. BURROUGHS, Sec.

WILL the preaching brethren who are passing through Newark, N. J., give us a call? Please drop a note previous, to prevent any conflict, either to Bro. J. Libby, 42 Rennington St., or to me, 126 Bank St. WM. SHEPHERD, Sec.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—From J. B. Tuller, for Sr. Mary I. Herron, $2.50; for L. B. Weaver, $2.50. GEO. T. ADAMS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—With many heartfelt thanks I acknowledge the following:—Mrs. J. B. Cook, $2.00; Mrs. Rachel Evans, $3.00; Nelson Tuttle, $1.00. MARY I. HERRON.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—A protracted meeting will be held at Chichester, Pine Ground, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 12th, and continue over Sunday, the 15th. Preaching by S. Varney, E. R. Perkins, and others. Brethren are invited to come with the armor on to work for the Lord. T. L. KNOWLES, Clerk of Church.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—A protracted meeting will be held in East Roxbury, in Bro. Edson's neighborhood, commencing evening, Feb. 3d, and continue as long as thought best. Brn. Brigham and H. B. Quimby will be with us to help in the work. ALLEN DAMON.

HELP.—Will some of the preaching brethren come to Danbury, Ct? If there was ever a time and place when and where God's truth ought to be preached, it is now, and here. Who will come? Correspond with A. D. Ballard, Danbury, Ct.

THOSE wishing to preach at Farmington, will confer a favor to the church worshiping there by publishing their appointments in the Crisis. We have often had two at a time.

N. H. BERRY, in behalf of the church.

HAVING studied my duty, in the light of the "blessed Word" and past providences, I feel to place myself in the channel of God's opportunities to be moved in any direction, by his revealed will, through his children. Any church that would like to have me visit them, will please address as soon as convenient, ELD. FRANKLIN DOUGLAS, 347 W. 36th St., New York City.

IF any of the friends desire my labors in Northern New York, they can address me at my residence: New London, Oneida Co., N. Y.

WM. MORRELL.

BRO. C. F. SWEET and myself have concluded to publish a small work on Primitive Christianity, or the Faith of the Fathers, showing the literal interpretation of the Scriptures. A work that we need in going into new fields, as we have done the past season. Although we have a good many good works and tracts upon our table, yet we have lacked, and often have been asked for something of this kind. Who will aid us by pledge, or sending the money for four or more copies? The work will cost about twenty or twenty-five cents each, and will be delivered by the middle of May, 1874. Address C. F. Sweet, Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y., or J. T. Ongley, Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pa.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

PERFECT THROUGH SUFFERING.

There is no heart, however free and lightsome,
But has its bitterness;
No earthly hopes, however bright and blithesome,
But ring of emptiness.

The world is full of suffering and sorrow,
Of anguish and despair;
Its brightest promises are of to-morrow,
Its mockeries everywhere.

Our weary hearts, with slow and sad pulsation,
Beat to the march of years;
Their days are given to toil without cessation,
Their gloomy night to tears.

But let us wait in patience and submission
The will of our great King—
Remembering this—all through our earthly mission,
Perfect through suffering.

Then cease, O foolish heart, cease thy repining;
The Master's hand above
Is only purifying and refining—
The Alchemist is Love.

These tears and thrills of woe—these great afflictions
Are but the chastening rod;
And they shall prove the heavenly benedictions,
The mercies of our God.

What seemeth now a dark and dreary vision
Unto our tear-dimmed eyes,
Shall burst in glory into scenes elysian,
A blooming paradise.

Then cease, O foolish heart, cease thy repining;
Hope! lift thy drooping wing;
The plan is one of God's all-wise designing—
Perfect through suffering.

—Wayside.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

W. KELLAWAY.

BAZAAR AT BRIXTON.

At a bazaar recently held in Brixton in a Baptist church, to raise funds to pay off the debt still remaining on the edifice, there was a "Fine Art Gallery," in which the following deceptions were accumulated: Bridal Scene—a horse's bridle; The Red Sea, with Plains beyond—a letter C in red, and carpenter's planes; Things to Adore—things to a door, as hinges, lock, etc.; The Flower of the Family—a bag of flour; Monuments of Greece—candles; A few Familiar Faces—photographs; Rejected Addresses—old envelopes; Past Healing—old shoes too bad to mend; Sweet Memories of Childhood—candies; View of the Rhine—parings of cheese; Watch on the Rhine—a watch on ditto; An Irishman's Delight—potatoes and pork; Our old Family Plate—old broken plates; View of the Needles—a few needles; A Bust—a small bust ornament; Wood-cuts—shavings; Relics of the Great—remnants of an old grate; The Traveler's Rest—a stool for the dupes to rest on; and last, The Return from the Oaks—coming away from the hoax. I possess the Programme of this "cheat"—yes, cheat; no matter though it was for God. But there can be no doubt as to God's feelings in the matter. And it is an awful daring that will raise money for God this wise.

MASS FOR A NEWSPAPER.

The following advertisement appeared recently in a contemporary,—the authority for this being The Christian Standard:—"THE TIMES.—A country priest will say mass once a week for the benefit of any one who will regularly send him the Times newspaper, second-hand, on the day of publication." The paper was doubtless the more valuable.

EXORCISM OF SPIRITS BY RITUALISTS.

The Rock brings to light a curious piece of news respecting spiritualism which I copy entire:—"Spiritualism, or rather 'Spiritism' (for such is its proper designation), is evidently spreading fast. In Saul's time these deeds were done in secret, but now we find, according to a report in the Morning Advertiser, two noble ladies allowing their names to be publicly placed on Mrs. Cora Tappan's committee for the encouragement of this fearful and blasphemous delusion. There are still some—though their number is becoming fewer every day—who regard the whole thing as merely an affair of clever conjuring; but, if so, they have only to come forward and do the things that Spiritists do, and in the same way, and there would be an end of Spiritism at once and forever. But, pending this oft-promised, yet long-delayed performance, we are compelled to look upon the spread of the abomination as a very grievous evil, for 'unclean spirits' cannot but defile a land. But, as if to add to the painful reflection which the prevalence of Spiritism evokes, there now comes intelligence from Oxford of an attempt to stay the plague, which is scarcely less regretable than the plague itself, for, according to the Echo, when certain inexplicable phenomena, which it is customary to refer to what are called ghosts, made their appearance in a house near Oxford, the curate in charge of the parish became so interested in the mystery, that he called some other clergymen to his assistance, who, after proceeding in cabs to the scene of action, . . . attempted to exorcise the ghost in true mediæval style."

We are not informed how far this piece of mediæval ritual succeeded in its object, but what we read in Scripture about "Satan casting out Satan" will be recalled to the recollection of many of our readers, by this silly attempt of Ritualism to try conclusions with Spiritualism.

SOLOMON'S SONGS 5: 3.

J. P. MARQUAND.

"I have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?"

In considering this subject it has been generally understood and admitted that the church, being in a carnal and lukewarm state, is unwilling to receive the overtures of Christ's love; but without controverting this view, we will look at it from another stand-point. The soul having put off the coat of the selfish or inferior condition, and having cleansed itself from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, has come into a nobler or superior condition, and is now unwilling to return back to its former or earthly state. This view of the text may seem far-fetched and unwarrantable, but for the sake of argument we will assume that it is true.

No one having had any religious experience but will admit that there is a great gulf (so to speak) between those who are in the carnal or earthly, and those who are in the heavenly or spiritual state. Paul was right when he said, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." We are made in the likeness of the earthly or natural man, and afterwards we put on the spiritual or heavenly; and in this latter condition we have no inclination to return to our first or inferior condition. How shall we put on our old coat of selfishness? or how shall we defile our feet any more with sin and uncleanness? Having bathed in the fountain of Life and Love, and felt its sweet streams gushing up within, through the infinite mercy of our God, how can we, who are dead to sin and folly, go back to the beggarly elements of this world, or the gratifications of the flesh? "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." Having drank in the words of Christ (which are Spirit and Life), we are elevated to fellowship with God and his Son through the operation of his eternal Spirit. This introduces us into a wide circle of friends, of whom the whole family in heaven and in earth are named." Having another disposition and character, we are transplanted into a new soil, to grow up into our Head, even Christ Jesus. We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty and sin, and though living in the world and in the flesh, we are not of it. Being washed, sanctified and redeemed, we joy and rejoice only in God our Maker. Our old appetites, passions and propensities may present themselves for our acceptance, but find no response in our bosoms; and we say with Joseph, How can I do this sin and be found guiltless? and with Jesus say, Get thee behind me, Satan; thou savorest not the things of heaven, but of earth.

The sanctified soul is certainly a new being, having passed through the new birth. In the regeneration all things have become new. The law, which is as a schoolmaster, has accomplished its work in training and preparing the individual for the higher condition called Christianity,—a likeness to Jesus Christ, the great Exemplar, into fellowship with his sufferings, and into the power of his resurrection. Having passed from death unto life, he now experiences a deep love for all the human family, and a sympathy with all the revealed purposes and plans of God the Father. Can such an individual stagger or fall into unbelief or be pleased with trifles? Nay. The future glory and kingdom of Christ, and the welfare of every creature under heaven, are the themes most deeply interesting.

Much is said in these days about the gospel (good news). Paul says it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; and many can testify that, when received into the heart, it has a saving and purifying tendency, even unto the uttermost. It brings deliverance to both soul and body. The law makes nothing perfect; but this gospel hope brings holiness and life.

Say, kind reader, how is it with you? Does sin grow more and more distasteful and heavy? then invoke divine aid and throw it off, and rise into the glorious liberty of the sons and daughters of God. Then you will come into a positive state (not under law but under grace), where you will be able to rejoice with joy unspeakable, and look forward to a glorious eternity. There is such a thing as the assurance of faith, and walking in the light even as he is in the light, and having no confidence in the flesh. May this be your experience, dear reader, is the prayer of every child of God.

THE WEDDING PARTY.

HENRY PRATT.

On one of those beautiful lakes overshadowed by mountains in Switzerland a bridal party set sail on a lovely summer day, to return toward evening for the marriage supper. There was joy at the old homestead that day, while everything that could make the occasion delightful was being arranged for their reception and the nuptial feast when they returned. Never did nature seem more lovely. The air, the water and sunshine mingled in loving harmony. But dark clouds appeared at length, and they were reminded that danger was in their path. Night was fast deepening upon the already fearfully darkening storm. The home scenes, too, are all changed now, and smiling faces are saddened with fear. With hasty step they repair to the shore. Neighbors flock around with kind hearts, ready to lend a helping hand if help be needed. The dark waters, as if maddened by the tempest, were rolling their huge waves against the only entrance to the little harbor on that rock-bound coast. Darkness was fast covering the face of those waters that were bearing that precious freight, or engulphing it in death. No boat appears. Every now and then imagination would paint something amid those white-capped waves that seemed like a boat, but it would as often disappear, leaving the angry billows to surge alone. The father's anxious eye surveyed the chances, and at once ordered a fire built as the only hope of rescue from the danger. So right at the entrance of that little port a fire was seen blazing heavenward, heightening if possible the fearful scene. Anxious eyes were peering out upon the dark waters in vain. The midnight hour came, and passed, and hope was well nigh sunk in bosoms more agitated than the rolling waves.

Two o'clock, and the cry arose, "The boat! the boat!" And sure enough there it was, a tiny speck on those dark waters, fearfully plunging, but evidently heading for port; sometimes high up on waves, and then out of sight. That terrible half hour of suspense was ended at last, and like an arrow the little craft shoots through the narrows. The danger is past, and the storm is forgotten in that endearing embrace. Tears of gladness have chased away the tears of sorrow, and soon around the festive board they tell their scenes of anguish. "Father," says that only daughter, "had it not been for that light, we all should have perished. We knew it was father's light, and it cheered our drooping spirits, and we kept our little craft headed toward it until we made the port."

Ah! thought I, Father's light saved them. Yes, and our heavenly Father "so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son." The Son says, "I am come a light into the world"; and when he left he says to his little church, "Ye are the light of the world." O the responsibility of the church! What if that anxious throng had placed a half dozen lights along that rugged coast? The fate of that company would have been certain. One light alone could give them unerring safety, and that the father furnished.

So, thought I, it is with us here. The world is out sporting upon the waters, the dark cloud is gathering, but they heed it not. "A little more of the pleasures of earth, and then we will return," say they. O fatal delay! Father has his little church right at the entrance of these perilous times, when men's hearts are failing them for fear, and has bid her sound the alarm, and lift up a standard. How beautifully the fire burned for a while. Then other fires or lights were kindled along the coast, and even the wedding party are confused. While one would beckon them here, and another there, the Father would say, "Throw by those lights; you are endangering the lives of those who are beginning to make the port. There must be but one light, or many are lost." Since the Father has given us the true light—the sure word of prophecy, to hold up for this generation, and has commanded us to take heed unto it, how great our responsibility if we do not keep this great head light in its place.

FATHER LAKE'S PLAIN TALK.

THE TEMPEST THAT TOSSES THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Bismarck's Love for Catholicism—Victor Emanuel's Promises and his Performances—Restrictive Laws in Germany and Switzerland—Our Common Schools.

The Rev. Henry S. Lake of St. Ann's Roman Catholic church, preached Thursday in St. James' church, James street, before the Catholic Union, a sermon which was certainly a strong utterance of the Ultramontane Catholic sentiment. It will perhaps be remembered that this young priest is a convert to the Church of Rome, and in former years was known in gay and fashionable circles of this city as Harry Lake, the only son of one of our millionaire merchants. After several years' residence in Louvain, where he was a student in the great University of that city, he has returned to New York full of the zeal of a convert and fired with the enthusiasm of a devotee who has been drinking inspiration from the fountain head of his religion. His manner as a pulpit orator is simple and unaffected. He is fluent but concise in his delivery—never repeating either words or ideas. His voice is sound, clear, and pleasant, and his enunciation distinct. He makes but few gestures, but they are expressive and rather graceful, and apparently unstudied. He took his text from the lesson of the day:

"And when he was entered into a ship his disciples followed him. And behold there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep. And his disciples came to him and awoke him, saying, Lord save us; we perish: And he said unto them: Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea and there was a great calm."

THE SERMON.

What a picture does this short gospel give us of the state of the Church at the present day, beset as she is by a storm of persecution? Our dear Lord seems to sleep, and has not yet stretched forth his arm to rebuke the waves and save the bark of the Church. Persecution is ever, in all ages, the fate of the Catholic Church. Never was there so terrible a persecution as that which in these latter days assails her. Sad am I, my brethren, on this Thanksgiving Day, to think there is no earthly hope. No hope in man for the Church. No hope save in Him who rebuked the winds and the waves on the sea of Galilee 1,800 years ago, and who will never permit his bark to perish. Yes, the Church is undergoing a fiercer persecution now than in the days of the early martyrs—not in one sense—not in seeming, but in reality and in the most dangerous form.

There is not a Catholic country now in the world. A few of the small States of Europe, such as Belgium, Holland, and the Austrian Tyrol, do not persecute the Church; but the same bad principle pervades them that has led to persecution in Prussia. This persecution is general throughout the world. I say nothing of France, because she is in a transition stage, and may at any time martyr her priests and bishops as she did two years ago, or she may recall her rightful monarch, or she may throw herself into the arms of a Commune. Look at the condition of Germany. When her armies marched into France two years ago, inspired by that spirit of universal charity that blooms only in the Catholic Church, their religieuse, their Sisters of Charity, and priests went forth with the German army, and wherever the German soldier fell, a priest was there to administer the last sacraments of religion, a religion to soothe his mortal pains. When was love so requited? When was charity so repaid? When was ever seen such ingratitude? Scarcely were those armies victorious, before a persecution began until then undreamed of. Nowhere in the broad realm of Prussia can a Jesuit to-day celebrate his mass. No, not even those who were decorated on the field of battle, or who have the blood of King William's family in their veins. Yet Bismarck loves the Catholic Church! He honors her charities and reveres her priests and bishops. As a proof of it look at his first works of love. He banishes all other religious orders as well as the Jesuits, because they are affiliated to the Jesuits. The Jesuits are no more affiliated to the other orders than every Catholic is with every other Catholic in his allegiance to the Church. Wisely did he go to work to take away those fearless guardians of the truth who are never afraid to rebuke error and falsehood, no matter where they find it.

Prince Bismarck goes to work to organize this religion which had existed 1,800 years. No bishop under this admirable organization can ordain a priest until that priest has studied three years in Bismarck's Infidel college.

No bishop can remove a bad priest, be he ever so bad, until Bismarck signs the decree. Such are the new laws of Germany. But our religion comes from God, and we cannot bow to any earthly power in defiance of duty. If Bismarck were a thousand times greater than Cæsar or Napoleon, never could a bishop or a priest submit to those laws. He would submit to martyrdom first.

Switzerland professes to be a free country—a republic—but she, too, engages in this war of persecution. Her laws now say no bishop can be appointed without the consent of the State—just the same as if the State of New York should say no bishop should be appointed without the consent of Gov. Dix. Next they would say no minister should be appointed by a bishop, but should be elected by the people. This is the law in Geneva, and the consequence is that ministers are elected to Catholic churches without the vote of a single Catholic. Geneva under these laws expels her bishop, Mermilod, famed all over the world for his eloquence, his virtue, and piety. But Geneva says he shall no longer stay within her limits. At the same time she gives refuge to the Communists of France, who had a few days before shot her bishops and priests. To-day no priest can perform the marriage ceremony or attend the dead without being subject to fine.

Neither can we say the head of the church is not persecuted. Persecution in Rome is worse than anywhere else. Victor Emanuel said that under his paternal government he would give such protection to the church as she had never had before. He promises like Bismarck, and he performs like Bismarck. Under his paternal rule the great libraries of Rome are destroyed. Vast collections of art are sold, the convents of Rome are closed, her religions are banished, the shrines of her saints are used for stabling Victor Emanuel's horses. The sanctuary is invaded, and sacrilegious wretches have mutilated in St. Peter's the matchless works of Michael Angelo and Bernini. Men who had drawn students from all parts of the world to Rome to listen to their learning must go—they were Jesuits, or related to Jesuits. Caricatures of the most indecent character are publicly displayed in the streets of Rome. Never were taxes so oppressive. If you break a pane of glass in Rome, you must pay a tax to have it replaced. Every pane of glass in the city is taxed. At the same time never was misery so great; never was suffering so little relieved.

And here, too, in America, persecution goes on the same as elsewhere. The devil takes as much part in this matter in America as elsewhere. I am an American, but I don't take much pride in that. We profess to love freedom. How have the American people protested against these laws of Bismarck and Victor Emanuel? What statesman has been brave enough to denounce their tyranny? Neither the Legislatures of the States nor Congress have uttered the first word of disapproval of their outrages of human rights, or rights of conscience. I know it will be said we cannot interfere, we are too far apart. Has not Congress with unseemly haste recognized every republic of Europe? Can we forget the demonstration when Victor Emanuel entered Rome? Can we forget that William Cullen Bryant even lent his great name to the manifestations of the popular joy over the victory of that great robber? In the hearts of Protestant Americans they approve and rejoice in everything that Bismarck does. They rejoice that he has issued the order for the imprisonment of the Bishop of Posen for two years. Who could fill the Academy of Music now to protest against the oppression of the robber Victor Emanuel? No Protestant could, I am sure.

It is through the education of our children that we are made to feel the fire of persecution in America. Catholics are forced by the State to send their children to infidel schools. This is a cunning persecution worthy of the invention of the devil. He knows it is of no use to try to take away the faith of the Irish people by open persecution. He has tried that device for several hundred years, and has failed. But now he insidiously attacks your innocent children. Is it not fearful to think that we are losing our young men at such a rate, that the Protestants boast that six millions have come over to their ranks in a few years? There is, I tell you, my brethren, danger most imminent. Fortunate shall we be if these children that we are sending to these infidel schools do not tear down the very sanctuaries you have built. We must obey the voice of our Vicar, or there is no telling what the consequences may be.

I should be false if I disguised one truth to you—that this is the great persecution of this day. Who knows but what we are approaching those last days when the light of the sanctuary shall be extinguished? Let us pray to God to increase our faith. We think we have loved you, O holy church! but never till Cæsar shackeled your limbs, struck your defenceless breast, and led you forth as a slave, did we know how much we loved you. The powers of darkness may robe you with the purple garb of scorn and crown you with thorns, may pierce your hands and your feet, but we will kiss those wounds. O holy church! you are our dear mother on this earth, and you will receive us into your glorious bosom for eternity!—N. Y. Weekly Sun.—Selected by G. W. Ruggles, Worcester.

TRUSTING FOR TO-MORROW.

I wind along life's hidden way,
Not knowing if 'tis night or day,
Or whether broad or narrow;
I only know the great 'I AM'
Is leading me; and blest and calm
I trust him for to-morrow.

I do not see the lurking foe
That winds about my pathway so,
To gall my cup with sorrow;
But I hold on; my Father's hand
Is safe to lead me through the land;—
I trust him for to-morrow.

I would not have the misty gray
Of life's great future cleared away;
The heart would shrink in horror
At heavy crosses,—storms to breast,
But I would learn in this unrest
To trust God for to-morrow.

Why should I doubt my Father's care?
He numbers every silken hair,
And feeds the tiny sparrow;
He weaves the lily's spotless dress,
And does he love his children less?
No; trust him for to-morrow.

Then I would only live to-day;
My Father sees life's winding way,—
Its sunshine and its sorrow;
He'll weave it in and out for good;
I would not know how if I could,
But trust him for to morrow.

'Tis but a little way at best;
Our weary feet will soon find rest
Beyond this world of sorrow;
We'll land upon the shores of light,
Where never more is known a night,
And there is no to-morrow.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Second Quarterly Conference was held, according to appointment, with the church at West Creek, Republic Co., Kansas, commencing Friday evening, Jan. 2nd. Preachers present; E. N. Bliss, Glen Elder, Mitchell Co.; N. J. Sade, Shockley, Mitchell Co.; and J. S. Thorpe, Lake Sibley, Cloud Co. Also a brother, A. Conklin, from Salem, Jewell Co. (who has been preaching in his locality with good success;) to whom the Conference granted license.

The meeting continued over Sunday, the 11th, with large and attentive audiences, and closed with unabated interest. After sermon every evening liberty was given for any questions that might be asked, by any one, in regard to the subject under consideration; but no questions were asked until after the meeting was dismissed Saturday evening, when a docter (who had been chosen by the members of the Baptist church four miles distant, to present their questions) came to Bro. Bliss with a list of passages which he considered conclusive proof of man's natural immortality, and of eternal torment. He was soon glad to give up his argument in regard to eternal torment, but thought he had incontrovertible proof of inherent immortality in such passages as Matt. 10: 28, Luke 23: 43, and 2 Cor. 5. But when he was shown that his own proof-texts were against him, and that inspiration positively declares that God only hath immortality, (1 Tim. 6: 16) and that eternal life is the gift of God (Rom. 6: 23) to those who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, he was glad enough to retire from the contest; not, however, without virtually denying the truth of inspiration, by saying that anything conceivable may be proved thereby.

The little band at West Creek are much encouraged by the result of the meeting, which has removed prejudice in a considerable degree. One young man will go forward in baptism shortly, and unite with them.

Dear friends of Jesus, and lovers of the truth, do not forget to pray for the struggling ones in this place. They have many discouragements, and much opposition, and they need to be remembered in our prayers to our Father.

Monday evening succeeding the meeting, a Wesleyan Methodist preached in opposition to the truth, but he is too well known to gain the confidence of the people, and his argument too weak to hurt the truth with people generally. His discourse was little more than a torrent of abuse against those "who (as he said) teach that when man's work is done, God is not able to reward him, but requires time to turn himself, and right up his affairs, before he can pay; keeping the saints waiting, perhaps, a million years for their reward. We hope the Lord will have mercy upon him, and open his eyes to the truth. J. S. THORPE, Sec.

West Creek, Jan. 14th, 1874.

SELF-CULTURE AND GOD'S.

Sometimes there is a way of self-culture attempted in the name of religion, which is not in any sense religious, having no element of faith in it, and expecting no uplifting help for gracious inspirations. The self-culture is what a man may do upon himself; mending its defects, correcting his mistakes, chastening his faults, tempering his passions, putting himself into the charities he has learned from Christ, perhaps, to admire, finishing himself in the graces that have won his approval or commanded his respect.

But the work is a far more hopeless one than he imagines, and is almost sure to result, even visibly, in more affectations of character than are likely to be much approved. Besides, it holds him to a continual self-contemplation which is selfish, and keeps him all the while filing and polishing on his nature by his will; which is, in fact, the most wearisome possible, or rather impossible, kind of self-attention. The old faults conquered, too, will be coming back on him just when he is conquering another set. And, turning round to fight them off, he will find the whole swarm loose upon him again; till, finally, getting worried, and vexed, and soured, and discouraged, he virtually, though perhaps not consciously, gives over his whole undertaking.

O, if he could have gone to Christ, or to God, in a true faith-culture, and let his faults fall off as blasted flowers fall off the trees, dislodged by the life principle in them, his beautiful thought of finishing a character would have been how easily put forward,—without a care, too, and in the sweetest liberty.

No man finishes a character, who does not go above himself, and take the culture of God's own Spirit; by that growing out of a character from within which can not be manipulated inwardly from without. If there be any good gift that cometh from above, and cannot be made below, it is character.—Dr. Bushnell.

A MAN who has a strong mind can bear to be insulted, can bear offences, because he is strong. The weak mind snaps and snarls at a little; the strong mind bears it like a rock, and it moveth not, though a thousand breakers dash upon it, and cast their pitiful malice in the spray upon its summit.

Gems.

— Those that do but superficially taste of divine knowledge, find little sweetness in it, and are apt to become indifferent for the want of a higher relish.

— In vain do they talk of happiness who never subdued an impulse in obedience to principle.

— Few things are necessary for the wants of this life, but it takes an infinite amount to satisfy the demands of opinion.

— Nothing can more strengthen our faith, than the view of the monuments of God's favor.

— If we delay till to-morrow what can be done to-day, we charge the morrow with a burden that belongs not to it.

— We are never out of our way, while we follow the calling of God. Never any man lost by his obedience to the Most High.

— God accepts men's hearty desires and the will instead of the deed, when they have not the power to fulfill it.

— As the wicked have no peace with God, so the godly have no peace with the wicked world; for if they prosper not, they are despised; if they prosper, they are envied.

— Our fellow-creatures can only judge what we are by what we do, but in the eyes of our Maker what we do is of no worth, except as it follows from what we are.

— He who sleeps in sin must look to wake in loss and weakness.

— When we seem most neglected and forlorn in ourselves, then is God most present, most vigilant.

— Many people bestow their cost, their labor, their blood, and receive punishment instead of thanks.

The path of sorrow, and that path alone,
Leads to the land where sorrow is unknown;
No traveler ever reached that blest abode,
Who found not thorns and briers in the road.

— Carnal minds are for the flesh-pots of Egypt, though bought with servitude; spiritual minds are for the presence of God, though procured with famine.

Home & Health.

A DESERVED COMPLIMENT.

Rarely has a more beautiful compliment been paid to a teacher than that given by a scholar in a school in Philadelphia.

The superintendent, approaching a large class of young girls without a teacher, remarked: "Your teacher is absent to-day?"

"Yes," replied one of the young girls; "and she must be sick, or she would be here."

"Oh, you know she lives now very far away; and then it is raining, too," said the superintendent.

"Yes" replied the loving young pleader; "but she has come stormier days than this, and walked all the way, too, when the horses were sick and no cars running. I know she is sick, or she would be here; teacher never stays away when she is able to come."

And she was right. The teacher was unable to leave her room.

Can every class speak so confidently of the cause of its teacher's absence?

Such a compliment as this from a scholar is truly golden. A class with such a teacher will be always full. We suspect there is need of a little sharpening of conscience in the case of many teachers in this matter of punctuality. Every teacher has a positive, binding engagement with his or her class, for every Sabbath hour or minute.—Ex.

A LESSON OF GRATITUDE.

A gentleman was once making inquiries in Russia about the method of catching bears in that country. He was told that to entrap them, a pit was dug several feet deep, and after covering it over with turf, leaves, etc., some food was placed on the top. The bear, if tempted by the bait, easily fell into the snare.

"But," he added, "if four or five happen to get in together, they all get out again."

"How is that?" asked the gentleman.

"They form a sort of ladder by stepping on each other's shoulders, and thus make their escape."

"But how does the bottom one get out?"

"Ah! these bears, though not possessing a mind and soul such as God has given us, yet can feel gratitude; and they won't forget the one who has been the chief means of procuring their liberty. Scampering off, they fetch the branch of a tree, which they let down to their poor brother, enabling him speedily to join them in the freedom in which they rejoice."

Sensible bears, we should say, are a great deal better than some people that we hear about, who never help anybody but themselves.—Wayside.

WHY JOHNNY LIKED THE MINISTER.

"Oh! wasn't that a good minister we had to-day?" said Johnny.

"Yes, very good. Which sermon did you like best?" said his teacher.

"O, I don't know. It wasn't the sermons altogether that I mean."

"What then?"

"Why, he prayed for Sunday schools and boys, so good; I never heard any one pray so much for boys. Most of them do not. That is why I liked him."

"Do you not like to be prayed for?"

"Why yes, of course I do."

"The minister prayed to-day that all the boys might be Christ's boys. Did you like that?"

"Yes, and I prayed as hard as I could that I might be. When we hear people praying for us, it makes us think it is about time to be praying for ourselves. If children don't like to say much about good things, I guess they all like to have the minister remember them. I always watch and see if they pray for young folks; if they don't I think they won't have much in the sermon either. Then of course I don't listen as well as I should if I thought there was something for me."

THE TEETH.

Probably there has never been an age in which the people were so much troubled with decay of the teeth as they are at the present. It is seldom that we meet with those, even in early life, who have a full set of sound teeth. It is evident that there is a cause for this premature decay, which all should seek to ascertain, and, if possible, remove.

It has been said that early decay of the teeth is a sign that the individual will be short-lived. In one sense, this is true; for the same causes that induce early decay of the teeth, will occasion premature wearing out of all the vital organs. This cause is a lack of constitutional vigor.

Many years ago, it was recommended that people chew tobacco for the purpose of preserving their teeth; and there were many who adopted the plan; yet their teeth were not benefited in the least. While it is true that in many cases the teeth of the tobacco-chewer were not appreciably injured, it is also true that every tobacco-user gradually lessens his vital powers and soon becomes incapacitated to beget healthy offspring.

There are thousands of children and youth to be met at the present time whose teeth are half decayed. This is because they have inherited feeble constitutions from their parents. The parents expended so much of their vitality in expelling the narcotic poison of tobacco, and alcoholic drinks, and the poisons contained in tea and coffee, that they could not impart vigorous constitutions to their children.—Health Reformer.

HOW TO MAKE A DYSPEPTIC.

Begin by feeding your little weanling child while you are in too much of a hurry to do it deliberately. Instead of crumbing its bread into small pieces and giving it one at a time with suitable intervals between, fill the spoon full as it can hold and stuff it into baby's mouth, then fill up again immediately and crowd in another mouthful as soon as the first is swallowed, and so on till more is refused. His grandmother will say after awhile, "It is perfectly natural for that child to eat fast, we can't break him of it. He is going to be a fast worker, I guess." Between meals, give the child pork-rinds to suck, ginger-snaps to nibble on, and let it creep under the fruit trees and amuse itself with eating windfall fruits, and all along through childhood and youth, let him hurry his meals and crowd his stomach with anything he can lay his hands on at any hour, and he will be prepared if he lives it through, to become a first-class dyspeptic when he settles into manhood.—Journal of Health.

A REMEDY.

As a portion of your paper is devoted to hygiene, I thought I would like to give a little of my experience, thinking some of your numerous readers might be benefitted. Some one has said that warmth, abstinence and repose are about the best physicians.

I was attacked the first of the winter with that distressing complaint, the piles, and was led to think that more clothing was needed. I procured quite a large piece of flannel and put it on three double between the hips; and I received so much benefit from it that I want everybody similarly afflictd to know it. In two or three days I was nearly cured. All the medicine I took was one and a half teaspoonsful of salts, with a very little ginger. A READER.

AFTER-DINNER NAPS.—Sleeping after dinner is a bad practice, and ten minutes before dinner is worth more than an hour after. It rests and refreshes, and prepares the system for vigorous digestion. If sleep be taken after dinner, it should be taken in the sitting posture, as the horizontal position is unfavorable to healthful digestion. Let those who need rest and sleep during the day, take it before dinner instead of after, and they will soon find that they will feel better, and that the digestion will be improved thereby.

The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE "LITTLE FLOCK'S" DESIRE.

GEO. E. LEE.

O Lord, thy "little flock" rejoice
To know that morn is nigh;
And still with one united voice,
"Lord Jesus, come," they cry.

Give them a faith that stands unmoved,
Let foes in vain assail;
That they at last may stand approved,
And rest within the veil.

Help us to labor day by day,
In harmony with thee;
And yield submissively our way
To thine, eternally.

We know that joy and peace is ours,
If we'd but steadfast prove;
O grant us now in plenteous showers,
The blessings of thy love!

Our lives, our talents, and our all
Are given up to thee;
Do thou accept the gift though small,
And grant our humble plea.

Keep us from sin and worldly pride,
And make us pure in heart;
Our love to thee we would not hide,
Nor e'er from thee depart.

Make known thy truth to us so dear,
Help us to understand;
O haste the grand Sabbatic year!
And save thy waiting band.

Then glory we'll, as now ascribe,
And praise our conq'ring King;
With all the saved of every tribe,
Triumphantly we'll sing.

GROWTH IN GRACE.

O. R. FASSETT.

Gradualism is the great law of nature; and growth in grace and in knowledge is subject to the same law of gradual development as in the natural world.

The acorn does not grow into a tree of giant dimensions in a day or year. It requires years to perfect its full growth. The seed sown in the soil of earth does not germinate, sprout and grow up, bear grain and mature into golden harvests, to be reaped and gathered into garners or sold in the markets, in a day, week, or month; but it must have the whole season for its full growth and maturity. A child upon its mother's breast does not become a man in an hour or year. Twenty, thirty, forty and fifty years, at least, are necessary for his full growth and development. The creation of the Eden pair, Adam and Eve, was by the fiat of the Almighty word and power made in full maturity, as was the whole creation at the beginning, without being subject to the process of nature's laws, since established. But now we have no such developments either in the physical or spiritual world. There are miracles of grace, it is true, in this world; but the great "mystery" of a momentary "change," "in the twinkling of an eye," into full grown perfection of immortality and sinlessness, is reserved for the period of "the last trump," and the "restitution," and the creation of "the new heavens and the new earth." Hence christians no where on earth, or in no period of time, have developed into full grown and perfect saints as God designs them to be, however favorable the circumstances or powerful the matchless work of grace, in one moment, or hour, or day, or year; nor by one single act of submission in giving all up to Jesus, and of entire consecration to God.

Growth in knowledge is subject to the like law of gradual development. A child does not become a fit school teacher, capable of teaching even a district school in the most illiterate town, by mastering the alphabet, or learning one or two lessons of reading, or attending a few terms of school. It requires years of diligent study and application to fit one for the office. And no schoolmaster or professor in any institution or college has mastered all the learning within his reach. If any think they have, so much the worse for them and the scholars they teach.

Our growth in divine knowledge has no limit; and even the ministry are required to "study to show" themselves "approved of God," workmen "that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. 2: 15. The Bible contains inexhaustible treasures of knowledge. And old truths become more plain and lucid by study, and new truths are ever unfolding to the critical, prayerful student of the Word, possessed of the Holy Spirit as his teacher.

If this be so in respect to the divine revelation contained in the Scriptures, how much more is it in respect to "the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," whose character, attributes, offices and works will be a part of the study of the endless ages.

Growth in grace and in divine knowledge must be a simultaneous advance. No christian can grow in knowledge of divine revelation without growth in grace, nor can he grow in grace without growing in divine knowledge. The two are inseparably wedded, and can never be divorced.

The plea so often put into our ears, "Let doctrine alone; seek more grace, and the higher life"; "Put away your doctrinal hobbies, and obtain sanctification"; "Never mind doctrine, but seek holiness," etc., is a false plea, calculated to deceive both the church and world. Beware of it! For one to "grow in grace" he must be possessed of the Holy Spirit. There can be no growth in grace without it. And one possessed of the Holy Spirit, even "the Spirit of truth," the "teacher" and "guide into all truth," will grow in knowledge; and growing in knowledge will be "sanctified through the truth." Generations and individuals may be traditioned into certain biblical doctrines and truths handed down from the fathers; but a personal sanctifying knowledge of God's Word, and the revelation of himself and of Jesus his Son, and growth therein, is given to those possessing God's Holy Spirit, and none others. "In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father; for so it seemeth good in thy sight. . . . No man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Luke 10: 22, 23; John 17: 3. "We speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory; which none of the princes of this world knew. . . . God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." "Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" 1 Cor. 1: 20-31; 2: 7-16. "The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken; lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them?" Jer. 8: 9. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because they have rejected knowledge, I also will reject them." Hosea 4: 6.

I have thus quoted several texts, of a few only in the Scriptures, which go to show that "grace" and "knowledge" of the Word of God are inseparable as growing qualities in christian progressive life. And this is important to understand, as we are so often exhorted in these days to "let doctrine alone, and grow in grace." "Stop arguing on doctrine, and get holiness and sanctification."

Apostolic counsel is far wiser: "The acknowledging of the truth, which is after godliness." "Hold fast the faithful Word." "Be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." "Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine." "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." "A man that is a heretic, after the first and second admonition reject." Paul. "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ [and these go together], hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed."—John.

"Head knowledge" is not to be despised, specially among a people who understand human nature, and who know that the "mind" and "heart" mean one and the same thing; that is, if after one is convinced of the truth, he embraces it and gives it the sanction, impulse and affection of his living being. Faithful men of old were first mentally persuaded, and then embraced the promises. Heb. 11: 13. For myself I give no countenance to an ignorant ministry or membership of our churches. Every one ought to sanctify the Lord God in their hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh them a reason of the hope that is in them with meekness and fear. If we are truly the Lord's, "God has not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." These alone will give boldness to the disciples of Jesus to do valiant and effectual battle for him; and they "overcome through the blood of the Lamb, and the testimony of Jesus."

Growth is the positive characteristic of real vital religion. The highest life (superlative degree) must be our aim; and that is, "a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Eph. 4: 13. Jesus Christ is the standard and model set before us. When we have grown to reach and fill this "measure" and "stature," then we meet the scriptural stand-point of perfection. Hence there is every chance for improvement while we are looking unto Jesus as "the mark." "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed unto the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3: 18.

Christianity is a leveling system to all human pride and boasting; with no aristocratic class of men who have hoarded up treasures of grace above their fellows. All are on a level together traveling on the "highway of holiness," since being justified by faith. And all, whatever attainments have been made in the divine life, "stand in the grace of God," so that all boasting and dictation are excluded forever. Rom. 3: 27-31. The important question then is, Are we growing in grace and in knowledge? It is not, Am I blest? Do I feel well? Am I given all up to Jesus? But it is this: "Am I growing?" Let us not evade this question, but keep right to it, "Am I growing?" Nor is the question, "Am I up to the standard I have set for a perfect christian?" or the standard any other man has set? or any set of men have fixed? nor that the christian fathers of other days have fixed? But this: Am I growing "in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ?" This is the evidence we have of real spiritual life, and that we are making progress toward the goal of perfection set before us in the Word of God. If we are not growing, then have we ceased to receive the vital sap from "the true Vine," and are either spiritually dying or dead. Sad, sad condition! whatever may have been the personal experience of the past.

Let none be discouraged because their growth is slow. Real permanent growth in nature is always slow. "Jonah's gourd" and "the seed in stony places" were quick and rapid in development, and as quickly perished. In grace, as in nature, we are to be careful that every inch of growth is real; that we are taking deep root in good soil down to the running water-springs of the "Fountain of living waters," so as to endure seasons of spiritual drouth; and upward toward the Sun of Righteousness, that when his full-orbed glory shall rise, scattering the darkness of the night and the mists of the advancing morning, we shall not wither at his presence, but be able to "abide the day of his coming."

DID CHRIST MAKE THE WORLD?

T. M. PREBLE.

NUMBER ONE.

The following passages are supposed to teach this theory: John 1: 1-4; Eph. 3: 9; Col. 1: 16; and Heb. 1: 2, 10. But when these texts are critically examined, they will be found to be entirely destitute of proof in this matter. In John 1: 1-4, there are two words which are of great importance to a right understanding of this question; and they demand our most careful attention. The words are these:—

1. The term "Word," in verse 1, from the Greek word logos, which "never means a word in the grammatical sense, as the mere name of a thing."

2. The term "him," in verses 3 and 4, from the Greek auton, or hauton, should not be taken as a personal pronoun in the masculine gender; but as the neuter pronoun "it."

Our criticism will begin with the term "Word," from logos. What, then, is the signification of the word logos? As there is no disagreement among authors in regard to its meaning, probably as full and clear a definition as can be found anywhere is given by Liddell and Scott, in their Greek Lexicon. From this Lexicon, then, we will take quite lengthy extracts, as the conclusions respecting logos—Christ, are so highly important. What, then, does logos signify? Liddell and Scott say:—

"Logos,—the word or outward form by which the inward thought is expressed and made known; also, the inward thought, or reason itself; so that logos comprehends both the Latin ratio and oratio.

"A. A saying, speaking; that which is said or spoken.

"I. A word, and in plural words; i. e., language, talk. (Afterwards follows this highly important statement):—

"Logos never means a word in the grammatical sense, as the mere name of a thing. (This will claim our attention again in the proper place.)

"II. A word; in a fuller sense, a sentence; Latin, oratio.

"2. A saying, statement; a divine revelation; an oracular response, a maxim, etc.

"III. Dialogue, conversation, discussion, etc.

"IV. A speaking or talking about a person or thing; a discourse about one; worth talking of, worth mention.

"V. A saying, report, tale, story; . . . applied to all stories, whether true or false, etc.

"IX. The thing spoken of, the subject of the logos, etc.

"B. The power of the mind, which is manifested in speech; reason; agreeable to reason, . . . contrary to reason, impossible, etc.

"II. Examination by the reason; reflection; opposed to thoughtlessness or rashness, etc.

"III. Relation, reference, proportion, analogy, in proportion to, etc.

"IV. A reasonable ground, an arrangement, a condition, etc."

In concluding their signification of logos, as applied to Christ in the N. T., Liddell and Scott say: "The Logos, God the Word, comprising both the above general significations of Word and Reason," etc. They also say that "Protagoras was called logos." But who was Protagoras? and when did he live? etc. He was "a Grecian sophist, born at Abdera, about the year B. C. 488; in his youth followed the calling of a porter; subsequently opened a school of philosophy at Athens, and acquired great reputation as well as riches; was banished on a charge of atheism, and perished by shipwreck at the age of 70." By this we see that Christ was not the first who was called logos.

John Pickering, in his Lexicon, says of logos:—"A word, discourse, oration, prose, etc.; a saying, speech, etc."

Donnegan: "Logos—reason, understanding, reflection; a word, saying, speech, talk, etc."

Edward Robinson's Lexicon says:—"III. With the art. ———, the Word, the Logos, only in the writings of John 1: 1; 1 John 1: 1; 5: 7; Rev. 13: 13. It here stands for the divine pre-existent nature ("nature"—mark it) of the Messiah, which 'became flesh and dwelt among us' as Jesus Christ, the God-man; John 1: 14."

Let us now attend to what Dr. A. Clarke says respecting this word logos, as found in John 1: 1. He says:—"This term should be left untranslated, for the very same reason why the names Jesus and Christ are left untranslated. The first I consider as proper an appellative of the Savior of the world as I do either of the two last. As it would be highly improper to say the Deliverer, the Anointed, instead of Jesus Christ, so I deem it improper to say, the Word, instead of the Logos. But as every appellative of the Savior of the world was descriptive of some excellence in his person, nature, or work, so the epithet Logos, which signifies a word spoken, speech, eloquence, doctrine, reason, or the faculty of reasoning, is very properly applied to Him who is the true light, which lighteth every man who cometh into the world (ver. 9); who is the Fountain of all wisdom; . . . . who is the great Source of revelation; who has declared God unto mankind, ... and who has fully made manifest the deep mysteries which lay hidden in the bosom of the invisible God from all eternity. John 1: 16."

So far we agree with Dr. Clarke. But when he says in the same connection,—"Therefore, Jesus, who was before all things, and who made all things, must necessarily be the Eternal God," and "no second to the Most High, but the Supreme Eternal Jehovah" (?), we cannot agree with him. It is really surprising that such statements could be made by the learned Dr. Clarke. For how can we take one of the "appellatives of the Savior of the world," which was only "descriptive of some excellence in his person, nature, or work," as the Dr. says, and, out of it, make "the Eternal God"! Or, how take the "epithet Logos, which signifies a word spoken, speech, eloquence, doctrine, reason, or the faculty of reasoning," etc., as Dr. Clarke says, and, out of it, make the very "Supreme Eternal Jehovah"!! The learned man overdid the thing for his theory. His position in regard to the meaning of the term logos is true; but his conclusions cannot be, according to his own premises. For if we reduce this to a syllogism, it will stand thus:—

1. An "appellative of," or something belonging to a being, cannot mean the same as the very being himself to whom it belongs.

2. Logos is an "appellative of," or something which belongs to, "the Savior of the world."

3. Therefore, logos does not literally signify "the Savior of the world."

This is in perfect harmony with Liddell and Scott, referred to above, where it is said: "Logos never means a word in the grammatical sense, as the mere name of a thing."

INTERCESSORY PRAYERS.

M. C. ALLEN.

Is it incumbent on all to pray? Is it every one's duty? The answer from Scripture is very plain and definite. Our Savior taught that "men ought always to pray," and his faithful apostle said, "I will therefore that men pray everywhere." In studying the word of God, we find the injunction to pray is not only taught by the sure and striking effects which follow the performance of the duty, nor by precept enjoined, and those conjoined, not only by the example of Christ, and the prophets, and apostles,—but it is a command, "pray without ceasing, in every thing give thanks." But should sinners pray? Yes,—at once,—now—("for it is the accepted time") renouncing all sin, and lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting; divesting themselves by God's help (for he has promised to bestow it on them who ask), of wrath, anger, malice, and every evil thought. They are commanded to cleanse their hearts by forsaking every sin, thus proving the act to be the prayer of faith. All are enjoined to offer such prayer, and by asking for the help of the Holy Spirit, agreeable to God's will, thus secure their salvation. It is made a solemn obligation.

God's children will be guided into all truth by obeying these commands, for they can no more live and grow without prayer, than can the physical life be sustained without daily bread. They are encouraged to pray, by the many and striking answers to prayer recorded both in the Old and New Testaments; and by the precious promises to those who ask in sincerity and truth.

In the Scriptures we are informed for what we should pray. We are allowed to pray for temporal blessings, always referring to God's good pleasure to bestow, or withhold, as is most condusive to his glory, and their eternal good. Spiritual blessings we are enjoined to ask, believing we shall receive, because the promise is sure, "Ask, and ye shall receive."

There is great encouragement held out to pray for our dear ones out of Christ, and all the impenitent and unbelieving. Our duty is to be faithful, to pray and not faint, cheered by the belief that God's attributes of love and mercy are almost boundless, and that he has styled himself a prayer hearing and prayer answering God.

But not for unbelievers only are we taught by the example of Christ and the apostles to offer fervent supplications, but for our brethren in the Lord—members of his body—the church. We have more examples on record of Christ and his disciples offering prayer for his followers, than any other class. Think of our Savior's prayer just before his great sacrifice, and Paul's many petitions recorded in his epistles for his co-workers, and recent converts from heathenism, in whose spiritual welfare his interest never flaggs. Their progress in holiness, their firmness to resist temptation, lies so near his heart, that we cannot fail to perceive how constant he was in prayer that they might grow in every christian grace, and advance in every thing that was lovely, and of good report. In this we learn that christians should pray for each other, as well as watch their growth and progress heavenward. They may thus be bright and shining lights in the darkness that surrounds them,—examples to others; their faith and hope will grow exceedingly, and if they hold out to the end, they will receive the waiting crown of life.

THE ADVENT.

The coming of our Lord in glory is held as an article of faith by all true christians. But there is a difference between holding it as a doctrine and as a hope. We may believe in it as a fact yet to be accomplished, and still not desire it. We know that God's promise respecting his Son's return to earth must be fulfilled, and we, nevertheless, may offer no prayer for its fulfillment, or even look upon it with indifference.

It will not be questioned that the attitude of the early church was one of constant waiting for Him who had ascended to God. His promise that he would come again was fresh in their minds, and they hoped to see it speedily fulfilled. But many centuries have passed, and great changes have come over the world and the church. There are multitudes who now say of the long-absent Christ, as the Jews said of Moses when he delayed to come down out of the Mount, "As for this man, we wot not what is become of him." It is not uncommon to hear all that is said in Scripture of his return so interpreted as to apply to some operation of the Holy Spirit, or providential acting of God. Perhaps we may say that to the majority of men the thought of the Lord's personal return is becoming more and more strange and unwelcome.

But there are those, and our words are meant only for them, who love the Lord's appearing. It is their hope and their prayer. As there were those "who looked for redemption in Jerusalem" and were "waiting for the consolation of Israel" when the Son of God came the first time into the world, so now are there many who are looking and waiting for his return. To such the season of Advent is a blessed season. They are glad to be quickened in their hope, and strengthened in their faith by the services of the church, and into her prayers they pour all the fullness of their hearts. They are never weary of saying, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." The desire to see the Lord is the natural impulse of christian love, and grows stronger the more ardent that love becomes. If the church, the bride of the Lamb, does not hasten the day of the marriage, it is because love has grown cold. Till that day comes, she should never rest, nor be silent. It is the burden of her petitions to see him, and to be made like him. Not till he comes can the saints be perfected and enter into glory. Even the blessed dead are not perfected, for they wait for their bodies. Not till he comes again to the earth can the power of death and hell be broken, and mortality be swallowed up of life, and the peace and order of heaven be seen.

It is most unhappy that the day of Christ is chiefly associated in many minds with thoughts of judgment and terror. It is true that he comes to judge the world, and to give to every man according to his works, but his day is pre-eminently the day of salvation. It is not the end of human history, but the opening of a new age, and an age of such blessedness and glory, as has not entered into the heart of man.

To prepare the Lord's way, two things are necessary on the part of the church, one external, the preaching of the Gospel to all nations, and one internal, the preparation of the saints. And the two should go on together, for they are most intimately connected, and must both be done in the power of the Holy Ghost. The Gospel is preached most effectually when the church is full of spiritual life. But where it has been preached, and the glad tidings have been sounded among all nations, the work of the church in this regard is done. To conquer the world and take possession of it for her Lord is not her commission nor her work; that, the Lord has reserved for himself, to be accomplished by acts of kingly power, and by the manifestation of his glory. To act as his herald and ambassador is the work of the church, but to reign on the earth is not hers till she sits as the glorified Queen with him on his throne.

The preparation of the saints to meet the Lord is found in their spiritual likeness to him, and this is effected by the Holy Spirit, through all the ordinances and ministries and means of grace which are in the church. This spiritual likeness is what he now seeks to perfect in every member of his body, as preparatory to our change into the image of his glory. Hence the necessity that our eyes be ever fastened upon him as he now is; not that we should substitute the imperfect for the perfect, and be satisfied with something that comes very far short of our true standing in him. The heavenly, the immortal, the incorruptible is set before us as our goal—likeness to the glorified Man—and with anything less than this we cannot be content; not a peaceful death, not the disembodied state, but the fullness of life, life that embraces body, soul, and spirit, and glorifies our whole humanity.

To keep the advent of her Lord continually before herself is thus a matter of vital interest to the church. Forgetting it, neglecting it, marks the absence of love, and is the sure symptom of the worldly mind. To be made ready for her Head, and to be presented unto him is the theme which the apostles urge in all their epistles, and it is the hope of this union to him which is the great incentive to holiness of life, and to the faithful performance of every duty. The church truly waiting for her Lord cannot but be a church full of all good works, diligent in the preaching of the gospel, zealous in the use of every means of grace, unworldly in spirit, peaceful amid all the agitations of the times, a holy witness to God's truthfulness when scoffers all around are crying, "Where is the promise of his coming?"—Prophetic Times.

COMPLETE IN CHRIST.

CARNAL CONSECRATION.

The "second consecration" is an inseparable obstacle in the estimation of some people against the sublime and blessed doctrine of entire sanctification as a definite, conscious blessing, attainable at any time by faith in Christ. Could they see that this second consecration is alike rational and Biblical, that there is a necessary demand and foundation for it in the moral nature of man, they would probably embrace the doctrine they now oppose. That this is its character, we propose to show; and as a preliminary condition, we must expound the first consecration.

We assume in the outset the great principle which is universally admitted and taught among us, that man and all rational beings have a wondrous and sublime faculty—a power of choice that is not necessitated by nature and circumstance. This is the condition of moral responsibility and worth.

All moral or spiritual good in any being is—directly or indirectly—the product of his will. Adam had no moral worth at his creation, but he acquired it—the moment he determined to use his powers in obedience to God; and he lost it, destroyed it, the moment he willed the contrary. All other beauty, goodness and worth in man or angel are, like the forms and instincts of brutes, only nature; and their moral worth belongs to God, whose will exclusively produced them.

It is necessarily by an act of will that a good creature becomes bad, or an unholy one becomes holy. This is intrinsically fundamental. The Scriptures everywhere assume this, and therefore always make religion in adults a matter of free personal choice. Men may not always be able to choose for good; for if they have sinned away the day of grace, or have grieved away forever the Holy Spirit, the effective power of a good choice is departed. But whenever men are saved, it is consequent on choice, and if any are lost, it is the same. "Choose ye this day whom you will serve." "Whosoever will, let him come." "Ye will not come unto me." "If thou wilt enter into life." "What wilt thou?" "Be it unto thee as thou wilt." This principle is as clear as it is essential. In order to salvation, a sinner must will to turn to God, to seek his mercy and grace and live to him.

But in order that a sinner may exercise a saving volition, there are many conditions to be fulfilled. Of these, it is necessary in this connection to mention only one—faith.

Without faith it is impossible to please God, because without this, it is impossible to will in accordance with the divine will. Faith is a condition of all finite volition. Without faith, we may desire, but not will. With the Psalmist, we have often wished that we had the wings of a dove, that we might fly away and be at rest. We have sometimes desired to fly with the speed of a a swallow to some sunny slope, which in the distance charmed the eye; or in an instant to plant ourselves for a brief period in the midst of some far distant circle of friends; or to take a tour in the air, with the ease and grace of an eagle, and enjoy a bird's-eye view of town and country. But we never willed these things, because of our want of faith. We can positively will only what we believe volition will effect. With an erroneous faith we may will, but the effect sought will not follow—as when we believe ourselves physically or morally stronger than we are, and are disappointed in the muscular effort or moral trial.

It is therefore from a moral necessity that the Scriptures make faith a condition of salvation. The sinner must believe in God's mercy before he can ask for it; and as this mercy is revealed only in Jesus Christ, he must believe that it is thus attainable before he can attempt to come unto God through him. It is therefore very evident that faith is a primary subjective condition of all moral action, because it is a universal condition of volition, which is always the only essential moral act.

Whenever a sinner who is seeking pardon retains or indulges any known sin or idol, and will not surrender it, he can never find mercy, because his will is set in opposition to God—choosing what God has forbidden. Hence we always tell such persons that they must abandon the cherished sin; that they must seek with all the heart, and surrender themselves entirely to God, else all their prayers are in vain. The same principle is enjoined as a condition of success on those who are seeking entire sanctification. Thus the same process appears to be followed at different times by different results.

This creates an apparent logical difficulty. If entire consecration was made at conversion, how can it remain to be done now? If it is necessary to pardon, how can we be pardoned now, if that is wanting? And if we are pardoned now, what further consecration is possible with which to secure entire sanctification?

The difficulty here is chiefly verbal; but it confuses the mind and begets a moral difficulty; and it often operates to prevent a proper analysis and comprehension of the two states, and the conditions of their attainment.

The consecration which takes place as a condition of pardon, and therefore before it, is never absolutely complete, because of the unspiritual condition of the subject. It is complete only relative to his knowledge and power at the time. No one can make a consecration which goes beyond the exercise of all his power in the use of all his knowledge. Should a new knowledge and power ever be attained, then this complete consecration undergoes a corresponding change.

This new knowledge and power are given us in regeneration. In the full and proper sense of the terms, the unregenerate man has no spiritual knowledge or power whatever, because he is not spiritual, but carnal. He is without spiritual power, because he is without Christ; and "without me ye can do nothing;" and because "the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." He is without spiritual knowledge, because "the carnal mind discerneth not the things of the Spirit, neither can he know them; they are foolishness unto him."

When the unregenerate soul comes to God, he necessarily comes as a carnal mind, with carnal views, feelings, and motives. All that he can see of the spiritual economy is the reign of law, that the law condemns him, that he is hence in danger, and that punishment and misery justly betide and await him. He comes to God to escape the just vengeance of the law by reconciliation with the lawgiver, and to obtain divine aid so to live as to secure his favor forever. His submission is therefore made to law, as it is unfolded to him in Jesus Christ. This is the essential fact and process. His consecration is essentially a carnal one, because it is the act of a soul which is yet carnal—spiritually blind and dead, and devoid of positive knowledge and power of a spiritual and holy nature. It is not, nor can be holiness as such that he seeks. He seeks deliverance from the sentence of the law, and the lashes of an accusing conscience; and if he has discovered that he lacks internal power to conform to the law, he seeks such a power that he may be able to fulfill the requirements of his conscience.

It is true that along with these promptings he feels the cheer and attraction of the divine love as seen in Christ; and he is informed by the Word of God, that along with pardon he must have a new heart, in order to be acceptable to God. But this he does not understand, any more than did Nicodemus. He may be more familiar with the word and doctrine than was that master in Israel, and he may thence imagine that he knows all about it; but he knows absolutely nothing of its inner and vital nature. His conceptions are all analogical and negative. How can they be otherwise, since he is spiritually blind and dead? Death cannot comprehend life. Life only can realize its own existence and nature. The unregenerate soul is also destitute of any real and intrinsic love of God and holiness; and all his apparent regard for them is regard for certain selfish, pleasurable effects which thence accrue to him. He is told that a new heart would give him this love, as well as be a proof of his title to heaven, and a foretaste of its happiness. From this alleged felicity and value of it, he prays for it; as a man born stone-blind desires to see, because, though he has no positive conception of what that is, he knows that it produces some effects which he can appreciate, such as safe, rapid locomotion, knowledge of distant things, together with pleasant sensations, of which he hears from those who can see, but of which he only comprehends that these are enjoyments which they have and he has not, and cannot have till he can see. This blind prayer God graciously designs to answer by giving more than the subject of it could possibly conceive—a new and holy nature along with remission of sins, for they always go together.

Regenerate as well as pardoned, he is now a new creature; old things have passed away; behold all things are become new. He views all things in a new light, and with different feelings and impressions. The Spirit of God has become wedded to his spirit and dwells with him, and is the life and soul of his inner man. He is now holy, though perhaps not exclusively so. He has a holy perception, a holy feeling and a holy will; and these constitute all the parts of a holy personality; and he now positively by possession, by experience and by action knows the nature of holiness and the character of God as holy; and his new nature loves that character above all things; and he no longer thinks of heaven as the place of circumstantial happiness, but as the abode of perfect and eternal holiness and love, which he sees and feels to be the primary condition of all rational happiness.

He turns this holy vision in upon himself. He clearly sees that every fibre of his being ought to be holy—moulded and controlled in accordance with the spirit and power of holiness; and with this conviction, spiritual desire and volition keep pace; and all three powers say, "Thine, wholly thine, I would be."

Perhaps he discovers in himself nothing contrary to this. Many do not for some time after their conversion. Whether they are then entirely sanctified may be difficult to determine. It surely is within the power of God to sanctify entirely when he regenerates. We would not presume on this point to "limit the holy one of Israel." Many considerations seem to favor this supposition. Many, if not all, in seeking religion, have conceived that its attainment would be perfect holiness; and when first converted, they expected never to sin again, or to be the subject of sinful feelings. As before said, we see nothing in Scripture to forbid such expectation, or that precludes its fulfilment. That the epistles describe the workings of sin in some Christians, does not prove it in all, nor that it is in all when they are converted.—Methodist Home Jour.

Is it wise for a man to have his whole heart fixed upon earthly treasures, which may be swept away in a day or an hour by the failure of the banks, when the bank of heaven is open and he is invited to open his account there where his treasure is safe forever?

CLASSIFICATION OF SCRIPTURE.

We are exhorted by Paul to study to show ourselves "approved unto God" by "rightly dividing the word of truth." This is one of the most important duties required of God's servants. It is essential to a proper understanding and correct application of the Scriptures.

To properly divide the word of truth is to correctly classify the passages. If we had four kinds of apples promiscuously thrown into a barrel, and we were required to divide them so that each kind could be used appropriately, according to its quality, we should understand that all the sweet apples were to be selected, and put in a parcel by themselves; and so of all the other kinds. So God has put all the passages of his revelation, relating to a great variety of subjects, promiscuously into the Scriptures. Those expressions of truth were designed by their Author to accomplish a great variety of results with different people under different circumstances, and at different times. Truth that was designed to apply to a generation under particular circumstances and events, should never be applied as present truth to people differently situated.

God has given to every generation, truth which specifically applies to it; so that his servants of that generation, if well "instructed," will be able to bring "out of his treasure, things new and old." "Things new," are truths never before taught as specifically applying to the present generation. This idea, God has shown to be emphatically important both by precept and example. The new truths must be prophetic truths then being fulfilled; as illustrated on Patmos by the opening of the seals, or the unfolding of truth by its fulfilment, when the four beasts, or churches, are invited "to come and see;"—see the new truth then manifested.

We have the most clear and positive example of this principle given by Christ and his apostles, who were continually teaching that the events then transpiring were the manifest fulfilment of the prophecies. This is made so emphatically important to the Christian Church, that it is said, "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy;" that is, to testify faithfully for Jesus we must have the spirit of prophecy. The same spirit which interested the prophets, Jesus, and the apostles to make predictions, will interest Christ's true servants to investigate those prophecies and teach their fulfilment. Failing to receive that spirit, and act upon that principle was the fatal step of the Jewish teachers, and all others who have failed at every great change in human events. And will not the principle apply when the greatest of all earthly changes shall approach? When the gospel and probationary time is about to end? It will, and the expression, "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" was made in connection with prophecy relating to the last judgment and the marriage of the Lamb. Then it is clearly the duty of Christ's servants at all times—and therefore at the present time—to endeavor to so classify inspired truth, as to show that that portion which has had, and is now having its fulfilment are the events predicted to transpire in the history of this generation.

To learn how to classify present truth, that is, truth which specifically applies at the present time, we must first learn the location of the present period in the serial prophecies, and collect the predictions relating to that period.

In the political department we have given four general divisions, reaching from Nebuchadnezzar's reign to Christ's. Babylon, Persia, Grecia and Rome. Then we must first learn in which division our generation comes. If in the Grecian, the selection must be from predictions of Grecian history. If in Roman, then the selections must be from those of Roman events. We find that our generation belongs to the Roman period, and to that part of it succeeding the great persecution, which is definitely given by inspiration as the last classification of Roman events. The next class is located in the judgment period, and extends into the kingdom of God. When this last division of truth belonging to Gentile governments is classified, so that the events of the period may be seen in their proper order as scripturally stated, we think that all may see that the very last of the last class are now being rapidly fulfilled. God furnishes his church with truth, just as a skillful physician does his patient with medicine; he gives different remedies at different stages of the disease, according to the circumstances of the invalid. Christ is the great physician of the church, and has anticipated every change and condition that she would experience on her journey to the kingdom, and has given just such truth as is needed for each generation and change, to the end. If a nurse should mistake the prescriptions, and give a tonic when a cathartic was needed, fatal results might follow. The servant of Christ occupies the place of the nurse, and is under the most solemn obligation to preach the Word just according to its true import, when and to whom as instructed.

Present truth is especially necessary for the people to whom it applies, because it relates to circumstances of the world, trying and dangerous, and therefore always requires the church to expose the snare, and take an advanced step to a safe position from coming danger.

Chronological truth must be classed according to the time of its application, so that the predictions relating to a given period may be collected, by which we may learn the nature of the circumstances to transpire at that time. Doctrinal truths should be so classed that all which treat upon the atonement may be viewed in their connection and relation to each other, so that each part of the subject may appear in harmony with all other parts, as revealed. And so of all other doctrinal subjects. It is very important to properly arrange dispensational truth, so that the passages which related to the Mosaic dispensation shall not be applied to the christian or future dispensation. Much confusion and false doctrine has evidently been produced by such an incorrect classification.

The grand point of interest to us is to be able to understand the passages which were designed to be applied to the present period of the world's history, by which the church may know the position she is required to occupy, connected with present circumstances. Some christian duties are always the same; while others change with changing events. There was but one short period when it was duty to proclaim the Messiah personally present. Before that, it was duty to teach that he would come and suffer. Since that period it has been duty to teach his second coming to be glorified. There can be but one period when it will be duty to preach that Christ's "second" "appearing" is "at hand." It was vitally important for the apostles to teach Christ's personal presence, and the divine authority upon which they predicated their arguments of that great truth were prophetic passages, collated and applied to events then transpiring as their fulfillment, which was the proof to them of Christ's first coming and presence. Just so the Scriptures teach that it will be the duty of the church at the period of Christ's second coming, to classify the passages designed to apply to that time, and present them as Christ and the apostles did, as being fulfilled before the eyes of the people; proving as clearly and positively the second coming, as they proved the first.

God condemned the Jews for rejecting those truths, and will he justify men now for rejecting truth just as sacred, and just as clearly being fulfilled and preached, with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven? If these principles and arguments are correct, then our most responsible duties are plain, and our condemnation for not faithfully performing them is also plain.

May the God of all grace give us skill and understanding to discharge those sacred duties with primitive faithfulness and apostolic devotion. J. C.

DECLINE OF PROTESTANTISM.

It is a sad fact, clearly seen and admitted by many careful observers, that Protestantism is on the decline as to its spiritual power and influence. It is become so conformed to the world, that the Lord has been compelled to withdraw his Spirit, leaving it in an almost lifeless condition. It has plenty of machinery, but lacks power to give it motion. While it proposed to convert the world, and laid plans to accomplish this object, it has become so conformed to worldly customs, fashions and spirit, that its vitality is nearly gone, leaving but a huge, lifeless skeleton. It seems to have forgotten that "whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." James 4: 4. It has sought honor and position, till it has nearly lost sight of the meek and lowly Jesus. Pride so fills its heart, that Christ finds in it but little room for his meek and gentle Spirit. It is time to protest against Protestantism, and rally around the standard of the cross, and cease to be "conformed to this world," if we would enjoy the smiles of our heavenly Father.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, when writing to the editor says:—

"I think, beyond a question, that there never has been an age or a nation, since the introduction of christianity to the world, when after it had been fairly introduced, there was so large a portion of the people living in utter disregard of its requirements as there is now in this country. In our rural districts, alas! what is the degree and quality of religion that generally prevails? Many of those who once reflected the habits and religious observances of the early days of New England are now for the most part desolate with the barrenness of Spiritualism, Universalism, or other forms of unbelief. Persons are now living who can recall the time when almost the whole population of New England looked for spiritual guidance to the ministrations of the 'orthodox Congregational churches.' A county paper shows the present condition of affairs in the once stronghold of Congregationalism. In a certain town a 'religious census' was taken. Only one-third of the inhabitants were found in the Puritan Orthodox Church. According to the Springfield Republican, it was ascertained by actual count that only one-fourth of the population of that city observed the Lord's day by an attendance upon public worship; and that the Roman Catholic church-going people were about one-third of all those attending church." THE LAST TWO ANGELS OF REV. 14.

The last two angels in this chapter, engaged in the wonderful preparatory scene of the final judgment, are represented thus:—the one having a sharp sickle, and the other having power over fire. Doubtless there will be heavenly messengers superintending this work, who may be invisible to mortals; but the external visible agencies will evidently be men and the means they employ. Christ explains the same scenes in the parable of the wheat and tares (Matt. 13), locating them at the same time—the closing of the Gospel. He gives them in the same order; first, the gathering, then the burning. He shows the scenes in their incipient stages and final consummation. The first will be the gathering of the tares in bundles, preparatory to the burning. The agencies in the two departments will be directly connected; for the angel having power over fire will cry to the one having the "Sickle, saying, thrust in thy sharp sickle and gather the clusters ("bundles") of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe."

These symbols and a description of these scenes were evidently taken from Joel, 3rd chap., where the reaping of grain, and the gathering of grapes are both used in illustration with the grapes in the "press," and the grain in the "valley of threshing," (see margin), representing the scene of the final destruction of the wicked. The prophet also shows that the great battle of the "Gentiles" will be fought at the same time, and all will be followed by the shaking of the heavens and the earth, after which "the mountains [of the new earth] shall drop down with new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk." He also shows that the first stages of these events will precede the day of the Lord as signs of its approach; for he says, "I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth; blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come." This passage is quoted by Christ (Luke 21: 11), and located after the great tribulation of the church, and before his coming. It is also quoted in Rev. 6: 12, and applied under the opening of the sixth seal, the last before the judgment, and just before the great day of his wrath and the moving of the mountains and islands.

The important question now arises, Have those invisible heavenly agents commenced their work? Are the wicked being gathered into bundles or combinations? This binding in bundles is evidently described by Isaiah, ch. 8: 9, and onward.—"Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries; gird yourselves [bind with bands], and ye shall be broken in pieces. . . Take counsel together, and it shall come to naught; speak the word, and it shall not stand; for God is with us." Again he says, "Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your dread."

He states the case clearly, that people of "far countries" will propose "a confederacy," and make great efforts to adhere, or consolidate, by girding (or binding, as Jesus has it), and that this is done by taking voluntary "counsel together," and not by legal enactments; and that these combinations will be made on account of their "fear"; for they will be "afraid" of coming trouble or oppression. He also shows that this confederacy will not continue so as to accomplish its design in defending them against anticipated evil; but their councils will fail, and God's people will teach by the Word that these associations will "came to naught." He also shows that when these things take place, the Lord's people "will look for him." ver. 17. In ver. 19, he tells us that God's people will be solicited to "seek unto them that have familiar spirits, . . . for the living to the dead"; that is, for the living to communicate with the dead. All these specified circumstances must be found connected with events which prove the fulfillment of these predictions.

We inquire, Are there events now taking place which agree with these expressions? Are people confederating themselves in different countries so as to produce a power to withstand those whom they "fear" will harm or oppress them? Yes. The whole world is confederating for protection. The nations are forming alliances because they "fear" invasion and subjugation. The rich are everywhere consolidating their wealth and combining their strength, so as to withstand opposing classes whom they fear will diminish their gains. The poor and laboring classes are confederating under different titles, but all to accomplish one great object, viz., to produce a power sufficient to withstand the governments and capitalists, who oppress and rob them of their wages.

In the ecclesiastical department the same mighty efforts are being made to combine and bring the entire power of each church to withstand the encroachments of opposing classes. The Roman church is straining every nerve to perfectly unite the vast multitudes of her communion under her infallible Head, so as to resist the classes who they fear will break their unity and destroy their power. The Protestant church also fear that the uprising of the Catholics, Spiritualists and infidels will intercept their onward march to the world's conversion; and they are combining in the Evangelical Alliance (significant name), and their various union movements, the object of which is to counteract the overflowing influences which seem to threaten the accomplishment of their cherished object.

The Greek church is also lengthening her cords and strengthening her stakes to make her faith universal, and her State triumphant over all. The Mohammedans are in the convulsions of death, and they are making terrible efforts to continue their existence in the surging waves a little longer. The Spiritualists are rising like a spectre, reaching their long satanic arms to gather into a grand antichristian unity all the malcontents of satanic empire, and feel that this is the time to unfurl their banner to the four winds.

This is emphatically an age of alliances. This generation is drifting into confederations. All classes are girding for unity, from the great empires to the rings and cliques in financial corners. It must be patent to all that these bundles, or combined classes, are every day becoming more antagonistic,—more desperate in purpose to immediately triumph or perish in the attempt. All feel impressed that we have come to a transition period in the world's history, and that a radical change in human associations must soon take place. We believe that these movements are in harmony with the predictions, and is the accomplishment of the first stage of the gathering angel's work. J. C.

TRIP ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

Friday morning, Jan. 23d. This is a nice morning, and we can say, "All is well." We still feel as fresh as when we first started. We arrived at Ogden at 6.15, Laramie time, last evening, stopped an hour, and left at 5.50 San Francisco time. At Ogden a railroad branches off to Salt Lake City, a distance of thirty-eight miles to the south, where is found the centre of Mormondom, as taught by Pres. Brigham Young. Ogden is also a Mormon city. Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, was born in Sharon, Vt., Dec. 23d, 1805. In early life he was a subject of religious impressions. September 21st, 1823, he claims to have had a vision, in which he received instruction concerning the plates on which the Book of Mormon was inscribed. The next day he found the plates inclosed in a box, covered with stone, where they had been deposited for 1400 years. Soon after the professed discovery of the plates, Mr. Smith proposed to have a translation of them by an angel, and thus originated the Book of Mormon, and was placed in the hands of the printers. April 6th, 1830, a Mormon church was formed, composed of six members. The Mormons are said to number at present some two hundred thousand.

In July 1831, the few Mormons settled in Independence, Jackson Co., Missouri, and published a paper called the Evening and Morning Star. Trouble soon broke out between them and the settlers, which resulted in the destruction of the Mormon property, their leaders were tarred and feathered, and the whole company was obliged to leave. They settled in various other places, with but little better success, till finally their leader, Joseph Smith and his brother, were shot in Carthage, Ill. In 1846 they were driven out of Illinois, and soon started for the unknown west, led on by Brigham Young. After enduring many hardships and sufferings, they finally settled at Salt Lake. Since then, they have built over one hundred towns and cities, and have sent their missionaries to all parts of the world where toleration is granted. Their numbers are largely made up of men women and children from Europe, many of whom have been most sadly disappointed when they arrived at Salt Lake, finding they had been greatly deceived by the Mormon missionaries as to the true state of things in the Salt Lake settlement. They would go back to their native land if they could; but their exhausted means compel them to remain where they are for the present. It is quite probable, that polygamy will close up with the death of Brigham Young, who introduced the system among the Mormons, claiming it to be a divine institution.

A portion of the Mormons have seceded, and organized another church, called the "New Zion movement." It is said they are increasing rapidly. They publish the Morning Tribune. They differ little from the Spiritualists. The whole system is evil dently waning. Its foundation is in error, and its end must be in ruin. As a people they are sincere, and believe Mormonism to be the true religion. Those who have been among them cannot doubt this any more than they can the sincerity of the Catholics or Mohammedans. When we look over the results of Joseph Smith's labors, we may well exclaim, "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

Leaving Ogden, we began again to climb the mountains on the Central Pacific road. There is a greater variety of scenery on this than the Union Pacific. The business is executed with much energy and care. The cars are smaller, but neat and convenient. The night passed as quietly as usual, and this Friday morning opens very pleasantly, among the wilds of the "Humboldt Division" of the route. We entered it at 4.10 A. M. and expect to leave it for the "Truckee Division" at 4.25 P. M. The Humboldt Valley has the Humboldt mountains on either side, and a river of the same name passing through it. Thousands of head of cattle and horses are kept through the winter in this division, feeding on grass and sage brush. The snow is about two inches deep. These cattle are mostly from Texas. One would expect them to starve, if experience had not demonstrated that they pass through the winter here successfully.

At the different stations in the Humboldt Valley may be seen specimens of the Shoshone Indians, dressed in their wild costume, with painted faces, dishevelled hair, exhibiting the extreme of neglect, and presenting the wildest possible contrast between themselves and the fashionable belles in the upper-tendom society. What a wide gulf exists between the lowest and highest grades of the human race! between these Indian wigwams in the western wilds, and the palaces of the rich in the great cities, their beastly habits and ignorance, as contrasted with the refinement and intelligence of the first class of men and women in civilized society. Some of the squaws had on garments rudely made of rabbit skins, apparently tacked upon an old bag, or blanket. Their feet are covered with rags tied around them. It is doubtful whether any of their garments are ever washed. The women are generally bare-headed, and often seen with their pappooses, bound up like little mummies, and strapped upon their backs, apparently as quiet and contented as the son of a king in his palace cradle. The men do not appear to pay any attention to the squaws, or their children. They wear hats, and present a more tidy appearance than the women. They paint their faces in scarlet streaks, or else one half, and leave the other half unpainted, according to their idea of beauty. Some of them have new scarlet blankets wrapped about them, and when thus arrayed, with faces newly painted, their attitude and walk seems to say, We are the original and rightful owners of this soil, and the others are only usurpers.

In passing through the Humboldt Valley, we noticed the steam rising from several hot springs, in various localities, indicating connection with the internal fires of the earth.

Among our passengers from Ogden was an intelligent German, who has seen much of the world, and is a man of strong energy of character. He has been spending the past year at Salt Lake City, where he left his wife, and was on his way to Brattle Mountain, three hundred and fifty-nine miles west of Ogden, where he purposed to enter into business. The people of Elko and Brattle Mountain are noted for their success in decoying passengers into gambling operations in their saloons, while the trains stop for meals at the hotel; and often these professional gamblers and pickpockets ride on the cars between the two places to trap them at Brattle Mountain or Elko. The superintendent of the Central Pacific R. R., has put a warning notice in the cars for the benefit of the passengers, and the deputy sheriff came in and gave a caution, yet after all this, it is quite common for the passengers to lose their money at these places. The day we came through, our German traveling companion lost some fourteen hundred dollars—all he had—while the train was stopping for dinner. He mourned and wept bitterly over his misfortune. A very gentlemanly looking man came on board before reaching Brattle Mountain, and by his cunning art, won the confidence of the German, so that he went with him to the "champaign saloon," where he lost his money. There is a very wicked class of men in nearly all these stations along the road. When they come into the cars to seek their victims, they usually inquire where you are going, where you came from, etc., and then manifest much interest in your welfare, offering small favors and appearing as familiar as an old friend. After passing through the western wilds, one cannot but be convinced that there is no dawning of a temporal millennium in that region.

Saturday morning, Jan. 24th. We are now in the "Truckee Division" of the route, on the Sierra Nevada mountains. This is the snow regions, and affords some of the finest winter scenery in the world. Till we entered this section we did not find snow sufficient to make good sleighing, at any point west of Chicago, excepting a few miles on the Rocky mountains. But at Summit, on the Sierra Nevada mountain, where the train stopped for breakfast, the snow was said to be fifteen feet deep. It is sometimes twenty feet, on a level. The road for many miles in this section is like a grove cut in the side of the mountain, several hundred feet from the base, and is covered with snow sheds, at a cost of some sixteen thousand dollars per mile. If it were not for these sheds, the road would be impassable in winter. The scenery is magnificent, but is mostly hid by the snow sheds till we get some distance down the mountain, where we pass some of the grandest on the whole route, especially the Great American Canon [pronounced canyon.] We never tire gazing at these vast deeps, extending down some two thousand five hundred feet below the railroad track, while the train often runs within ten to four feet of the brink of these yawning chasms. Those who have not seen them might form some idea of their extent by imagining the earth to be irregularly opened by an earthquake from forty to eighty rods wide, and some two thousand five hundred feet deep, having a river running at the bottom, and the sides of the chasm covered with pine or cedar trees. As we have given a description of these things during other trips to California, we will leave the reader to his own reflections. It is truly a wonderful country, and should be seen to be appreciated.

We stated that at breakfast time, when at Summit Station, the snow was said to be fifteen feet deep on a level, but at the time of writing—five hours later—we are in the "Summer Land" where there is no snow. In about two hours, we expect to be in Sacramento, and at eight in the evening in San Francisco. We are now passing through a portion of the early mining region, when the gold was obtained by hand washing. The miners' huts and tents have given way to small houses, many of which look rather pleasant, having a garden spot, grape vines, and fruit trees. As a general rule, the early miners are poorer than when they first came to California. They obtained money easily, spent it freely, and are now destitute, closing life in a miserable manner.

The country about us, with its green grass and shrubbery, presents a charming, welcoming aspect, that is calculated to produce a home-like feeling, that is specially pleasing after a winter trip of some three thousand five hundred miles. It seems like entering another world of a more congenial nature than the one in which we now live. One might well imagine he was getting near the original garden of Eden, before sin entered, and the curse followed. But alas! where blessings most abound, it seems that sin and misery much more abound. We must wait till Jesus comes before it will be any better. The blight of sin is all around, where human feet have trod. Satan has omitted to visit no spot, and the fairest has received his most special attention. This is specially true of the Pacific coast, which but for evil might have been a paradise. This 24th day of Jan. it presents the appearance of the middle of April in New England. Gardens are being planted, and fresh vegetables are brought to market every week in the year. It is quite like the land of Israel, in its palmy days, when the Lord smiled upon his people, and favored them with earth's richest blessings. But now in California, as then in Palestine, the inhabitants have forgotten their Creator, their Savior, and have turned away from the living God to gratify their noble faculties in that which is impure, unholy, as did those who lived in Sodom, and before the flood. More anon. M. G.

WISER THAN PETER OR PAUL.

"Oliver Wendell Holmes says he has no doubt that even now David experiences a twinge of pleasure when he thinks of the twenty-third psalm. Quite likely, if he had composed it. He has been in heaven these three thousand years, and we do not believe he could write as good a song to-day."—Interior.

Dr. Holmes did not make so much of a mistake in ascribing the authorship of that psalm to David, as the Interior did in placing him in heaven during a period of one thousand years, at least; for Peter and Paul said, in their time, he had gone elsewhere. Holmes has the apology of the Bible heading for David's authorship, but the Interior betrays an utter ignorance or disregard of Peter's statement in Acts 2: 34. But the Interior has the advantage on the point of present ability to do or think, for "the dead know not anything." Both would be benefited in "the school of the prophets."

Edinboro, Pa. G. W. STETSON.

HOLINESS.

J. W. BURROUGHS.

As we draw nearer to the great day in which all things will be consummated, we see the necessity of exhorting the church to watchfulness and purity of life. There is evidently a great lack in holiness, without which no man can see the Lord in peace. We are in the Laodicean state of the church, when many professed christians only "have a name to live." They are "neither cold nor hot"; yet there are a few bright and shining lights, a few dear ones that fully realize we must have something more than a dry theological understanding of the Scriptures in order to be saved. We must have a present salvation—a holy heart.

CHRIST AND BELIAL.

There is little doubt that the patronage of christians, so-called, absolutely maintains and keeps in existence the most of the theatres, concerts, operas, lotteries, dances, etc., that are perpetuated from year to year, for the demoralization of our common society. It is almost certain that the various places of carnal amusement and worldly pleasure that are open in New York city all the year round, or in any other principal city of our country, derive a larger revenue from christian patronage, than all the religious missions in the world derive from the same source in the same length of time.

It is venturing hardly anything to say, that so entirely dependent upon christian support are the manifold public exhibitions of a corrupting and depraving character, that but for the support which they receive from the churches, many of them could not exist.

American christians are spending prodigious amounts of money to maintain museums and missions, operas and orphans, theatres and theology, churches and circuses, the cause of Christ and the cause of the devil. The query is, how acceptable are gifts for the Lord's treasury, from those who give to the devil's treasury in ten times larger proportion, for the support of demoralizing entertainments whose public influence is always and only subversive of our social virtue. Is the saying of the Bible, that "the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination unto the Lord," improperly applied when pointed toward those who, while professing to be friendly to Christ's cause, are giving constant aid and comfort to the cause of the devil? And what of the question of our christian responsibility for the salvation from ruin of the people of our country, when our christian influence is so exerted, and our christian example so set forth as to encourage others to walk—not in the way that leads to life, but in the broader and thronged way that leads to damnation! Do we not need a stricter, a purer, a more Christ-like religion?—Banner of Holiness.

WHAT PAGANISM DOES FOR WOMEN.—At the anniversary of the Woman's Union Missionary Society of America, recently held, Bishop Cummins, in his address, estimated that there were three hundred million heathen women in the world. If these women were allowed to pass by a given point at the rate of sixty a minute it would take the procession ten years to pass by. Eight hundred women die every hour who have never heard the word of God.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

Correspondence

From O. A. Ladd.

To the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, Greeting:—Another year with all its trials, cares and anxieties is numbered with the things that are past. Death has made its inroads among us, and many of our loved ones have fallen; but thanks be to God, we mourn not as those that have no hope. They have fought their last battle; they have faithfully endured their last trial, and are now at rest, sleeping sweetly in Jesus, awaiting a better resurrection. They are safe. The unhallowed influences of earth have no power over them. May God keep us within the cleft of the Rock, for outside of that we are not safe one moment.

I never realized our position as I have of late. I have no brethren of like precious faith to associate with, and help hold up my hands whilst the hosts of the enemy are arrayed against me; there is not an Aaron nor a Hur to encourage and strengthen us in the severest conflicts; but God is able to keep us, if we do his will, even down to the end. How few there are who realize their situation in its true light; standing upon old time's last crumbling sands, while the devil is doing up his last work in rallying his forces in opposition to the truth that God's servants are proclaiming to a perishing world. We expect the conflict of God's people will be severe, but the time will be short and their victory sure. Every day brings something new to draw the minds of the people away from God.

We often ask the question, What next? Since we commenced this letter a news-boy threw in a handbill with the following heading: "The Sensation of 1874 Coming! Something entirely New! Spiritualists will find their favorite doctrine 'de facto' verified. Students of ancient history may see the miracles of the ancient times surpassed. Human beings are transformed into all sorts of impossible shapes. The solid form of the flesh melts and changes into vapor. And by an ingenious mechanical contrivance people are made to fly, hang on the ceiling, and do nearly every impossible feat contrary to the laws of nature. Marvelous—Select—Scientific—Wonderful!"

Without doubt hundreds of those professing to be followers of Christ will be ready to spend their money for the privilege of gazing upon these satanic scenes of deception. It is astonishing to see people professing godliness frequenting the haunts of Satan. Even churches that are said to be dedicated to God, for his worship, are polluted by being made use of for merchandise and various kinds of theatrical performances Well might Christ say to-day, My Father's house is a house of prayer, but ye have made it a house of merchandise. With this blending of the church and the world God is not well pleased; and he has said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man. Floods of sin call for floods of destruction; and it is to be feared that many have a religion that is but a millstone around their necks to destroy them. In this place we have Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Catholics, and Universalists; and they all seem well united in assisting each other in the various schemes for raising money for church purposes. Sociables, oyster suppers, and various theatrical performances, have been the great theme through the winter. The love of fashion and worldly enjoyment is the leading spirit of the day. Our hearts cry out, O God! when shall these scenes of mockery come to an end? Yet there are earthly ties that bind friends and kindred, which cause us to cry, Stay, thou insulted Spirit! stay!

Well, here comes another handbill:—"We are here! Not here! And Every Where! In the course of this speciality the audience will be kept in a continual state of mirth, wonder, and surprise, by the inexpressible manner in which the most wonderful things are done. Ladies change in an instant to gentlemen. Heads floating in the air without bodies, and bodies without heads. Ladies dancing, surrounded by flames of liquid fire. Ghosts and goblins appearing and disappearing in all parts of the room, and finally concluding with the splendid fairy transformation scene, Ghost Carousal!" These scenes of deception are for the amusement of our city on the evenings of Jan. 30th and 31st. It seems to me that the time has come when God's Spirit has been so abused, by rejecting the truth, that he has sent among the people these strong delusions that they might believe a lie that they might be damned.

I have already written more than I intended, and may never write again; but I hope our brethren that are more highly favored in their privileges will duly appreciate them, and in your prayers remember your unworthy brother and his companion, that we may be kept by the power of God until Jesus comes. And should we go down into the grave and our "thoughts perish," I pray that we may have a part in the first resurrection, that on us the second death may have no power; and finally we be found in that company which John saw, having their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

From J. C. & S. E. Smith.

Thanks be to God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and in every place makes known his saving power by the foolishness of preaching and the utterance of his holy word. Truly, we as a people ought to be very thankful and humble for all the mercies and blessings that have been so bountifully showered upon us from the "Father of lights."

Since our last letter to the Crisis we have visited a number of new fields, and have seen many stirred up to search the Scriptures, and some have embraced the "blessed hope," and are now looking forward to the rest and crown of life, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear. What a glad day it will be for the waiting ones who have long expected their returning Lord and King, and who have amid sorrows and trials, toils and groans, aches and pains, death and mourning, waited the dear Redeemer's return. And while the strangers and pilgrims still wait and sojourn here, may their vessels be filled with oil, and their lamps well trimmed and burning, and prepared for the "Nobleman's return."

We have recently returned from Franklin county, where we have been having a blessed season in the Lord. Found at Centropolis two families of like precious faith, who were anxiously waiting for some one to come and administer the Word of life, and had been doing much in scattering the good news of Jesus' coming the second time. A number had become interested by the faithful efforts of these two families. Their light was shining, and a healthy influence was shed all around by their godly life and well-ordered conversation. Praise the Lord! There is some salt left, and wherever it is found, it has a saving power. O that there were more living epistles, read and known by all. One of these brethren, Bro. S. P. Whitney, in an exhortation said they as a family had read the Bible through over twenty times by course. He formerly belonged to the Methodists, but is now rejoicing in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. Morning and evening the family bowed before the Lord in prayer, believing it is not in vain to call upon the name of the Most High. Truly this family is like "a city set on a hill, that cannot be hid." Their consistent life redounds to the glory of God, and their religion pure and undefiled, and that which fadeth not away. Others are taking knowledge of them that they have been with Christ and learned of him. Bro. Wm. Snyder also, a young man of talent, and noted for his integrity of character, is with them in the work. These two families are situated in a thickly settled community, where the blessed gospel of peace ought to be preached.

While there we visited five different places, laboring three weeks every night excepting one, scattering thousands of pages of tracts and many larger works. At every place more meetings are wanted, and no one to hold them. In other places not visited the people are anxious to hear. O that some one who has the wor may come at once and lend a helping hand! A little company of five have come together in church order. Many others I trust will join them soon. Great interest was manifested for miles around. Night after night houses were filled, and sometimes more than could be seated. New fields of labor demand new supplies of reading matter. Tracts and books are needed to scatter among the interested ones, "beside all waters." O that means may be sent on at once to help the Publishing Society, that they may liberally send to the workers as they go without the camp into destitute fields. I can assure you, beloved brethren and sisters, that God's word will not return void, but will be a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death.

I do hope some one may come forth into this harvest field. Cannot a number of churches East unite and defray the expenses of some one who would be glad to come and labor? Who will interest themselves in this work? May this be the year when many hearts shall be made to rejoice in the Lord, and every brother and sister in the cause of Christ be made to feel the importance of acting at once, and all the time, in every way they can, for the furtherance of the gospel and the glory of God, that a people may be made ready for the glorious appearing of our Savior, and the ushering in of God's everlasting kingdom. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that we may have power and might from on high. From your brother and sister.

Arvonia, Osage Co., Kan., Jan. 27th.

Extracts from Letters.

P. Alling writes:—"The good cause under the labors of our much esteemed Bro. F. Burr is evidently advancing in this place and vicinity. The doctrine of the fulness of the Spirit after conversion is fast gaining ground, and the recipients of this grace all testify to its indwelling power, as just the thing needed in order to overcome the ills of every-day life, affording at all times a peacefulness hitherto unknown. Not a few testify that it brings a joy fully equal, if not greater, than that experienced at their conversion. Nearly all say that up to this point, their past experience has been one of desire, much like that of wishing to be rich, without its attainment; but now it is reversed, and the desire has given place to a fruition of blessedness better felt than expressed in words. We are beginning to feel that this is in deed and in truth a little of the long promised 'latter day rain,' to ripen the resurrection harvest soon to be ingathered by the reaping angels that are to accompany our long-absent Lord back to this earth as its rightful King. Now if this little foretaste is so good and so glorious, what must be that fulness when mortality is swallowed up of life? Won't we want immortal bodies to contain it?

Bro. Grant's late visit of a single evening with us was a rich blessing to not a few. We shall expect another call from him on his return from California."

A. Martin writes:—"When I came to Bow, N. H., to labor for the salvation of the perishing, it was a new field. Many of the people were hard and unbelieving. The first meeting was at the school-house, in the Woodbury District. They came out to hear the new doctrine. I commenced preaching to them repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, 'holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord,' and the 'signs of the times.' God blest his word. One wanderer turned to the Lord. Others followed, and within a short time thirteen believed and were baptized.

Of late there has been a revival among us again. A man and his wife, highly respected, have started for the kingdom of God and are now rejoicing in the blessed hope. They are good workers, and will no doubt do much good. Others have been greatly revived. There are among us about twenty-eight who profess to be looking for that 'blessed hope,' and many others are interested in the precious truths we hold dear."

Bro. John Parsons writes:—"I left home Jan. 24th. Met Bro. J. G. Smith at Concord. Went from there to Danbury, and commenced meetings evening, Jan. 27th. The Lord is at work in Danbury. Sinners are being converted, and backsliders reclaimed. Thursday evening every brother and sister witnessed for Jesus, and every unconverted person in the room fell under the power of God."

THE GREAT EVENT.

At the creation, "all the sons of God shouted for joy," so after the lapse of four thousand years, when Jesus was born, they sang again. The new-born sinless Savior was "made of woman," as one of the human race. This gave him the innocent infirmities of our nature, and the form and attributes of a man. He was divine, yet human, was a divine person on earth, the visible of the invisible God, the manifested God, "God manifest in the flesh!" Christ is ever to be regarded in this light. He was not a mere man, though in the form of a man, but was the same divine being, while tabernacling among us, that he was while in heaven. "The glory which he had with the Father before the world was," though obscured in the humble garb of humanity, was only obscured; it was not extinguished or lost. But it was "laid by" for a purpose. He parted with it—O wondrous grace!—that we might receive it. He took our woe and our death, that we might take his joy and his life. How unparalled a transaction is this!

Redeeming us from under the law, he puts us in the condition of God's dear children. Under the law, we stood in a relation to God far different from that of sons; for we were his foes, his rebel subjects, Satan's slaves; but now may we be introduced into the glorious liberty of the children of God; be constituted members of a family, each of which is heir to a throne; "have our fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." To a title so noble, to privileges so rich, to prospects so exalted, are penitent believers brought, through the incarnation and atonement of that Savior, the announcement of whose birth was made in strains of angelic music to the shepherds of Bethleem.

What an event of surpassing interest was this to us! "Here, too, we have the opening of that grand design, which was obscurely intimated when Adam sinned, and which was gradually unfolding for 4000 years; here we have the fulfillment of the prophecy to Adam that "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head"; here we have the fulfillment of the prophecy to Abraham that in his seed all the nations of the earth shall be blessed; here we have the fulfillment of the prophecy to Malachi that "the Sun of Righteousness should arise with healing in his wings"; here we have the fulfillment of all prophecy; here we have the antitype of types, and the substance of shadows, and the consummation of the eternal counsels of the Lord; for "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," all the rays of prophetic light being wreathed into a crown of glory for his head.

Other occurrences there have been, big with importance to the human race, but when "God sent his Son, made of a woman"; when the Ancient of Days was cradled as an infant of days; when shepherds heard the story of his birth, and angels struck their golden harps thereto as a fresh theme of praise, there was an event more sensibly affecting us and in which we have a deeper interest than any other which had previously occurred.

I have a Bible which was lost at Springfield Campground two years ago. On the blank leaf is written, "Borrowed of Doct." —the remainder I could not read. If the owner will write me, I will send it to him, or I will pay his subscription for the Crisis one year and keep it.
H. Munger.

Help.—Will some of the preaching brethren come to Danbury, Ct? If there was ever a time and place when and where God's truth ought to be preached, it is now, and here. Who will come? Correspond with A. D. Ballard, Danbury, Ct.

Those wishing to preach at Farmington, will confer a favor to the church worshiping there by publishing their appointments in the Crisis. We have often had two at a time.
N. H. Berry, in behalf of the church.

Having studied my duty, in the light of the "blessed Word" and past providences, I feel to place myself in the channel of God's opportunities to be moved in any direction, by his revealed will, through his children. Any church that would like to have me visit them, will please address as soon as convenient, Eld. Franklin Douglas, 347 W. 36th St., New York City.

If any of the friends desire my labors in Northern New York, they can address me at my residence: New London, Oneida Co., N. Y.
Wm. Morrell.

Those wishing to preach in Woodford, Vt., will please correspond with Bro. Geo. F. Townsend, Bennington, Vt.

Those who wish to preach at Rutland, Vt., will please correspond with D. E. Grandy or Nathan Howard.

Brethren wishing to preach in Canterbury, N. H., will please correspond with Thos. S. Tucker.

Those wishing to preach in Exeter, N. H., will please correspond with either N. Churchill or G. T. Stacy.

Those wishing to preach in Lyman, Me., can correspond with Bro. J. R. Tripp, Alfred, Me.

Those wishing to preach at Southbridge, Mass. (Town Hall), please correspond with L. H. Benson.

Those wishing to labor with the Second Advent church of Hebron, N. Y., will please correspond with Warren Howard.

Those wishing to preach in Bath, Me., must first correspond with James Ham or Wm. Blaisdell, committee.

Brethren wishing to preach in Manchester, N. H., please correspond with Bro. Henry J. Hicks.

Bro. C. F. Sweet and myself have concluded to publish a small work on Primitive Christianity, or the Faith of the Fathers, showing the literal interpretation of the Scriptures. A work that we need in going into new fields, as we have done the past season. Although we have a good many good works and tracts upon our table, yet we have lacked, and often have been asked for something of this kind. Who will aid us by pledge, or sending the money for four or more copies? The work will cost about twenty or twenty-five cents each, and will be delivered by the middle of May, 1874. Address C. F. Sweet, Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y., or J. T. Ongley, Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pa.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

JESUS.

M. H. HALL.

Jesus! my Savior and my King,
I love thy name, thy charming name;
In melting strains I love to sing
Thy praise, thy matchless love proclaim.

Jesus! thy love, thy wond'rous love—
Such love as angels ne'er could know—
Didst turn my longing soul above,
When fixed on carnal things below.

Jesus! thy crown of thorns I see,
The swaying throng methinks I hear,
As thou didst hang upon the tree,
'Mid mocking jeer and loving fear.

"Father, forgive them," Jesus cries,
"For what they do, they do not know";
He bows his head and meekly dies,
To conquer Death, and Life bestow.

Jesus! thou suffering Lamb of God,
For all in mercy thou hast bled;
Alone the wine-press thou hast trod—
For sinful me thy blood was shed.

Jesus! our light, our life, our all,
Through him alone we come to God;
Sinners! before him prostrate fall,
And help to sound his praise abroad.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

W. KELLAWAY.

ROMAN CATHOLIC TENETS.

We gladly avail ourselves of the valuable assistance of a German paper (Chronologische Anzieger), to refresh our memories and the memories of the readers of the Crisis as to the dates of the introduction of some of the more important Roman Catholic tenets. It seems that people first began to dip their fingers in "holy water" in the year A. D. 120. "Penitence" first became severe A. D. 157. "Monks" began to swarm A. D. 348. "Latin Mass" first mumbled A. D. 351. The "Sacraments" degraded, A. D. 550. The fires of "Purgatory" lighted, A. D. 600. Mary and the saints first invoked, A. D. 715. First kissing of the "Pope's toe," A. D. 809. Thriving trade in the "Canonization of Saints," A. D. 993. Much tingling and blessing of bells, A. D. 1000. "Priestly Celibacy" professed, A. D. 1015. "Indulgences" plentiful, A. D. 1119. "Dispensations" ditto, A. D. 1200. "Host" first elevated, A. D. 1204. The whispers of Auricular Confession" first poured into the priest's ear, A. D. 1215. The "Immaculate Conception" asserted, A. D. 1860. "Papal Infallibility" ditto, A. D. 1870. Here Papal blasphemy reached its climax.

ANTI-CONFESSIONAL MEETING AT BRIGHTON.

Lately, an anti-confessional meeting was held in Brighton, to protest against the appeal made by several hundred Church of England clergymen to Parliament, for the restoration of the confessional to the established church. The Universe—a weekly Roman Catholic organ—wrote a paragraph on that meeting so novel, and at the same time so characteristic of Popery, that we cannot refrain from letting you see it. The following is a transcription:—"Brighton has gone mad about the Protestant confessional question. A lamentable sight was witnessed in that queen of watering places some days ago. The crazed portion of the community of Brighton, to the number of some four thousand, assembled in the dome, Royal Pavilion, including, sad to relate many respectable government officials who prefix 'Rev.' to their names, and an ex-mayor. These unfortunate people stamped and stormed and raved for over two hours respecting Ritualism and the confessional, and the peculiarities of High Church and Low Church, and Broad Church and Narrow Church, and Long Church and Short Church, and the various other shaped churches which the renowned "Reformation" has brought into existence. And yet the police did not interfere. No riot act read. No humane power brought into existence to put these people into mad houses. How shocking!"

THE JEWISH REMNANT.

There are those who look to the future for a great conversion of the Jews. They expect a "remnant" to be saved. This remnant they think will consist of "all Israel" existing at the time. So they believe, and so they preach. There are others who also believe in the salvation of a remnant of the Jews. But this remnant they believe is being gathered now, and has been gathered all down through this gospel dispensation. They so believe because the apostle said, "Even so, then, at this present time there is a remnant according to the election of grace." The "remnant" was being gathered in St. Paul's day. As a nation the Jews had been rejected; but for individuals of the nation there was mercy. Statistics abundantly prove that as many Jews in proportion as Greeks have been converted to the Christ. And now the "Society for the Propagation of Christianity among the Jews" tells us of a good work which is progressing at Jerusalem. There are sixty Jewesses meeting daily to hear the gospel. And while at one time a Christian doctor could not go into the Jewish quarter, ministers are now welcomed in almost every house in Jerusalem. The Society has reason to believe that during the last sixty years, for which period it has been established, from 20,000 to 25,000 persons have been persuaded to embrace Jesus as their Lord and Savior. Encouraging this.

ARE YOU A CHRISTIAN?

E. A. HOSMER.

Dear reader, this is a very important question, and well deserves your immediate consideration. Do not misunderstand me. I am not asking if you are a member of this or that church, or if you believe there is a God, or that the Bible is a book written by Divine Inspiration, or any such question as these,—but are you a christian? Are you a follower and lover of the Lord Jesus Christ? If not, on what do you base your hopes of eternal life? or how can you expect to be saved in the day that the Lord makes up his jewels? As Jesus was once teaching from place to place, journeying toward Jerusalem, he was asked, "Are there few that be saved?" His answer was, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many I say unto you will seek to enter in and shall not be able."

The same qualifications that were requisite for salvation in those days are required to-day. And in the language of him who spake as never man spake, I would say, "Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life and few there be that find it." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

In conclusion, let me entreat of you, if you are a christian, be faithful to your mission, and pray for me. If not, consider for a moment how glorious and blessed it will be to be saved, and what a terrible thing it will be to be lost. Also how uncertain life is, and how certain is the fact that you and I are to stand before our God in judgment, there to render a strict account for every thought, word, and deed.

THE FREE GIFT.

E. S. CRAIG.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy, and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." While reading these beautiful words from the precious Book, a picture presents itself to my mind. Methinks I see coming away in the distance, a band of travelers. As they near me, I see they are dusty, worn, and weary looking. Weeks of toilsome travel, have emptied their water flasks, exhausted their store of food, and still they are in the desert, destitute, travel-worn, and death staring them in the face. But hark! I hear a sound, Listen! 'tis the sound of bubbling water. Come, weary travelers, slake your thirst! Can you imagine readers, the joy with which they dip the sparkling drops? They bathe the heated brow, cool the parched feet, and best of all they slake the burning thirst, and go on their way refreshed. But soon they lag, the body needs strength. And lo! a voice greets their ear, "Come ye, buy and eat." Ah! but the purse has become empty. But hark again! can it be true? the words are these;—"Come buy wine and milk, without money and without price!" Oh joy! 'tis a free gift! and they are enabled thereby to reach the end of their journey.

Dear perishing sinner, should your eye fall upon these lines, stop, and compare your case with these destitute travelers. Are you not in need of the water of life? Are you not starving, with nothing to purchase for you the bread of life?—eternal death staring you in the face? O sinner, are you indifferent? Do you not care which way you are drifting? You are in peril, and I pray God you may be alarmed, and that speedily. Are you hungry, thirsty, travel-worn, sick, and tired of the world? Thank God! for your ear is ready for the blessed call,—"Come ye to the waters;" you are ready for the precious promise, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Sinner, come now, without money and without price, and accept the free gift of life from Him who has purchased it with his own blood. Wherefore do you spend your money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? O, receive that which is full and free, and gain thereby a title to that inheritance which fadeth not away.

DIFFICULTY WITH A PLAIN PROMISE.

S. HALL.

Many, perhaps most of the religious teachers are unwilling to accept that to be the true meaning of the Scriptures which the language used, plainly implies. It must be something different from what the plain, literal words convey; and hence they prefer, in many instances at least, to give a spiritual, or metaphorical meaning, however forced or unnatural such a construction may be; and their explanations would sometimes be almost amusing, were it not for the mischievous results that follow.

In the comments given upon the general Sunday School lesson in the Congregationalist not long since, by the Rev. Mr. Parsons, on Matt. 5: 5, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," he says, "The meek are the mild and gentle. It sometimes seems as if the noisy and aggressive people were the ones who are most truly prospered. Not so in the long run. Gentleness is certain to conquer in the end, or, as the verse puts it, 'inherit the earth,' a figure of speech denoting the final attainment of heaven."

But since the Bible is to be understood to mean something different from what it says, and nobody certainly knows just what, any other explanation, for aught we know, is likely to be just as good as this. In H. W. Beecher's Christian Union, an "inquiring friend" asks, "What is your interpretation of 'Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth?'" To which Mr. Beecher replies, "In one sense the meek do inherit the earth. People who are always at law gain nothing; people who are warlike hold nothing. The empire of Bonoparte descends not to his heirs, the peaceful Republic of Switzlerland lives on through all storms. The people who got the most good out of the late war were the negroes who struck scarcely a blow. It is a general law that meekness and long-suffering are more profitable than combativeness. The meekness of which Christ spoke is long-suffering, but not wholly and literally non-resistant. There is an extreme in every thing, and even forbearance may cease to be a virtue. If the meek man happen to inherit little of the earth, he enjoys it a hundred times more than his quarrelsome neighbor, and a man's riches are measured by what he enjoys, and not by what he has."

There now begins to be doubt as to what is really promised. In one case, "they shall inherit the earth" is made by a "figure of speech" to mean that they don't inherit the earth at all, but attain heaven. In the other case "they shall inherit the earth" is by some "figure of speech" made to mean that they do inherit it; though the inheritance is explained to be rather insignificant and very uncertain, and most of the meek have been, and are now, destitute of it; but "if the meek man happen to inherit a little of the earth," why, he enjoys it much more than others. If that promise has been fulfilled by what the righteous have inherited and enjoyed of the earth above others, I certainly do not think they have appreciated it as very wonderful.

It seems surprising that such and similar explanations of such plain promises should be thought necessary. They are in this way nearly made void, and the promised inheritance of the saints is so far lost sight of. How few comparatively now understand God's purpose as he has revealed it, in reference to the reward of his people and to the kingdom which they shall inherit. How much better to accept of Christ's promise just as he made it, and made, too, in beautiful harmony with the whole teaching of the Scriptures upon this subject, and rejoice in the prospect of its glorious accomplishment.

"PRECIOUS THINGS."

HENRY PRATT.

The precious things of this life are considered those that are most costly, like gold and diamonds. Yet their value depends on circumstances. That caravan that was perishing for water while in pursuit of diamonds was almost in despair when, coming to a well, they found diamonds instead of water. "Nothing but diamonds," says the leader, as he turned to his comrades in disappointment. A cup of water would have been far more precious to them than all precious stones.

That French merchant on board the ill-fated steamer Atlantic, of New London, offered his wealth of $30,000 in jewelry to any man who would set him on land. A boat-ride of one mile was more precious to him than costly stones set in gold. Not so with "precious" heavenly things. Their value increases as trial and danger appear. The blessing that Moses pronounced upon Joseph embraced not merely temporal things but heavenly. "Blessed of the Lord be his land, and the precious things of heaven." Deut. 33: 13. Some of the precious things of heaven are its promises; and among them is found rest for the weary. Paul says—"There remaineth, therefore, a rest for the people of God." "Thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days," says Michael to Daniel. The thought of rest, rest in the grave, was a precious heavenly promise to that sainted mother who said, "I do not expect to be conscious in death, but I shall rest, precious rest."

Then that promise to parents, "As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." None but afflicted parents can appropriate this heavenly promise to themselves. And never did sweeter words fall upon the hearts of sorrowing parents. In amazement he looks up as the gracious words sound in his ear, and says, "Do you pity me as I pity my afflicted child?" And a calm influence comes over him, seeming to say, "precious promise."

The thoughts of God are precious. And when we realize like David that he knoweth our downsitting and our uprising; that he knoweth our frame, and remembereth that we are dust; that he regardeth us at home or abroad, in life or in death; that he takes cognizance of our members and writes them in his book, when as yet there is none of them;—how can we but exclaim with him, "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!"

Wisdom is precious. And "if any of you lack wisdom (says James), let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." When that ship's company, almost in despair off Cape Horn in a dense fog, came suddenly upon some fishermen, the very sight of them gave them unbounded joy; because they could give them the knowledge they needed. Solomon, when he realized the great responsibility of his situation as king, and how little knowledge he had of government, lost sight of long life, and riches, and honor for himself, and prayed for wisdom. This God granted him; and he was led to exclaim, "Wisdom is more precious than rubies."

Besides all these heavenly things, there is a precious faith. Peter wrote to a class that had obtained "like precious faith." His faith embraced, and he looked for new heavens and a new earth wherein the righteous shall dwell; and this faith was founded on "exceeding great and precious promises." Just before this earth shall pass away, or in the last days, the Scriptures tell us perilous times shall come, and scoffers, "saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" and it will be very foggy, i. e., "darkness will cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." We shall need help or knowledge of our whereabouts. Peter says, we must take heed unto the "sure word of prophecy." That must be our light until "the day dawn."

O that people could see that light is what we need. Precious light, precious knowledge, precious promises! They alone can realize them who have obtained "like precious faith" with Peter. And among these precious things we may not overlook the Precious Man! "I will make a man more precious than fine gold, even a man than the gold of Ophir." When that telegram came from our son saying, "I have found Jesus! Rejoice!" I knew the meaning of that text. Had he found gold, or diamonds, or any precious things of earth, I had not been comforted; but when he says, "I have found Jesus," I knew he had found that "Man," that God had made for us, "more precious than gold." Precious Jesus! He calms the waves in storms; he forms in us wells of water springing up to everlasting life; he can make the dying bed softer than downy pillows.

Said my son when dying, "I am leaving a young wife, and am filled with pain, yet I have not an anxious care." Even death can be made precious. Says Spurgeon to death,—"Thou shalt be my gain. I give thee but corruption;—thou shalt give me back incorruption."

[Two weeks later Bro. Pratt writes:—

How little did I think when I penned the above that death was again coming to our circle and take away our Emma, beloved by all who knew her. But hers was a "precious death"! Her interest in devotional meetings was much increased of late, and she found great comfort in visiting and reading to a neighbor who must soon die with a cancer. She had ever feared the measles, but when they came she had much composure. She wanted water out of a bucket, or a rock she had seen in Florida Mountain. But ah! said she, "what is that to the river of life?" After a sinking turn in which we thought she was dead, she revived and said,

"O Exile Paradise! O how I long for thee!
When wilt thou robe the earth? bring back life's healing tree!"

"Glory, hallelujah! glory, hallelujah! has Christ come? Why am I raised from the dead? O, it is to bid you good bye"! Then calling each by name she said, "How I love you! Meet me in the kingdom! My work is done!" Then,

As waves come ripling on the shore,
And seas are calm when storm is o'er,
So gently heaved that joyous breast,
So sweetly sank that child to rest.

O, WHY WILL YOU NOT BE A CHRISTIAN?

E. A. BOYNTON.

Why is it that people are so unwilling to become christians? Nearly every one admits that religion is a good thing, and yet how few embrace it. It seems as though men would almost as soon leave the bright warm sunlight with all the comforts and pleasures of life, and go down into a cold dark dungeon to live, as to become the followers of Jesus Christ. Whoever thinks that the christian life is a gloomy one, is greatly mistaken. Suppose we knew that far away beyond seas, mountains and deserts, was a beautiful sunny land, where wintry storms were never known, where sparkling fountains played in shady groves, and happy songsters warbled in the boughs above; where grassy lawns were decked with lovely flowers, and none were ever sick or sad, and no one ever died. Where

"Softest strains of sweetest music floated lighly on the air,
Filling every soul with rapture, leaving thus no room for care;
Where golden harps were ever ringing,
Angel voices sweetly singing,
New delight each moment bringing
To the happy dwellers there."

If this were true, and everybody knew it, who would not wish to go? No matter how long and wearisome the way, nor how much property had to be left behind; men would go in throngs, till this whole land would be left without an inhabitant. This is but a picture of the imagination. There is no such happy place in all this wide world of sin and sorrow. But we know that the wondrous joy and peace, the matchless beauty and spendor of that heavenly home where the saints of God shall live forever, no mortal tongue can tell; and high and low, rich and poor, old and young, all men everywhere are asked, urged, and warmly pressed to share the joys of that happy land. But who regards it? Men treat it as though it were but an idle tale. They live, grow old and die, without any effort to secure the glorious things so freely offered them. They allow these precious opportunities to slip from their grasp unimproved; and in the day of judgment they will find the pearly gates closed against them, and they utterly, hopelessly, eternally lost!

In view of all these things, I would kindly ask, Why will you not be a christian?

St. Johns, Mich.

SOW THE GOOD SEED.

MRS. L. M. CARLISLE.

Sow the good seed! soon the harvest will be o'er;
We shall reap our reward,—an hundred fold or more;
Sow while the day lasts, soon the night will come,
Soon we shall rest in our bright Eden home.

Sow the good seed! oft times a little word
Is blest to the sinner through the help of the Lord;
And though some fall on stony ground, we'll ne'er discouraged be,
But strive with watchful, loving care, to work more faithfully.

Sow the good seed! let it fall where'er it will,
A little germ will often spring for good—but ne'er for ill—
In the heart of some poor wanderer, like either you or I;
God grant it e'er may flourish, and never droop or die.

It is little, very little that we for Christ can do,
But we can give him all our love, and the narrow way pursue.
He gave his life a ransom for sinners here below,
Then let us all prove faithful, and still the good seed sow.

SABBATH SCHOOL INSTRUCTION.

O. D. WOODRUFF.

"As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." So impressions made in youth, usually shape the course of manhood.

Owing to the scattered condition of the people whom light from the word of God has called out to meet the Bridegroom, many are deprived of Sabbath School privileges among those of like precious faith. This class are sometimes perplexed to know whether, under the circumstances, it is duty to send their children to other schools, where the influence moulds the young mind to regard their blessed hope and faith with holy horror, and as something to be shunned as a deadly poison; while the ingredients which make up conformity to the world, love of pleasure, pride, vanity and fashion are thoroughly instilled into the young minds.

Is it a wonder, that as the children grow up, parents earnestly endeavour to undo what has been done, or mourn because they are unable to accomplish it? Upon the parent rests the responsibility of training up the child in the way he should go, that when he is old he may not depart from it.

By this time some may think we are sectarian; but those who have been called to be pilgrims and strangers on the earth, and commanded to keep separate and unspotted from the world will not be alarmed at this misapplication of that oft-perverted term. They stand on holy ground, and the cry is only calculated to deceive them into exchanging holy and godly living with its joy and peace, for the beggarly elements.

Those who live here may get good Scriptural question books, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit teach their children those sacred truths at home, and the effect will be abiding. Remember that the beautiful elm with its lofty top and towering branches completes its growth away from the forest, solitary and alone; and though your children may not be favored with Sabbath School privileges, yet the private Scriptural teaching of the believing parent will not be lost on the youthful mind. Many a parents heart is sad to-day, because, for want of proper Sabbath School instruction and neglect on their own part, others have fashioned the minds of their children, so that they treat with contempt and derision the precious truths so sacred and so dear, which cost the life-blood of the Son of God to establish.

Set them a godly example. Strew their pathway with good reading matter. Get them good Scriptural question books, have them learn their lessons, and hear them say them. In an earnest simple manner impress Bible truth upon their young minds, and you have a Sabbath School in your own house. Philemon had a church in his house. Phil. 1: 2. Nymphas had one in his. Col. 4: 15. And Priscilla and Aquila one in theirs. Rom. 11: 3–5. No doubt the Jews thought it strange when their synagogues were so nigh at hand, that these people should worship God in their own houses; yet Paul nowhere charges them with being sectarian. He evidently did not use the term so carelessly as some do at the present day.

Because the coming of Jesus is nigh at hand, the instruction of the children should not be neglected, but the more earnest heed given to it. Do not neglect the religious culture of your children. You must meet them at the judgment. Teach them to prepare for it and your duty is done. After all, should they refuse to serve the Lord, you will be relieved from that sense of condemnation which is sure to follow neglect, or a perverted tuition. Teach your children the truth you believe to be essential to your own salvation.

REUNION.

I. O. ORCHARD.

It is my sad lot to know, and experience separation in almost every form that can be felt in this life. How many a bitter pang and heart ache has this experience cost me! But the saddest separation I have ever experienced was a separation from those of the nearest and dearest ties on earth, on account of ignorance and sin on my part.

I have also experienced many a happy meeting and reunion of loved ones. But the happiest of all reunions on earth to me, is the one in which I have been reunited by faith, to the Redeemer of my soul and those whom God has given me to love and cherish. What a happy thought it is that I shall meet them all in that blessed world so soon to come. Though some are yet hesitating to accept the mercy so freely offered, still I hope by persistent prayer, and the unmerited love of Jesus, that those loved ones may appear in glory as an unbroken family. Is it possible that there may be such an eternal union? Yes, the precious blood which has been sprinkled on one heart may cleanse all. The same spirit that has renewed and sanctified the father or mother, is able to renew and sanctify each child. The same Spirit and grace of the gospel which prepared that loved sister to sink into the arms of death, resting in the sure promise of a glorious resurrection to eternal life, can prepare you all to join with her and walk on those lovely banks just beyond the darkness of death.

When the glorious Lord appears, he will command all who are in their graves to arise, and come forth to judgment. Look on his right hand and see your smiling loved ones. Father, mother, dear sisters and brothers, when sweet sounds of greeting will be heard, and a whole family reunited in glory. What a spectacle of beauty! Not one is absent. In the world of mortality they were united in faith, love, peace and joy. Before the great white throne, in the world of immortality they bow together in united adoration.

There is to be in that world no separation. No one is to wander away into temptation and sin. None will sink into the arms of death. God grant in his infinite mercy that every family who will read this, may be thus united.

Beloved, time is drawing speedily to a close. The dawning of that awful day is at hand. How is it with us? Are we prepared to join our loved ones in the land of bliss? or shall we have to suffer the righteous indignation of the Lord, which will result in our everlasting ruin and destructon.

Dear reader, if you are not saved oh, hasten unto the Lord, your righteousness. For he has declared himself able to save to the uttermost all who come to him by faith. Remember your time is very short. We have the faithful promise "that he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Amen.

GODLINESS.

CYRUS MENDENHALL.

Man's character is made up of various attributes and motives, which, though in the main are good of themselves, are often turned into improper channels. Men being blinded by their ambitions, and lusts, have miscalled good, evil, and evil, good. In trying to improve upon God's plan, or striving to make pure, plain, practical religion grand and imposing, they have introduced many needless formulas, foolish rites, and sinful ceremonies. True godliness is the quality of being godly, or as Paul defines it, it is denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world.

Thus we see that godliness of itself, does not consist in performing certain outward ceremonies, nor adopting some man-made creed, though these things may by some be falsely called by that name. Paul, in writing to Timothy, mentions a class of persons "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," and further says, "from such turn away."

The question here suggests itself—1. What is godliness? It is a quality of character which is alone attainable by a strict obedience to God's law, and which does not naturally belong to man, but will be imputed unto him through faith in Christ Jesus. Godliness cannot be mistaken, as it gives by its fruits abundant proof of genuineness. It is meek, long-suffering and charitable, enabling men so to let their light shine before their fellows that they may see their good works and glorify their Father which is in heaven.

2. What is the form of godliness? The form of godliness in the sense of our text might be thus defined; "Having the form or appearance, without the substance or essence, external; as formal duty; formal worship." Webster. Complying with certain requirements, such as attending worship, partaking of the sacraments, public exhortation or prayer, belong to the form and not the substance of religion. The Pharisees were punctilious in these matters. Hear our Savior's words to them, which are fully appreciable to modern formalists:—"Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Ye blind guides which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel. Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess." Matt. 23: 23–25.

The form of godliness is not to be entirely annulled, for all things should be done "decently and in order," "and these ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone." Some forms, as the Lord's supper, &c., are divinely appointed, yet men, who abuse God-given moral and mental attributes, have also misused his ordinances, and misinterpreted Scripture.

This brings us to the 3rd and last question, What is the power of godliness? The power of godliness is that strength which is given to all who seek it by complying with the requirements of the gospel through faith. It gives to man the moral ability to know that which is right, and supplies strength to perform all duty, no matter how great the opposition or persecution which may arise. It subdues inherent evil, conquers the carnal mind, and softens the hardened heart, making every thought, purpose, and action subservient to God's law and will. It has supported the martyrs, the suffering and tempted in all ages, and causes men to rate all things as dross for the sake of Christ. It comforts in sorrow, strengthens in trial, and conquers sin, Satan, and all opposition, helping men to lead consistent, holy, calm lives amidst abounding iniquity, disturbances and contentions. It keeps us from sin, saves us in this present evil world, and gives us an assurance of reward in that to come.

It was this wonderful power which led Paul to beautifully write, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. 8: 35, 39.

There are those, who by their lives deny the power of godliness, and we are bidden to turn away from them. Let us then obey the command, "Be separate," "peculiar," serving God with full purpose of heart, praying for light and wisdom to avoid error in theory or practice. Let us beware lest we cling to certain forms, or perhaps to certain points of doctrine, neglecting the weightier matters of a pure, practical, active piety that will make us work for the cause of truth and for the salvation of sinners.

God help us to keep unspotted in these trying times, then when Jesus comes we shall not be ashamed, but shall reap the fruit of godliness in a world without end, free from pain, solicitude and sorrow.

Sinner, will you come and join those whose names are written in the book of life? If so, forsake evil doing, turn to Jesus, believe, live godly, and all will be well.

GOD CARES FOR ME.

Poor and needy though I be,
God Almighty cares for me;
Gives me clothing, shelter, food;
Gives me all I have of good.

He will hear me when I pray,
(He is with me night and day,
When I sleep and when I wake),
For the Lord my Savior's sake.

He who reigns above the sky,
Once became as poor as I;
He whose blood for me was shed,
Had not where to lay his head.

Though I labor here awhile,
He will bless me with his smile;
And, when this short life is past,
I shall rest with him at last.

Then to him I'll tune my song,
Happy as the day is long;
This my joy forever be,—
God Almighty cares for me.

THE FIRST STRAWBERRIES.

A little girl once had a bed of strawberries. Very anxious was she that they should ripen. and be fit to eat. The time came.

"Now for a feast," said her brother to her one morning, as he picked some beautiful ones for her to eat.

"I cannot eat these," said she, "for they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well," said her brother, "all the more reason for our making a feast, for they are the greater treat."

"Yes; but they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well, what of that?"

"Dear father told us that he used to give God the first out of all the money he made, and that then he always felt happier in spending the rest; and I wish to give God the first of my strawberries too."

"Ah! but," said her brother, "how can you give strawberries to God? And even if you could, he would not care for them."

"Oh! I have found out a way," said she. "Jesus said; 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' and I mean to go with them to Mrs. Perkin's dying child, who never sees a strawberry, they are so poor."

Away went the children to give them to the dying child, and when they saw her put out her thin arms and take the ripe, round fruit in her little shrivelled fingers, and when they saw her eyes glisten, and her little faded lips smile, they felt as if they had a richer treat than if they had kept the ripe fruit for themselves; and something within them told them that God had accepted their little offering.—Sunday at Home.

A BEAUTIFUL REPLY.—In visiting the poor families in a retired part of the town, to find scholars for the Sunday school, a gentleman found a little girl, only six years old, trying to read her New Testament. She was a member of the school, and very fond of it; and though quite young, was a good scholar. She wanted a hymn book, and the gentleman promised to get her one, if she would learn to read the fifth and sixth chapters of Matthew in a fortnight. She did so; and when she read the first few verses of the chapter where it is said by our Savior, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," etc., the gentleman asked her which of the blessings here pronounced, she would like to have for herself.

She paused a little, and then replied, "I would rather be pure in heart."

The gentleman asked why she preferred this. The little one said that if she was only good she should have all the rest. Could you have made a better answer than this?

HATS OFF.—Off with your hat, my boy, when you enter the house. Gentleman never keep their hats on in the presence of ladies, and if you always take your's off when mamma and the girls are by, you will not forget yourself or be mortified when a guest ar stranger happens to be in the parlor. Habit is stronger than anything else, and you will always find that the easiest way to make sure of doing right on all occasions, is to get in the habit of doing right. Good manners cannot be put on at a moment's warning.

FRUGALITY.

SOMETHING WRITTEN 2,173 YEARS AGO

Frugality is a good that cannot be too highly prized. Not that it is necessary to practice it always with the same strictness; but the habit thereof is most excellent and very useful, that in case it should fall out that we had not all things in the same plenty as before, but may be satisfied with little, and that that mediocrity may not seem strange to us. Wherefore we should engrave deeply on our minds when we have learned to be contented without profuseness.

Nature for its subsistence requires only things that are easily procured. Those that are rare and exquisite are needless; they at best but flatter our vanity and luxury. An ordinary food shall afford as much pleasure as the most sumptuous banquet; and bread and water are a charming meal if they are at hand when we are hungry and thirsty.

We must, therefore, accustom ourselves to a plain diet, without ransacking the markets for those nice and costly dainties. This frugal way of living shall preserve our health, and we shall find ourselves stronger thereby and every way better disposed for all the actions of life. If we chance to assist at a better entertainment we shall relish it with great pleasure; but what is chiefly to be valued is, that by the means hereof we shall not fear the vicissitudes of fortune, because having habituated ourselves to take up with little, whatever plenty she may deprive us of she only places us in a state we are already prepared for and accustomed to by the laudable habit we have contracted.—Herald of Health.

A PERFECT WATER-PROOF.—A writer in an English paper says:—By the way, speaking of water-proofs, I think I can give travelers a valuable hint or two. For many years I have worn India-rubber water-proofs, but will buy no more, for I have learned that good Scottish tweed can be made entirely impervious to rain, and, moreover, I have learned how to make it so; and for the benefit of readers I will give the recipe:

In a bucket of soft water put half-a-pound of sugar of lead, and half-a-pound of powdered alum; stir this, at intervals, until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein, and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. Two of my party—a lady and a gentleman—have worn garments thus treated in the wildest storms of wind and rain, without getting wet. The rain hangs upon the cloth in globules. In short, they are really water-proof. The gentleman, a fortnight ago, walked nine miles in a storm of rain and wind, such as you rarely see in the South; and when he slipped off his overcoat, his under-clothes were as dry as when he put them on. This is, I think, a secret worth knowing; for cloth, if it can be made to keep out wet, is, in every way, better than what we know as water-proofs.—Science of Health.

AIR AND EXERCISE.—That we Americans do not take air and exercise enough is an admitted fact, and it stares us in the face in the shape of pale, debilitated men of forty, and sallow, hollow-cheeked women of thirty. There is a lack of muscle in the men and of bloom in the women. The climate is a trying one, to be sure, but that very fact should only stimulate us to fight with and overcome, not to fly from it, and seek refuge from it in interior atmospheres, fifty times more fatal. Have we reason to fear consumption, that great insidious foe, straightway we house ourselves, muffle ourselves, heat ourselves, and deny the simplest breath of air access to our lungs. We drug our bodies with costly artificial tonics, but we neglect those tonics which nature has provided so bountifully and without cost. One-half of us are faded hot-house flowers; the rest a race of unfortunate overworked bipeds. Out of door exercise is a grand essential to health.

REST.—The best medicines in the world, more efficient in the cure of disease than all potencies of the chemist's shop, are warmth, rest, cleanliness, and pure air. Some persons make it a virtue to brave disease, "to keep up" as long as they can move or bend a finger, and it sometimes succeeds; but in others, the powers of life are thereby so completely exhausted that the system has lost all ability to recuperate, and slow and typhoid fever sets in, and carries the patient to a premature grave. Whenever walking or work is an effort, a warm bed and a cool room are the very first indispensable steps to a sure and speedy recovery. Instinct leads all beasts and birds to quietude and rest the very moment disease or wounds assail the system.

OUR HEAVENLY HOME.

GEO. W. HOWARD.

I have heard of a world where no sorrow can come,
Where sin can oppress us no more;
And my heart now is longing for that blessed home
Where the trials of earth are all o'er.
I have heard of a kingdom that cannot be moved,
Where a King shall in righteousness reign;
There the saints of all ages his blessings shall prove,
And I long that blest kingdom to gain.

I have heard of a city whose streets are pure gold,
And I long in its blessings to share;
The apostles and prophets its joys have foretold,
And the ransomed will ever dwell there.
They tell us that sickness and death is unknown,
And the saying is faithful and true;
When Jesus in glory shall sit on his throne,
Then he will create all things new.

They say there the river of life ever flows;
That the blessed shall never thirst more;
That the tree of life on either side of it grows,—
There's sweet rest on that beautiful shore.
I would gain that blest kingdom with Jesus to reign;
For thy coming my heart, Lord, prepare!
I am weary of earth with its sorrows and pain,
And my longing heart fain would be there.

Yes, there in the presence of Jesus to dwell,
Free from sorrow, temptation and pain;
We'll join with the blest who the anthem swell,
Saying, "worthy the lamb that was slain."
O city all glorious! with jewels so rare,
I soon shall thy beauties behold;
Soon, soon in thy blessings I know I shall share,
Where pleasures unceasingly roll.

HOLINESS.

O. R. FASSETT.

Much is said concerning the doctrine of "holiness" in these days. And "holiness" is a Bible doctrine to be believed, preached, and lived out by the christian ministry and membership of the churches. But it is of vast importance that the doctrine be understood as the Holy Spirit has revealed in the Scriptures, and not according to a perverted, fanciful and fanatical view, entertained or advocated, which is extremely dangerous to believers, and perilous to unbelievers, hindering them from receiving the gospel at all.

The more important a scriptural doctrine is, the greater the effort of the adversary to corrupt, mystify, and turn it to men's destruction, if possible. Let us be on our guard here, that we be not deceived. A good brother writes, whose letter lies before me urging me to write for "our papers": "There is danger all around in these last times." Surely this is true! Paul's "perilous times" are upon us in earnest. There have been persons in all ages who have professed "holiness" and "sanctification," and been more Pharisaic than Christian; and more self-righteous than clothed upon with humility, and vested in "the robe of Christ's righteousness."

The desire for holiness is certainly right, and the possession of it is what we must have in order to "see God." Well, how shall we gain it?

A CAUTION.

Be it ever remembered that the complete and perfect state is not attainable in a moment, day, or year! This is a life-work, and in fact is not reached until "the perfect day," and "when that which is perfect is come." Angelic perfection is reserved for the age when "we shall be made equal unto the angels." The apostle Paul says: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect; but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." Phil. 3: 9-21. From the whole passage it is evident that "the mark" toward which he was pressing, and urged the church to gain, is the perfection of the resurrection state,—a degree being attainable in this life. Persons are and "stand in the grace of God," "complete in Christ," "sealed with the Holy Spirit" (the seal of the "New Covenant") immediately on true repentance and faith. Rom. 5: 1-5; Col. 2: 10; Eph. 1: 13, 14; Rom. 8: 9-17; John 6: 45; Heb. 10; 10. Then "through faith in his blood" which "cleanseth us from all sin" and "all unrighteousness," while "Jesus is the propitiation for our sins"; and with "iniquities forgiven and sins covered," nor "imputed"; and with "the righteousness of God imputed," because of "faith in God," believers can stand in this grace, and "reckon" themselves "to be dead unto sin, and alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." And by "grace" now being made "free from sin" and "condemnation," being in "Christ Jesus," they are, in the light of the gospel, holy, and from the instant they believe. So that, if "the publican" in the gospel (Luke 18) had died before reaching "his house," at the coming of Christ to reward the holy, he would in the resurrection have been presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Rom. 3: 25; 4: 3-9; 6: 11, 18; 8: 1-4; 2 Cor. 5: 18-21; Col. 1: 21, 23; 1 John 1: 7-10; 2: 1, 2; Jude 24; Rev. 1: 5.

While it is written, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God" (Matt. 5: 8); it is also written of the believing Gentiles in the apostles' day, "God . . . put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith" (Acts 15: 9); and that those who believe in God have "purified their souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit." 1 Pet. 1: 22. While again it is written, "Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12: 14); it is also written, "Faith is counted for righteousness." Rom. 4: 5. "Thou standest by faith; be not high-minded, but fear." Rom. 11: 20. "All our righteousnesses are but filthy rags." Isa. 64: 6. Says one: "That there are diversities of attainments, as well as of gifts among christians; that some men reach a higher development of character and a nobler type of piety than others, is the merest truism. But though types of character are so various, there is but one standard of life."

is not the state of saints in mortality. Grace does not allow believers to go on in sin, nor to commit sin. "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Rom. 6: 1, 2. No true christian believer would dare advocate or justify in himself, or others, that we "must commit sin"—"sin a little!" And it puts them in a false light who make this charge upon those who maintain that a state of sinlessness is not for this world, but the next. There is quite a difference in living in the commission of sin, and being sinless! And yet some cannot be made to apprehend it, or they willfully persist in perverting the position of those maintaining it.

Believers are only "complete in him" (Christ) whose "righteousness" must ever be "imputed" to us to cover all our imperfections, frailties and deficiencies. Nor can it be supposed by any reasonable man, that any living mortal, frail and imperfect as we are in this fallen world of ours, and with fallen natures, will avoid all errors and mistakes, and always do, or keep from doing, all God would have him; and that he in his infinite holiness sees naught in us to condemn. Were this state attainable in this life, the man reaching this measure of perfection could well be "justified by works."

To maintain that when one is "filled with the Spirit" he is as much under the control of the Holy Spirit as the mesmerized subject is completely under the control of the pathetyzer, and hence has no power at all to say or do anything but what the Spirit dictates, is by no means the doctrine of the Scriptures. This would destroy the free moral agency of man altogether, and would make God to bear the blame of all the sins, errors and acts of those who once submitted and gave up their wills to be controlled by him. Or if he for an instant should leave us free to act, and in the time we should transgress, He, and not ourselves, would be the guilty party. Alas! what a brood of errors springs from such fanciful interpretations of God's Word! There is not a day of our existence when we can well omit our Lord's prayer taught his disciples: "Give us day by day our daily bread. And forgive us our sins." Luke 11: 3, 4.

DID CHRIST MAKE THE WORLD?

T. M. PREBLE.

NUMBER TWO.

Prof. M. Stuart, in commenting on Rev. 13: 13, says: "The Word of God, a name found elsewhere in the New Testament only in the writings of the apostle John. . . . As to the original reason for giving such an appellation to the Messiah: after all that has been written on this subject, it might seem presumptuous in me to express an opinion in a single sentence, which is all that my present limits allow. Speech is the development of one's mind, wish, intention, command, etc.; and so it is a disclosure of the internal self. In respect to God, 'he speaks and it is done; he commands and it stands fast.' 'By the word of the Lord were the heavens made.' Now inasmuch as Christ was 'the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person,' 'God manifest in the flesh,' so he is the most direct, full, and immediate development of the Godhead to man; God speaks to us in and by him. Through him he speaks out as it were himself. So, then, as Christ was the most immediate and distinguished manifestation of God to men, the most honored means of communication, ... he received from John the name of Logos, or the great executor and communicator of the will of God."

Now, by taking this term logos, as we find it used in the N. T., it will be found to perfectly agree with the definition of the word as above given. This term, in its various cases or terminations, such as logou, logous, logo, logon, etc., occurs in all about three hundred and twenty-five times in the Greek New Testament. But in the exact form as found in John 1: 1, i. e., logos, it is found about seventy times; and yet only six or seven of these refer directly to Christ, the Son of God, as an "appellative" belonging to him. In following this interesting and instructive theme, as used in our common English version of the N. T., we shall find that there is the logos of God, the logos of Christ, the logos of angels, the logos of Isaiah, the logos of Paul, and the logos of men, both good and bad. The following we give as examples:—

1. The logos of God. "The seed is the word (logos) of God." Luke 8: 11. "Thy word (logos) is truth." John 17: 17. "The word (logos) of God grew." Acts 12: 24. "And the word (logos) of God increased." Acts 6: 7. "Not as though the word (logos) of God hath taken none effect." Rom. 9: 6. "What? came the word (logos) of God out from you?" 1 Cor. 14: 36. "The word (logos) of God is not bound." 2 Tim. 2: 9. The word (logos) of God was blasphemed." Titus 2: 5. "The word (logos) of God is quick." Heb. 4: 12. "The word (logos) of God abideth in you." 1 John 2: 14.

2. The logos of Christ. "His word (logos) was with power." Luke 4: 32. "What a word (logos) is this?" Luke 4: 36. "My word (logos) hath no place in you." John 8: 37. "The word (logos) that I have spoken, the same shall judge him." John 12: 48. "That the saying (logos) might be fulfilled which he spake." John 18: 32. "Let the word (logos) of Christ dwell in you richly." Col. 3: 16.

3. The logos of angels. "For if the word (logos) spoken by angels was steadfast." Heb. 2: 2.

4. The logos of Isaiah. "That the saying (logos) of Esaias might be fulfilled." John 12: 38.

5. The logos of Paul. "My speech (logos) and my preaching." 1 Cor. 2: 4. "Our word (logos) towards you was not yea and nay." 2 Cor. 1: 18. "His speech (logos) contemptible." 2 Cor. 10: 10. "That utterance (logos) may be given unto me." Eph. 6: 13.

6. The logos of good men. "Let your communicate (logos) be yea, yea; nay, nay." Matt. 5: 37. "There went a fame (logos) abroad of him." Luke 5: 15. "This rumor (logos) of him went forth." Luke 7: 17. "Herein is that saying (logos) true." John 4: 37. "This is a hard saying" (logos). John 6: 60. "Then went this saying (logos) abroad." John 21: 23. "And the saying (logos) pleased." Acts 6: 5. "Then tidings (logos) of these things came." Acts 11: 22. "If ye have any word (logos) of exhortation." Acts 13: 15. "For the preaching (logos) of the cross." 1 Cor. 1: 18. "To one is given by the Spirit the word (logos) of wisdom; to another the word (logos) of knowledge." 1 Cor. 12: 8. "Let no corrupt communication (logos) proceed out of your mouth." Eph. 4: 29. "Let your speech (logos) be alway with grace." Col. 4: 6. "This is a true saying" (logos). 1 Tim. 3: 1. "This is a faithful saying" (logos). 1 Tim. 4: 9. "Sound speech (logos) that cannot be condemned." Titus 2: 8. "But the word (logos) preached did not profit them." Heb. 4: 2.

7. The logos of bad men. "So they took the money, and did as they were taught; and this saying (logos) is commonly reported among the Jews." Matt. 28: 15. "What manner of saying (logos) is this that he said." John 7: 36. Their word (logos) will eat as doth a canker." 2 Tim. 2: 17.

The following are all the texts which speak of the "Word," or logos, as an "appellative," or "epithet," belonging to the Son of God, the Savior of the world, viz.: John 1: 1, 14; 1 John 1: 1; (logou) 1 Pet. 1: 23; (logou) 1 John 5: 7), and Rev. 19: 13. But the passage in 1 John 5: 7 is spurious; in proof of which we adduce the following:

Dr. Adam Clarke says:—"One hundred and thirteen Greek MSS. are extant containing the First Epistle of John; and the text in question is wanting in one hundred and twelve." Then follows a lengthy argument in proof of this statement—which see. Prof. M. Stuart, in his discussion with Dr. Channing on the question of the Trinity, admits this text to be spurious in this language: "The text in 1 John 5: 7 is beyond all question indefensible."

Albert Barnes, in his "Notes" on this verse (1 John 5: 7) says:—"It is wanting in all the earlier Greek manuscripts, for it is found in no Greek MS. written before the sixteenth century." Mr. Barnes has also drawn the following important and highly instructive conclusion from the very language itself, to show that this text must be an interpolation in King James' version. He says: "The language is not such as John would use. He does, indeed, elsewhere use the term Logos, or Word (John 1: 1, 14; 1 John 1: 1); but it is never in this form 'The Father, and the Word'; that is, the terms 'Father' and 'Word' are never used by him, or by any of the other sacred writers, as correlative. The word Son is the term which is correlative to the Father in every other place as used by John, as well as by the other sacred writers. See 1 John 1: 3; 2: 22, 23, 24; 4: 14; 2 John 1: 3, 9; and the Gospel of John, passion. Besides, the correlative of the term Logos, or Word, with John is not 'Father,' but 'God.' See John 1: 1; Rev. 19: 13."

By this criticism of Mr. Barnes, it is plain that the terms "Word" and "Son" are not literally the same. God and Logos are correlative, as they have a reciprocal relation, the existence of the one depending on the existence of the other. Hence, the logos of God, the word of God, or the speech of God, is as old as God himself, and is the same as himself. But when we use the term "Father," then we must use the term "Son," as correlative, or as having a reciprocal relation; the existence of the one depending upon the existence of the other. And from the examples above given, taken from the New Testament, it is perfectly evident that the term logos, whether it relates to God the Father, or to God the Son, or to angels, to Isaiah, to Paul, to good men, or to bad men, never means anything more than—a word spoken, speech, eloquence, doctrine, reason, or the faculty of reasoning.

In what is to follow, will be found such evidence in support of the view above given, respecting the real signification of logos, as found in John 1: 1, that it will stand, we think, the most able and learned criticism of the opposition.

IT is the weakness of some men to speak of man as miserable rather than guilty. Indeed, it becomes one who has obtained mercy to pity rather than condemn. Yet compassion should be mixed with a holy indignation, for we may indulge a tenderness to offenders till we lose sight of the abomination of sin.

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN."

J. R. SMITH.

These words of our Savior were addressed to Nicodemus, "a ruler of the Jews." Although Nicodemus was a man of learning, and occupying a high position, yet with all his learning and exaltation he was unable to comprehend the import of our Savior's language, and marveled greatly thereat. Never having passed from death unto life, it is not surprising that he should marvel at the language addressed him; for a new birth is truly a wonderful and a marvelous change. Jesus taught the necessity of a new birth by the infusion of spiritual life into the soul, whereby the regenerated are controled, and are enabled to turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Jesus pressed the necessity of the new birth upon Nicodemus in a very forcible and urgent manner,—"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

The new birth produces a change of life, a thorough and complete change. When one is born again he becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus. He has been liberated from the bondage of sin, and become a servant to God. His fleshly nature has become exchanged for the divine nature. The fruits of this nature are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Those who bring forth these fruits have been made free from sin; they have Christ formed within them the hope of glory. They have turned away from their idols to the living and true God. They have "passed from death unto life," and "show forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of nature's darkness into his marvelous light." It is a solemn fact that the great mass of those who profess to love Christ deny him in their daily lives, and bring forth works of darkness instead of works of righteousness. They do not bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, but are blinded by the god of this world, and have forgotten that they were purged from their old sins.

The Holy Spirit of God produces in those in whom he dwells acts of brotherly love and kindness, as naturally as the tree produces its fruit. "Men do not gather grapes from thorns, nor figs from thistles." Wherefore, "by their fruits ye shall know them." There are a great number who profess to have experienced a new birth, and yet they cannot give a good reason of their hope. They have been convicted of sin, but never having been "born again," they are always making crooked paths, and finding the pathway rough and thorny, always halting by the way. But when the sinner has truly repented and believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, he receives the evidence in his heart that he has been "born again"; for he that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." It is God who does the work. By complying with the conditions of the gospel we can be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the day of Christ.

Those who have experienced a new birth have come out from the world and are separate. They are new creatures in Christ Jesus. They have crucified the old man. They are dead indeed unto sin, but are alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. They have cleansed themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. They have been adopted into the royal family of God, and are the acknowledged "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." They have their Father's mark upon their foreheads, with the assurance that their names are written in the Lamb's book of life.

To be wholly saved, and have the abiding consciousness of an inward spiritual life,—a life not born of the flesh, but a new life in the likeness and image of Christ, is the grand theme and the absorbing thought of every soul who has ever tasted of the good word of life. Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. The new birth prepares us to enjoy life here, and afterwards we have the promise of living with Christ in the kingdom of God upon the new earth.

HUNGERING AND THIRSTING.

D. R. HUNT.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."—MATT. 5: 11.

A person under the influence of hunger and thirst is in a suffering condition;—is very restless, and will devise various means to obtain food and drink. So when the poor sinner sees in the light of divine truth that he is pining away for want of the true meat and drink of the gospel, it begets in him this hungering and thirsting after righteousness. The righteousness spoken of, I think, must be Christ. For we read—"Who of God is made unto us righteousness." "Taste and see how good the Lord is." The Savior admonished those who sought him for the loaves and fishes, in the language of Isaiah, not to labor for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life. Jesus says, "I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Hence, blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after Christ, for they shall be filled.

Many desire happiness, and none ever intend to lose eternal life. But they do not want Christ. They are like the young lady who rejected the hand of the king's son. She desired to dwell in his splendid mansion, wear those pearls and jewels and that crown of gold; but she saw no comeliness or beauty in him that she should desire him. The poor heart-broken penitents hunger and thirst after Christ. He appears unto them as the chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely. "As an apple tree among the trees of the wood," so is Christ among the sons of men to them. For they know if they have Christ they will have all things to enjoy. They are in a blessed condition, viewed from a gospel stand-point. They now seek and find a fulness in Christ.

Jesus says, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him"; and whom the Father draws, will Christ raise up again at the last day to live forever. It follows, then, that those who hunger and thirst after righteousnes shall never suffer the second death.

The Word says of the wicked, in contrasting their condition with those who hunger and thirst, "My servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry; behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty." Their condition is a blessed one, for they come to Christ and receive the spirit of adoption; then how naturally they cry, Abba, Father, and are recognized as his children. They are no longer aliens, but have received the acknowledgment of citizenship;—are joint-heirs with Christ—heirs of God to eternal life. They may be troubled on every side, perplexed, persecuted, cast down, but not destroyed. They are pressing on to certain victory. Their eyes are on the prize at the end of the race.

David hungered and thirsted after righteousness, or Christ, and was filled or satisfied as far as the fulfillment of the promise referred to this life; but he had an eye to the future life. He says in Ps. 17: 15—"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Then with David and all the patriarchs, and all the redeemed, we shall be satisfied and go in through the gates into the city.

"MYSTERY OF INIQUITY."

HENRY PRATT.

Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians had caused them to believe that the coming of Christ was at hand. In his second epistle he corrects that impression by saying, "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."

Here, then, are two events to take place after Paul's day, before Christ comes: 1st. The falling away. 2nd. The revelation of that man of sin, the son of perdition. In other words, "the mystery of iniquity," and "that wicked were to be revealed." The first to be taken away, the second developed. Has the first appeared, and been taken out of the way?

There are brought to view in the Scriptures two mysteries, one of goodness, the other of wickedness. One called the "mystery of God," "mystery of the kingdom," etc.; the other is called "mystery of the woman," mystery of Babylon," "mystery of iniquity," evidently referring to the same power—the papacy. In Mr. Butler's Universal History, he makes the same application. On page 310 he says: "The labors of Luther and the light of the Reformation had disclosed the mysteries of iniquity, and shown to a certain portion of Europe the fallacy and corruption of auricular confession, the sale of indulgences, pardon and remission of sins, the absurdity of purgatory and papal supremacy." Here is the development of the mystery of iniquiry. Has it been "taken out of the way?" There was no chance while this mystery had the supremacy for any other power to arise, but when the Reformation had caused its light to shine on this "iniquity," the "Illumini" dealt a heavy blow upon that fated mystery, from which she never fully recovered. But it was not for France to take her away, but the ten kings in Italy are to do that work. They did sit in judgment upon the "dominion" of papacy (temporal power of the Pope), and at that critical moment, when they were about to resign their seats because Victor Emanuel would not heed the cry of the people to take Rome, just at this time a telegram was handed in, saying, "Bonaparte is a prisoner at Sedan, and the French have declared a Republic." They sprang to their feet, exclaiming, "We will not resign; we will have Rome before September ends." And they did. September 20th, 1870, her dominion was "taken away," and they are consuming and destroying her unto the end. Therefore this mystery of iniquity can hinder no longer the revelation of "that wicked,"—the "son of perdition."

In our Savior's prayer to the Father, he says he has lost but one, "the son of perdition." Speaking of the same one in John 6: 70, he says: "Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" This son of perdition that was to be revealed is called "Antichrist." He denieth the Father and the Son. This did not Catholicism. But the denial of "Father and Son" is apparent now. "We do not (say they) depend upon the Christ of the Bible for life, neither upon the Jews' Jehovah," but upon the immutable principles of the "immortality of the soul." Thou shalt not surely die," says the devil. "There is no such thing as death," saith this son of perdition. This is the devil unmasked. This is the predominant element that gathers to the battle of that great day of God Almighty—"Spirit of devils"—"That wicked." Does not "wickedness abound"? Yes. All say yes. And that son of perdition that exalteth himself, and spurns the idea of any aid for eternal life, denying the "Father and Son," is on "the war-path." Therefore take unto yourselves the whole armor of God," that ye may be able to stand in the evil day." Lest we confound the "mystery of iniquity" with "that wicked," we are assured that the former shall fall, be stripped, and be burned by the ten kings, while the latter "shall be consumed by the breath of his (Christ's) mouth, and be destroyed by the brightness of his coming."

HOME.

MRS. L. M. CARLISLE.

Almost home! How intensely thrilling these words sound to us who are languishing upon beds of sickness and pain. Just a little while and we shall be well; so let us not murmur or complain, but try each day to grow in grace and feel that all our sufferings are naught, compared to the endless joys of our beautiful Eden home. No sickness or sorrow can enter there. The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up therein, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. All will be perfection. O such blessed promises to the faithful ones of Christ. I am trying to bear with patience my daily crosses, feeling the Lord chasteneth whom he loveth. We cannot expect to go to heaven upon flowery beds of ease; no we must ever be willing to bow neath his chastening rod. When our poor bodies are racked with agonizing pain, there is none we can look to for sympathy and consolation as our dear Savior. We can in faith behold his ever pitying eye, and hear his voice in sweetest accents saying, Lean upon me, I will carry you safely through. Words fail to express the happiness I have felt since I have consecrated my life to him. Not for all this world would I again stray from the fold. "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he is also become my salvation."

Dear reader, are you out of the ark of safety? if so, let me beseech you to come this moment and give yourself unreservedly to him who gave his life for you. Satan may suggest that your day of grace is gone; do not for one moment hear to the tempter. Cast yourself at Jesus feet and say,—

"Just as I am without one plea,
Save this, that thou did'st die for me,
O Lamb of God, I come."

If you ask in faith, nothing doubting, you surely will receive the blessing. Put your entire trust in him, and you will find that sweet peace that passeth all understanding. Old time is swiftly bearing us onward, and as we glance with an eye of faith into the future, we see we are almost home. O let us press boldly forward in our Master's cause, lest the harvest be past, the summer be ended, and we be not saved.

Swiftly our boat is gliding along,
O'er the silvery waves of time:
And as we approach the unseen shore,
Though the billows roll high and breakers roar,
We will trust in our Savior divine.
With an eye of faith we'll look to Christ,
As time still glides along;
We are almost home, O blessed thought!
We are nearing the haven we long have sought,
Of eternal rest in God.

ABIDE IN ME.

C. MENDENHALL.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15: 7. Although man, being on a state of trial or probation in this life is left with full freedom of will, as an accountable being and a free moral agent, God in his word shows the great advantages of serving and obeying him. He also has, by the instrumentality of his servants, pointed clearly and unmistakably to the folly and final fatality of a course in a direction contrary to his will. In our text the advantages and peculiar blessings of abiding in Christ are set forth. All the promises of present help and future rewards are subject to certain requirements or conditions, which must be complied with, ere we can without a wicked presumption, expect them to be realized.

In order to have our prayers effectual in their results, we must abide, dwell, live in Christ through faith, having his words rooted and grounded in our hearts, ever prompting us to good deeds, and perfect obedience to his commands.

To abide in Christ we must eschew all evil, serving him with full purpose of heart. Half-hearted partial service is not acceptable; for he desires the living sacrifice of all our time, talents and possessions, making all things subservient to the cause of righteousness. We cannot live in sin and in righteousness at the same time; there being no neutral ground, we all are either serving God or Satan. Physically it is impossible to walk in opposite directions at once, and morally we are not able to pursue the narrow way of life and the broad way to death cotemporaneously.

A tree is judged by its fruits; so we, if we are living in Jesus, will bear fruits of goodness, righteousness and truth, showing by all our actions, dealings and purposes that we are joined to the living vine, bearing as fruits those deeds which are pleasing in the sight of him who knows the inmost thoughts of our being, and will ever help us in the great conflict with the flesh, the world and the devil.

Our Savior says, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide it the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth, as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned."

Let us then heed the words of him who spake as man never did, who was endued with all wisdom, and died for poor, fallen, evil man. Help us heavenly Parent, to join ourselves to Jesus, that we may not be cast off to wither and be burned up. The great burning day is drawing near; do we abide in the ark of safety? Do we have confidence in him who alone can save? Let us all make our salvation sure—leave the world with its vanity, its grandeur, its will-worship, its pride and evil, and be rejected, despised, if need be for Jesus.

May his words abide in us, rooting out vain show, pride, iniquity, giving us plainness, humility and godliness; then shall our prayers be acceptable and powerful with God; then shall we be rejoiced to see the many signs of the soon coming of Jesus to destroy, refine, restore and save. These events draw nigh; let us fill up our lamps, assume a watchful attitude and be in cheerful readiness for all that may come upon the earth.

"His arm shall well sustain
The children of his love;
The ground on which their safety stands
No earthly power can move."

AMOS 8: 11.

J. F. MARQUAND.

"A famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord."

It would be invidious for me to assert that there is now in 1874 a famine in America, and yet the facts in the case bear me out. I say the people are starving for spiritual food or aliment. The prophets and apostles spoke in their writings and pictured graphically the status and condition of these last days in which we live, that there would be a great dearth of sound truth and doctrine, while at the same time the people would have itching ears, listening to uninspired men who preach after the wisdom of this world and old wives' fables;—men who hold the truth in unrighteousness; from such we are commanded to turn away.

But how are we to know or distinguish between truth and error? This grand secret is made known to those who humble themselves before God, looking to him for light and knowledge. "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me; but a stranger will they not follow." Truth is only to be obtained by searching and digging for it; and when we get it, it will make us free. And when the truth is accompanied by the Holy Spirit, it produces purity and sanctification. "Buy the truth and sell it not."

Again I ask, Why are the people starving? Because they hear not the words of eternal life. They do not eat "the bread of life which cometh down from heaven, which if a man eat he shall live forever." It is not enough that your intellect is fed, and your reason and judgment convinced; but your affections must be spiritualized and brought into sympathy with Christ and his cause. Your highest loves and preferences must be united to the great Master, and you stand in constant readiness for what God may send. You must be "dead to this world and alive to God." Not frustrating grace by slothfulness and inaction, but living a life of pure integrity and goodness. In order to secure this you must feed on truth and abjure all error and vanity.

The grand truths of these last days, such as salvation from sin,—the quickening power of the Holy Ghost,—the redemption that is in the cross,—the immutable promises of Jehovah that cannot lie,—the setting up of God's kingdom in an eternal state,—the certainty and security of the righteous,—the glory, power and majesty of the elect, according to the Scriptures,—the gathering of the wheat into the garner and the burning up of the tares,—the fulness and sufficiency of Christ,—the longing desire of God to save mankind, and his efforts in this direction, and the final triumph of God's people;—all these subjects and many more will be the study and theme of the christian.

But what shall I say of those who care for none of these things?—whose lives are devoted to pleasure, to selfishness and sin?—whose daily food is husks and vanity, and who seem to live a dreamy, unsatisfying, unsubstantial life? None of the promises of God are for them while they neglect and turn from the wholesome instructions of God their Maker. None of the delights and joys of a renewed soul ever enter their breast; and they live on like the lower order of creation, their feet resting on a sandy foundation exposed to sudden death and despair.

O, poor sinner! turn to God. Then you will begin to live and walk in "wisdom's ways," which are "ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." But if you should not turn to God, repent and reform, endless punishment will be your portion, and where all the good go you can never come.

— That a bush should burn, is no marvel; but that it should not be consumed in burning is justly miraculous. God chooses not ever great subjects wherein to exercise his power; it is enough that his power is great in the smallest.

— Life is a short day; but it is a working-day. Activity may lead to evil; but inactivity cannot be led to good.

THE DIVINE NATURE.

Nature is the qualities, attributes, or governing principles which make up the constitution or character of a being. The word is from natus which signifies born, or produced; and implies that produced or transmitted by the parents. A parent can transmit only his own nature or constitutional attributes to his offspring, so that each distinct class of men and of animals produce in their offspring the particular characteristic of their own nature. The African cannot produce in his son the nature of an Indian, but only the attributes of an African. The dog cannot produce in its offspring the nature of a lamb, nor the lion of the bullock.

Adam, by his fall, lost the purity and holiness of the nature transmitted to him by God, his heavenly Father, and received from Satan, his sinful father, the attributes of a depraved, wicked nature. The character of our acts always corresponds to the principles of our nature. Christ said to the Jews, "If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham;" that is, if they were Abraham's children they would have his nature, which would produce the same works in them that it did in him. He also said to them, Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." He showed that the devil was a "murderer," and "a liar," "and abode not in the truth;" consequently the same nature in them will make them lie about Christ and his followers, and murder them, and when they tell the truth they will "believe it not."

Christ said to his disciples, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." The argument is clear and explicit, that if we have a nature or attributes like his, so that we by the controlling power of that nature can treat men as he treats them, we have a right to be called the children of God. John says, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew him not." This bestowment is the divine nature which the Father transmits to every believer through the atonement and intercession of Christ, by the agency of the Holy Spirit. The characteristic attribute, and all-controlling element of that nature is divine love. This nature is internal and invisible to men's natural perception, therefore they do not see anything in the christian, divine and God-like any more than they did in Jesus. They looked upon him simply as a Nazarene and unlearned carpenter. They saw in him no superiority of character, no divinity or example to be imitated, or authority to be obeyed.

The divine nature is received through faith in the promise of God that it shall be given to those who believe. Peter says, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." He then expresses the important truth that after receiving the divine nature, we should make additions to faith, knowledge, temperance, etc., for he says, "If these things be in you and abound," that is, increase, "they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." "These things" are the attributes and legitimate results of the divine nature. Virtue, knowledge and charity are constituent elements of this nature, and when made active by the Holy Spirit, they produce temperance, patience and brotherly kindness; and when these elements "abound," that is, increase in quantity, their fruits will also be extended; as the labor of a man exceeds that of a child.

It is this divine nature given us of God through our faith in Christ, that constitutes us the children of God. This is the first instalment of God's image restored to fallen man. Paul testifies to this when he says, "Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him who created him." When we are converted, the old man, or the sinful nature is put off; it is held in subjection to the new man, or divine nature, which is called "Christ in you," or the attributes of his nature in you, which he says "is renewed" (made new or complete a second time) after (according to) the image of him (God) who created him."

God originally created man in his own image, both physically and morally. In the fall he lost the image or completness of both. By Christ he may have the perfection of both restored. The moral image was first lost by unbelief, and must be first restored by faith. The body was cursed because sin existed in the moral nature, and will be restored to perfection in God's image because of righteousness in that nature. When we are converted we receive the moral elements of Christ's nature, and when we are resurrected or changed we shall receive his physical nature; for we shall have bodies "fashioned like unto his glorious body." God has not only given us a description of the elements of the divine nature, and their action and results, but he has made an exhibition of that nature ruling the human, under the same pressure of temptation and evil as we have in the person and life of his Son Jesus Christ. We have, therefore, not only the theoretical argument to show what divinity will accomplish for humanity, in this state, but we have a perfect example of it in the history and acts of Jesus.

The question now comes home to us with great force and importance, Are we in possession of that nature? If we are, then the strongest inclinations and established purposes of our hearts will be to act and feel as Jesus did. We shall feel a power in ourslves unnatural and unearthly, a mighty power which will not be controlled by our surroundings, drawing our affections to God and his Anointed, magnifying his law so infinitely just, giving us firm confidence in his Word, a supreme delight in his worship, and more than human love for his people. It will detach us so completely from this world that it will produce no charms for our hearts, or prospects for our hopes. The customs, fashions and practices of worldly people will be to us folly and wickedness. If they offer us their honors we shall reject and dispise them as Jesus did. When Satan comes with his flatteries and frowns to draw us away from Christ, we shall feel a power infinitely above our own hurling him back and binding us to Jesus.

The divine nature produces a high type of christianity, a complete separation from the world, and an entire surrender to God; for how can God's nature be at war with himself? We cannot be, at the same time, partially governed by a satanic nature, and partially by a divine, and gradually make the balances turn for one and against the other. We either gather with Christ or we scatter abroad. We are for him or against him. There is no half way place or neutral ground. The Bible presents but two classes; one following Christ, the other Satan.

The Christian in this state is subject to errors of judgment, and the weaknesses of his fallen nature, with the adversary seeking to ensnare him through his infirmities, and is liable, without design, to do wrong—do as Jesus would not have done, and afterward see that it was wrong, and feel very sorry for the act. But such a deed is not actual sin; for the design was to do right, and sin is doing that which is known to be wrong. The divine nature will not allow its possessor, who is governed by it (and it will not remain where it does not govern), to do that which at the time he knows to be wrong. The ruling passion of his heart will be to please God in all things; to magnify the riches of his grace by exhibiting a sinless life. What a wonderful thought that God should take a sinner, polluted and vile, and wash him in a fountain of purification and cleansing, so powerful and eradicating, that the virus of death is extracted, and the stain of sin taken away, leaving the heavenly whiteness of saintly purity! What an elevation of humanity, to be classed with the divine family in heaven, to be called the "children of God," the "brethren" of Jesus! To have such God-like principles take possession of us, controlling our thoughts, words and deeds, and receive such titles, and enjoy such privileges as to have the holy angels sent to minister unto us. It is the Christ in us, which gives us the wonderful distinctions and associations. It is the divine nature of Jesus in us, in which God sees his own image, and therefore acknowledges our "heirship."

All that God requires of us after receiving these heavenly principles is to allow them to lead and control us in all things, without restraint; for it is that nature which will control the acts of the saints in glory forever. The spiritual moral elements of christian character here are exactly the same that they will be in the kingdom of God. Christian experience here is a trial, or test, of our spiritual character, or nature, whether it be divine or carnal.

This, therefore, is an important subject to be understood by us; for upon it are hinged our eternal interests. We should distinctly understand that without the divine nature we must be eternally lost, and with it we are made sure of the kingdom of God. We may know that we have it when the controlling power of our heart causes us to love God supremely, and reverence his Word as the safe and glorious rule of our life, to receive his Son as our adorable Redeemer, the Holy Spirit as a divine Comforter, and contemplate the "glorious appearing" of Jesus, and the establishment of his kingdom under the whole heavens as the fruition of our hope. THE TWO LAST ANGELS OF REVELATION 14.

(Concluded.)

The next angel's work will be in the department of fire; and, as we have said, will be connected directly with the reaping or gathering angel's work. The fire is represented as coming in two installments, one before and the other after the coming of the Lord. The Psalmist says, "He cometh to judge the earth. . . . . A fire goeth before him." Daniel saith, "A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him." Again he says, "I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame. The Revelator saw the same power and described the same scene, saying, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire. . . . For in one hour so great riches is come to naught; . . . and as many as trade by the sea stood afar off, and cried when they saw the smoke of her burning." This burning is before Christ's coming and the final conflagration; for at that time all the elements will melt with fervent heat, but at this time men will stand on the earth and see the smoke of the terrible burning. In this, great riches will be consumed; but in the last fire the people will be burned up.

We think that this prediction of the burning of the great city, representing the Roman church, may embrace not only the church property of the city of Rome, but of all the church property belonging to the Harlot. The angel says, "The woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Here the city represents just what the woman represents,—just as many people and just as much wealth. The burning of the riches of the city is the burning of the riches of the woman. The angel says, "The great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath." The passage shows that when Rome falls, the cities of the nations will fall also, and that the dividing of the city into three parts has reference to its overthrow.

Nearly every prediction in Rev. is taken from the Old Testament prophecies, and this passage was evidently quoted from the fifth chapter of Ezekiel. Jerusalem is frequently represented in the Scriptures as sustaining the same relation to the apostate Jewish church that Rome does to the apostate Christian church. In Ezekiel Jerusalem is presented for destruction, and represented as divided into three parts, the same as Babylon or Rome,—the first part to be destroyed by fire, the second "with a knife," sword, or war. The last part "thou shalt scatter in the wind." In this typical overthrow of the Jews and Jerusalem, the destruction was not confined to Jerusalem and the people in it, for the prophet proceeds to say, "In all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished." Ch. 6:6. All the cities where their altars were found in their "high places," or ornamented places of worship, were "made desolate." In harmony with this the angel said to John, "And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath." All the cities of the nations where Rome's high places and altars are found will be visited by the judgments upon Rome.

As the Roman church is connected with many nations and their cities, so when Rome falls the "cities of the nations" will fall by fire and sword, when the cup of God's wrath is poured out upon great Babylon. Some of these confederate classes combine especially for the purpose of destroying the power of Catholicism. The German Empire, Austria and Italy, have formed an alliance for that purpose. It was this grand object which caused the ten Italian states to make such heroic exertions to unite under Victor Emanuel. The Alfieri Society of Italy and the Communists of France were organized principally for that purpose. If these combinations are the result of the gathering angel's work, then we should expect that these hostile bodies will next be guided by the angel of fire, who will cause them to make provision for the burning of great wealth, especially that of the Catholic church, and particularly that of her meeting-houses and church property.

We think the second angel's work is as clearly manifested in its incipient stage as the first. This is exhibited in the Alfieri Society's 6th article of agreement, as follows: "In case of foreign war, the society shall proceed to operate upon its field of action, even before hostilities shall have been formally declared. First, by burning as many churches as possible, and especially the Vatican." In the recent war in France, the Communists acted upon the same principle, and manifested a preconcerted arrangement to burn all the church property in Paris; first the meeting-houses, then the priests' residences, and, if necessary, to crush the Ultramontane party, the entire city. They also manifested their arrangement in harmony with the prophecy that the "knife" should follow the torch; for they assassinated the Bishop of Paris with a number of his subordinate priests.

The leaders of these societies are infidels and atheists, and would doubtless burn the property of any class who should oppose them in the execution of their plans. The Communists are evidently so affiliating with the various workingmen's associations, in Europe and this country, that they are infusing their incendiary principles into these classes generally, so that it is becoming common for men to be avenged for imaginary or real wrongs, by the torch. These elements are now seriously threatening New York, as the following communications will show:—

"THE CHURCHES IN THE CITY GUARDED BY THE POLICE.

On Thursday evening last, before Superintendent Matsell left his office at Police Head-quarters, a detective from the east side of the city waited upon him and imparted what was doubtless some important information. President Smith, of the Police Board, was hurriedly summoned from the Metropolitan Hotel, and a long and secret consultation ensued between Mr. Smith and the Superintendent. The result of this consultation was the immediate issue, by telegraph, of an order to the Police Captains to instruct the patrolmen on duty to keep a sharp lookout for all churches on their respective posts, and to arrest all suspicious characters found lurking about the churches. The information which prompted this order has not been made public, but it is supposed to have reference to threats made by the leaders of the Communists of this City against all places of worship which are obnoxious to the principles of the Commune. Since the order was issued, the Police have been carefully watching the churches, but no arrests have been reported as having been made in pursuance of the order."—N. Y. Times.

LATER NEWS.

"New York, Wed., Jan. 28th. Superintendent Matsell does not disguise his belief that the fire in St. Bridget's Church, Tompkins Square, yesterday, was the work of Communists, and that further attempts are apprehended. Particular care will be taken to guard every church in the city. At the Turn Hall in Fourth street, last evening, a special meeting was held by an association of German ultra radicals, known as the German Freethinkers' Union, which of late has occasioned a considerable stir by its agitations in sympathy with the workingmen who on Tuesday, the 13th inst., attempted a demonstration in Tompkins Square."—Boston Globe.

"St. Bridget's Church in New York was fired in two places last evening by the Communists because its pastor had denounced them."

This terrible picture is growing darker and more threatening every week. Still later news says:—

"THE FIRE AT MEMPHIS INCENDIARY.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 4th. The burning of the Memphis and Louisville Railroad machine shop last night was done by John McCarthy, formerly a fireman on the road, but who is now employed on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. The entire loss is $110,000. Two hundred men were thrown out of employmemt."

"INCENDIARY FIRES AT HAMILTON.

Hamilton, Ont., Feb. 3d. During last night attempts were made to burn various churches in this city. In the Primitive Methodist, Wesleyan and Centenary churches, the books, seats, etc., were piled together and set fire to, but burned out without damage to the buildings. St. Andrews Church, however, was more unfortunate, being almost ruined. The incendiary also attempted unsuccessfully to set fire to the office of William York, lumber dealer."

These startling developments of a growing inclination to burn property to gratify the most depraved natures is not confined to the foreign Communists, but is taking a wide range among men everywhere. Fires are certainly becoming more frequent and alarming than formerly, notwithstanding buildings are made more secure against fire, and the appliances for its extinguishment are more ample and effective. Insurance companies are alarmed, and institute the most thorough watchfulness, and are rapidly raising their rates, and confess that it is the moral risk which is increasing and not the accidental. An extensive insurance agent told us that he considered the "moral risk now much larger than the accidental"; that is, that there is more insured property burned by design than by accident.

It has been published to the world, and we suppose it is true, that the Communists and many of the Labor Reform men have determined that there shall be a more equal distribution of wealth among the people, so that the laborer shall receive a larger equivalent for his toil. That this shall be accomplished peaceably, if possible; if not, by force. If the wealth of the capitalists cannot be peaceably or forcibly distributed, then it shall be burned. Long continued efforts have been made to accomplish the object quietly, but have signally failed. Many attempts have been made to do it by war and revolution, but they have also failed. It now appears that many of these men have come to the conclusion that the torch is the only means by which they can humble the aristocratic ruling classes, and so gain their object. It is perfectly apparent that fifty thousand men, well selected and prepared, distributed through the cities and large towns of this country, and all apply the torch at the same time, might produce more distress and destruction in a day than twenty times their number with the sword and cannon.

This is a terrible subject to contemplate, and would make the heart of a lover of our race convulse with anguish to realize its approach. We would not be understood to attempt to predict definitely the events before us, or be dogmatical in our interpretations of the prophecies, but that these angels have commenced to do their work, and that terrible judgments from God are now hanging over this world, to be poured upon the wicked, oppressive governments, and the blood-thirsty, scoffing multitudes, we do most devoutly and sincerely believe. Who can open his eyes and not see that blood, fire, and pillars of smoke are now responding to the sacred words of Inspiration. Our dailies are constantly saying, "Murder and Fire!" "Murder and Fire!" This is truly "a grand and awful time." It is grand to those who mount the watch-tower of prophetic vision, and sweep the glass over the scenes of six past millennaries, and witness the darkness and wail of the curse, now intensified with the convulsions of mingled hope and despair. It is grand as the veil withdraws, and a new and curseless world rises from the dust and confusion of sin. Over there the day is endless, and the inhabitants immortal. No poverty pinches, or fear disturbs the eternal rest. May those bright shores feel the pressure of our happy feet as we gain the long-expected home promised the waiting church of Christ.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

We parted with our readers about noon Saturday, Jan. 24th. We were then within about an hour's ride of Sacramento, the capital of California. It was a pleasant day, with warm sunshine. As we approached the city, we passed some good-looking wheat fields that now promise a rich reward for the farmer's toil. The live oaks, with their mistletoe boughs, and moss-covered branches are scattered over the land, and add a charm to the landscape, and afford an agreeable shelter to the cattle from the heat of the summer sun.

When we arrived at Sacramento, at 1 P. M., we met at the depot Bro. Ficks, and the two younger Bro. Nichols. The latter we had known in Worcester, Mass. They have been in California some six months. We learn that the meetings have been kept up in Sacramento since last spring, and an anxiety is felt to have another series of revival meetings as soon as possible. Sr. Van Cott (Methodist) is now holding meetings in the city with promising success, but is to close her labors in California to-morrow, and return East. We learn she has held meetings in San Francisco; with glorious results. We hear good reports of her labors wherever bestowed. The papers also speak of Mrs. Mary B. Pinkham, a Quakeress lady, who is having good meetings in San Francisco. She is said to be a devoted woman.

Leaving Sacramento, with an intention of returning to hold a series of meetings, we hastened on to San Francisco, a distance of one hundred and thirty-eight miles. When we arrived at Oakland, five miles from San Francisco, we were met by about a dozen Brn. and Srs., including their pastor, Bro. S. Howell, who had come thus far to greet us on our arrival, and one Bro. came some fourteen miles. We had much reason to rejoice, when we learned of their steadfastness in the service of the Lord. Among them were Bro. and Sr. Place, formerly of Portsmouth, N. H., who have most kindly entertained us the last three winters we have spent in San Francisco. They are doing well in the Lord.

Sabbath, Jan. 25th, we had good meetings in the Grand Central Hall, corner of Market and Sixth streets, where they have held meetings during the last year. We had much occasion for joy in finding most of the Brn. and Srs. steadfast in the hope of the gospel, rejoicing in the truth, and specially interested in the work of preparation needed to meet our coming Lord. Considering circumstances, we think they have done well. Bro. Howell, their pastor, is a true man, consecrated to Christ.

Monday, January 16th, we went down the beautiful Santa Clara Valley, to visit Bro. and Sr. Fassett, Bro. and Sr. Reed, and Bro. and Sr. Wilson. Their pleasant, happy homes are about forty-eight miles south-east from San Francisco. We found them all as well as usual, delighted with the country, living satisfied that Santa Clara, with its surrounding towns, is now the most delightful spot on earth for a home. We saw Bro. Fassett planting peas Jan. 29th, and he had some coming up. In the season he has an abundance of nice fruits. When at dinner with him, he had raisins of his own making, and nice pears, which have kept well till now. We attended two union meetings in the Presbyterian meeting-house at Santa Clara. Methodists, Baptists, Disciples, Presbyterians and Adventists are all at work together for the salvation of the people, and the Lord is blessing the effort. A union meeting for the promotion of holiness is held Sunday afternoons in the Methodist church. We learn they are most heavenly seasons of refreshing, and have resulted in establishing the union meetings now being held. A daily noon prayer meeting is also commenced, to be held in the hall occupied by the Advent church. The prospect is very encouraging for a good revival in Santa Clara during the remaining portion of the winter. It is blessed to see christians from different denominations thus uniting in Christ to save sinners, and preparing for the great day of the Lord. We received a cordial greeting from the minister whom we met in the meetings.

Wednesday, Jan. 28th, Bro. Jones came to Santa Clara to see if we would go to San Jose and hold a discussion with a Mr. Cheney, a Spiritualist lecturer, who has defied any one to meet him in debate, and support the opposite of what he was proclaiming in his lectures. His bold, defiant spirit against the Bible and its Author, was quite like that manifested by Goliath, when he defied the armies of Israel. Thinking the Lord might provide a sling and stones with which to meet this champion of error, we went back with Bro. Jones, met Mr. Cheney, and arranged to begin a discussion in Music Hall the next evening, to continue six evenings. The subject for debate was stated as follows:

RESOLVED, That the phenomena of Spiritualism proceed from demons. We learn this Mr. Cheney was put in prison in New York for blasphemy. He is a lawyer by profession, but is now engaged in earnest efforts to establish Spiritualism, destroy confidence in the Bible and the Christian religion. He is a ready speaker, abounding in sarcasm, ridicule, and witticisms at the expense of sacred things. He has been lecturing in Oregon during the past year. He has paid much attention to Astrology, and ancient Mythology, to which he resorts for much of his proof.

We discussed the subject Thursday and Friday evenings before crowded and intelligent audiences, when it became apparent from his defense, that six evenings would not be needed. At first he only wanted two, but we pressed for six, expecting from him a strong defense of Spiritualism, but we think it was the weakest we have ever had from any opponent in debate. He seemed anxious to enter into a discussion on the divine inspiration of the Bible. Accordingly, at the close of the debate Friday evening, we made arrangements to discuss Spiritualism but one evening more, Monday, Feb. 2nd and then change to an examination of the Bible itself, and continue it four evenings.

In one of his speeches, he defied the God of the Bible to strike him down. He is very severe on all sacred things which christians admire. An unconverted man said the blasphemous talk made the cold chills run over him. He seems mad against God and the Bible and all who support them. He is opposed to prayer, and treats it with contempt. So far as his defense of Spiritualism was concerned, we think his failure was complete. This was the public sentiment. To-morrow (Tuesday) evening, Feb. 3d, we are to commence the discussion of the divine origin of the Bible. Great interest is felt in the city on the subject, and important consequences are involved. Our trust is in the Lord, believing that he will afford special help in the defense of his truth. More anon. M. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

When the chapel was built in Vallejo, it was called "The first light-house on the Pacific coast." The church occupying it has been prospered graciously since its erection. Now another "light-house" has been built on the coast, in San Francisco, and was dedicated for christian worship last Sabbath, Feb. 1st. It is centrally and pleasantly located, well arranged, modest and tasteful in its appearance, affording a place where our Brn. and Srs. are pleased to invite their friends and neighbors. We rejoice with the church in their happy success in this worthy enterprise. We feel confident with them that coming prosperity will crown their efforts to spread the light and truth in this city. The day of dedication will have a conspicuous place among the memories of the past. There were joyful greetings of christians, whose hearts glowed with warm love for Jesus and each other, while they are longingly waiting for the coming of their heavenly King, expecting to see him soon in all his glory. We felt it a blessing to be associated with such a people in these last days. We have no desire to seek other company. We are more and more satisfied and delighted, as we are drawing near the time of the consummation of our hope. Help us praise the Lord for leading us among the people who love the appearing of Jesus. Glory to his name for ever. Dear Brn. and Srs., be sure and consecrate all to the Lord, and then wait patiently for his coming. M. G.

THE CENTENNIAL FAIR.

The great Centennial National Fair, to be held in Philadelphia in 1876, in commemoration of the declaration of independence in 1776, is receiving much attention, and is expected to far excel anything ever seen on the continent, or perhaps in the world.

The size and style of the buildings for the occasion are now decided. The main pavilion is to be in the form of a parallelogram, with the following dimensions: inside length of floor, between the fronts of galleries, one thousand six hundred and sixty-nine feet; inside breadth, seven hundred and sixty-five and one-half feet; outside length of floor, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six feet. This length is adopted to correspond with the important event to be celebrated. Another one hundred feet is added for porches, making the extreme outside length one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six feet, to correspond with the centennial year of the celebration. The area of the floor of the building will cover twenty-six acres, including one acre for courts; and besides these, there are to be three acres of galleries, and one and a half for offices, restaurants, etc., making in all thirty and a half acres.

All this will be a very meagre affair when compared with the New Jerusalem, the city of the great King, which will contain ninety million acres. Let us all live so that we can be at the "world's peace jubilee," in the New Jerusalem when the saints will celebrate their independence from sin through the blood of Calvary's Lamb.

"O hail! happy day."

THE PROMISED STRENGTH.—Dr. Doddridge was walking out one day in a very depressed state of mind. His trials at that time were peculiarly heavy; he saw no way of deliverance from them, and he was greatly discouraged. As he passed along, the door of a little cottage was standing open, and he heard a child's voice reading the words, "And as thy days, so shall thy strength be." The effect produced on his saddened feelings was indiscribable; his despondency vanished and his heart was filled with peace and joy. Yes, one simple promise from God is enough to chase away our fears and cheer our hearts. Our wants and weaknessess are many, but he knows them all, and is both able and willing to supply our every need.

— Our sufferings from malignity abroad are not so great as the sufferings from malignity within.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

NOTES BY THE WAY IN EAST TENN.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

FROM J. A. CARGILE.

Dear Brethren:—To-day, Jan. 22d, I start to preach the news of the Lord's coming in a new field. I am to stop over at Carpenter, and fill an appointment, but a heavy rain will prevent the people coming out. Here I met Bro. J. J. Smith, who went to the annual meeting with me at Ooltewah (Bethel church). Friday, 23d, left Carpenter on a mixed train for Chattanooga, and as we stop at the different stations I am deeply interested reading the "Plan of Redemption," by Wellcome & Gould.

Twelve o'clock. We are in Chattanooga, and seeing the careless rush of business people without the fear of God before their eyes. I tell Bro. Smith that I feel deeply impressed to give them a judgment warning on the streets; but he thinks it will be better to wait till the weather becomes more mild, and so I yield to his idea. Left Chattanooga at 3½ P. M., on freight for Ooltewah, where we arrived at 5 P. M. Stopped with Bro. John W. Smith and family, and rejoice to hear that the church is in a healthy condition, and prospects fair for improvement. Saturday, 24th, met with the church. Bro. Smith preached a profitable discourse on the duties of christians at the beginning of the new year. The church then proceeded to elect her officers for the year, and though we feel unworthy and incapable to fill the place of Elder, they would agree to make no change in any of the officers.

Sunday, 10 A. M. We tried to preach for the edification of those who love the Lord; after which we celebrated the Lord's Supper, in which we felt that we were truly showing forth the Lord's death, and saying to the people, We are daily looking for him to return. Sunday, 7 P. M., Bro. Smith preached here again, while we went to a new place (Pine Hill), where Bro. Davis had been once or twice. A large crowd and good attention. One minister (Bro. Harnbright) was present. Said he was "afraid the literal word did not go deep enough into the mystery of God's works,—that some things in the Scriptures are too deep for our finite minds to comprehend." We could but wonder that an all-wise Creator would leave us his revealed will in such a mystery that we cannot "comprehend" it.

Monday, 26th, back to Bethel. Tried to preach again on true gospel faith. Stayed over night with Bro. and Sr. Cullar. Tuesday, 27th, started for the cars at 4½ A. M. At Ooltewah we parted with Bro. S., and in company with Sr. Cullar started for Mouse Creek, Tenn. Stopped with Bro. and Sr. Fleming, who are pious, exemplary christians of the Baptist church. Too much rain for meeting. Wednesday, 28th. Spent the day in what is termed fireside preaching, with some warm-hearted christians, who were very familiar, and proved by their works that there is no prejudice in a heart filled with God's love. At night preached in the Academy building. Good attention. Thursday, 27th, spent the day in fireside talk, by special invitation, at the residence of a Sr. Wilson, who is a Baptist; but after reading some tracts which we had sent there some time ago, has come out clear on the life and death question. Preached again at night in the Academy, and tried to show from the Bible and by the aid of the chart that "the kingdom of God is now nigh at hand." At the close a good young Bro. asked a question about Lazarus. We were glad of the privilege of showing him in the light of the Bible that "the beggar died" before being carried, and hence was not alive when carried. Friday, 30th, left for Philadelphia, Tenn., where we met Bro. and Sr. Phifer at the depot, who received us and entertained us during our stay in the village with every mark of brotherly love.

On inquiring about a house to speak in, we were informed that an objection was urged against our using the Baptist church, because they had heard of a preacher of our "sort" up in the mountains of North Carolina, "who preached a while, stole a fellow's wife, and left." Hence we were worthy of suspicion. The Methodist brethren very kindly opened their house to me, where I tried to preach at 7 P. M. Much interest. Saturday, 31st, spoke three times, with an increased interest in the congregation.

Sunday, 10 A. M., Feb. 1st. Spoke to a full house. One minister, a young Bro., Eld. J. A. Robinson, of Louden, Tenn., was present. He treated us kindly, though said we had preached some things new to him. At 1.20 P. M. we bade adieu to many warm-hearted christians, who kindly said, "Come back again." At 3 o'clock back at Mouse Creek. Tried to speak on the "signs of the times." A special request was given us to speak again at 7 o'clock, but we are so wearied in body that we think best to take a little rest, but promised to speak to-morrow, the Lord willing, at the depot, as there will be school in the Academy.

We had forgotten to say that, at our Sabbath meeting in Philadelphia, the people so earnestly desired the truth that many questions were asked, and we tried to give conclusive answers.

Monday, A. M., Feb. 2nd. Learned that we cannot preach in the depot unless we send a dispatch to Knoxville and obtain permission from the proper authorities. A brother replied, "They did not require a dispatch to allow voting or public speaking in the depot." We answered, "No, that is the work of the devil and not of the Lord"; and consequently they needed no dispatch. Another Bro. proposed an idle store-room, but the owner was thought by his actions to be against us. And so we were invited by a Bro. Chestnut to speak in his dwelling. I have never before been so deeply affected by opposition. I felt that, like Paul, I could, if need be, stand on the stairs and after beckoning silence tell them, "Master is coming." I tried to speak from the words, "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" We had truly a parting blessing, and realized the truth of the language, "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." Praise the Lord, there are many warm-hearted pilgrims in Mouse Creek, who are willing to lay aside the veil and look at God's blessed Word. And although new to them, their kind attention shows they love and appreciate truth above tradition. I feel that in the kingdom I shall meet some who have taken such pains to entertain me—one of the Lord's unprofitable servants. We shall never forget to pray for them, and also that God will open the eyes of those who treated us coolly, for we feel sure "they know not what they do."

At 8 P. M. arrived home,—found all in the hands of the Lord, just where I left them. O, praise God for his goodness to me, for I sometimes feel that I am not worthy the confidence of the people, much less the mercies of my precious Jesus. I am compelled to stay at home and rest a day or two, to recruit my health and strength. Several other calls are waiting for me. O, dear Brn. and Srs., pray for me.

Stevenson, Ala., Feb. 2nd, 1874.

CONFERENCE.--NEW BEDFORD.

In company with Bro. Couch, I left home for the Conference at New Bedford, on Wed., 28th inst. We arrived in time for the evening meeting. There was a good attendance to hear the preached word. As Bro. Couch could stay but one evening, he gave us the first sermon touching the vibrating notes of Adventism by giving chronological measurements of events that certify our nearness to the coming glory. Freedom of the Spirit prevailed, making it easy to preach and blessed to hear. It was an evening of praise, and all seemed quickened together in Christ Jesus, and hoping for better days. After this we had meetings mornings, afternoons, and evenings. Our meetings increased daily; so did the interest. There was a lack of ministerial aid. The church also had made up their minds to have many more to care for from abroad, and they were disappointed. But the meeting progressed steadily. Brn. Batchelor, Woodside, Wood, and the pastor, A. M. Higgins, were in attendance, rendering efficient service by filling up the gaps, as well as by preaching. The prayer and conference meetings were deeply interesting, and grew more so until Sunday, when surely we had a love-feast in the morning long to be remembered. Seventy-five testimonies, beside the prayers and singing. It was a blessed, soul-cheering season. Many felt the necessity of being more dead to the world and alive to God. There was a deep impression made on the minds of all that they must be more consecrated to the work of God by denying themselves, and making more effort to save the lost. Many out of Christ were deeply convicted of their sins and almost persuaded to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus. One man, sixty-nine years old, arose and confessed he wanted to be helped to the Savior by the prayers of the church. This gave joy among us, as well as joy in heaven. O the love and mercy of the Lord our Savior in saving to the uttermost all that will come!

Dr. Quint, our Congregational Bro., was in to enjoy Sunday afternoon meeting with us, which added much to the joy of our meeting, as it was an exhibition of christian love and union in its true light. He stopped to the communion, and with us officiated at the Lord's table. This is as it should be. If our good Congregational and other brethren would only come and unite their sympathies with our earnestness for truth, and manifest christian fellowship and the love of Christ, how much better off the world would be. Truth would be more readily received; and no good man would be afraid to preach the coming judgment.

The house was crowded in the evening, and so great was the interest that they concluded to continue the meetings through the next week. The Lord is evidently at work among his people. Let us be where he can work through us. L. BOUTELL.

Obituaries

CAMPBELL. Fell asleep in Christ, Feb. 1st, 1874, Bro. Henry Campbell, of Green Point, Long Island, aged sixty-seven years.

Our brother was a firm believer in the coming of Christ. He expected to see him in 1873. For over thirty years he has been interested in the time of Jesus' coming. He was a firm believer in the sleep of the dead, and that immortality was only to be obtained by a resurrection from the dead. He believed that his sleep would be short. His dear wife shared with him in the same faith, and expects to see him again in the morning. Our brother was beloved by all who knew him. Bro. Flavel, of Newark, spoke at the funeral. He showed that there was no hope of a future life unless Jesus comes again. He made it so plain that it seemed almost impossible for any one to have a doubt in relation to it. We expect to see our brother soon. God grant it may be so.

DERKEE. Fell asleep Jan. 3d, 1874, at Hastings, Nebraska, Bro. James Derkee, aged thirty-one years.

Bro. Derkee served in the Union army during the rebellion, and passed the dangers without harm. He embraced Christ and was baptized three years ago. He went west, and died among strangers. A dispatch was sent to his home, and a brother went to see him, but he was dead. He brought him to the home of his brother-in-law, Floyd Co., Iowa, where I tried to comfort a widowed mother, sisters and brothers, from John 11: 23. "Thy brother shall rise again."

P. S. W. DEYO.

TOTMAN. In Richmond, Me., Nov. 5th, 1873, Bro. John H. Totman, aged forty years.

Firmly trusting in Christ, he bore his long confinement with resignation, and made his sick room a place to be coveted by those who love the sweet influences of the divine Spirit; and his calm face in the coffin seemed to glow with the impress of dying grace. Wife, children, parents, brothers, and sister fail not as you promised to meet him in the better land. J. ALBERT LIBBY.

LEAVITT. In Auburn, Me., Sept. 24th, 1873, Mrs. J. Leavitt, aged sixty-five years.

She left an only daughter (who cared for her in her last sickness, and from whose home she was borne to her burial) to greatly miss and mourn her, yet comforted with the hope of future meeting beyond the wrecks of time.

J. ALBERT LIBBY.

YOUNG. In Union, Me., Jan. 16th, 1874, Isadora A. Young, daughter of Mark and Eunice Young, aged nineteen years.

Five years ago she chose Christ for her friend, and was baptized by Bro. N. G. Reed, and ever after walked worthy of her profession.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

KENNY. At Marble Rock, Floyd Co., Iowa, Jan. 21st, 1873, of congestion of the brain, Frank W., only child of Willard N. and Carrie Kenny, aged two years.

Sermon by Levi Lyons, from Job 14: 14.

P. S. W. DEYO.

HUBBARD. At Marble Rock, Floyd Co., Iowa, Nov. 12th, 1873, William Oliver, son of G. F. and S. J. Hubbard, aged four years.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

ESTY. In Boston, Feb. 7th, 1874, of consumption, Susan, wife of William L. Esty, formerly of Woodstock, N. B., aged thirty-three years.

She died in the faith.

GREENE. In River Point, on the 28th of Jan., 1874, Annie A., eldest daughter of Albert C. and Ann E. Greene, in the eleventh year of her age.

LAMB. In North Rutland, Mass., Feb. 1st, Alice W. Lamb, aged three months and ten days.

Words of comfort were spoken from Matt. 18: 14. H. H. TUCKER.

WHITE. In New Bedford, Mass., Jan. 14th, 1874, Emma Case, only child of Phineas and Harriet C. White, aged twenty-eight years.

FOREIGN NEWS.

CALCUTTA, Feb 5. The famine is increasing. It is estimated that 150,000 natives are already severely distressed.

Thirty thousand men are out of work in Vienna.

LONDON, Jan. 17. The prospects of the Government at the next election will probably depend to some extent on their attitude toward the trades unionists. A congress of the latter, said to represent about a million of working men, but this is no doubt an exaggeration, has this week been sitting at Sheffield, and has passed resolutions declaring that no candidate will be supported who will not pledge himself thoroughly to vote for the repeal of the various restrictions on molestation, intimidation, breach of contract, etc., which are found to limit the power of the unions. The Master and Servant act provides for the punishment of breaches of contract; the Criminal Law Amendment act enacts penalties against picketing, rattaning, and other forms of unionist coercion; and the law of conspiracy, which is a part of the general common law, supplies the means of dealing severely with criminal combinations which are dangerous to the public at large. The two statutes apply equally to employer and employed, and the law of conspiracy applies indiscriminately to persons of every class.

It is characteristic of the intolerant and domineering temper of the unionists that, having obtained freedom of action for themselves, they should now demand freedom to coerce other people with impunity. It is impossible to exaggerate the amount of mischief which would be done by relaxing the laws which at present keep them within decent limits. Even as it is they have an enormous power over both their employers and their fellow-workmen, and are guilty of an immense amount of petty tyranny and oppression.

The election has taken place, and the Ministry has been voted down and a new one is to be established.

LONDON, Feb. 12. The heavy gale which prevailed yesterday on the Baltic caused it to overflow along the entire eastern coast of Schleswig Holstein. The dykes protecting the lowlands were burst in many places, and great tracts of country flooded. The damage to property is immense, and serious loss of life is feared.

In seventeen years Spurgeon has received thirteen thousand persons into his church, erected thirty-six chapels in London, and supplied the same with ministers trained in a college of his own founding.

A terrible railway collision happened in Scotland at Boners Junction Jan. 27th. Fifteen persons were killed, twenty-five were injured, three fatally.

LISBON, Feb. 12. The mail steamer from South America reports that the yellow fever continued unabated in Rio, and the cholera is raging with great violence in Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. Thousands of people had fled from those cities.

The French military tribunals engaged in trying Communists, have made 49,066 decisions. No cause of prosecution was pronounced on 24,000, and 23,000 were condemned.

Russia is about to adopt a conscription law by which it is expected to make the strength of the army 2,000,000 within fifteen years.

The German navy is preparing to manufacture a steel gun which will weigh two hundred and sixty thousand lbs. It will require a steam hammer weighing 220,000 lbs. to weld the parts of steel together. Surely men are doing wonderful things to introduce the millennium.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Pittsburg, Penn., Feb. 11. A frightful accident occurred at the steel works of the Cambria Iron Company, Johnstown, Penn., to-day, by which three persons were fatally injured and thirteen others more or less seriously burned. A large ladle, containing five tons of molten steel, was overturned and showered the hot liquid over sixteen men.

Chicago, Feb. 11. John Sheridan, one of the most active thieves in the United States, who robbed Lord Talbot in the Pacific Hotel a month ago, was captured in the Palmer House, this morning. He gave up a large amount of plunder and afterwards shot himself in the head and will probably die.

New York, Feb. 10. Immense frauds have been committed in the Tax Collector's office of Brooklyn. The city was defrauded of amounts ranging from $500,000 to $750,000, and perhaps more.

John C. Henry, chief clerk of U. S. Revenue office at Lynchburg, Va., has stolen $100,000 and departed.

A man named Robert Lane was arrested in New York on Tuesday, for stealing a bag of corn meal. He pleaded hunger and starvation as the cause of his crime, and his appearance did not belie it. His cheeks were pale, hollow and sunken, and his eyes had that long, searching gaze, which only starved men ever show. Judge Kilbreth sentenced Lane to three months in the penitentiary. Richard Fitzpatrick, who was charged with stealing a woolen shirt and two pairs of hose, also pleaded hunger, and further said that his whole family, consisting of a wife and four children, were without food. Judge Kilbreth said that he was sorry, but but under the circumstances he had to find him guilty and would sentence him to the penitentiary.

If they had been defaulters for half a million, they could probably have procured an acquittal for a few thousand dollars. J. C.

DISASTERS IN DECEMBER.—The Committee of Management of the Bureau Veritas has just published the list of maritime disasters reported during the month of December, 1873, concerning all flags. This list gives the following statistics:

Sailing vessels totally lost, 267, viz: 127 English, 31 German, 20 Greek, 16 French, 16 Norwegian, 11 Italian, 10 Russian, 9 American, 6 Spanish, 4 Dutch, 4 Swedish, 3 Austrian, 2 Portuguese, 1 Brazilian and 1 Turkish. In this number are included 9 sailing vessels reported missing.

Steamers totally lost, 31, viz.: 17 English, 4 French, 4 Spanish, 2 German, 1 American and 1 Japanese, In this number are included 9 steamers reported missing.

SERIOUS FIRES.

Stewart's woolen factory, at Mechanicsburg, Ohio, was destroyed by fire. Loss from $15,000 to $18,000.

Martin & Moore's extensive tannery, at Swanton, Vt., on the Missisquoi River, was burned Sunday morning. The loss is $25,000.

A wooden block on the west side Ogdensburg, N. Y., was burned to the ground on Saturday night. The loss amounts to about $20,000.

THE INTERNATIONALISTS.

W. A. A. Cassey, Secretary of the International Association, says the Internationalists of the United States and Great Britain differ from those of the Continent of Europe in that while the latter are willing to overturn governments by revolution, the former believe their objects and aims, which were equality of all and the stoppage of exactions of capital and the oppression of the workingmen, could be established by means of the ballot.

New York, Feb. 11. John Thompson, a private of the 2d Massachusetts Regiment, who lost a leg at Ball's Bluff and has been unsuccessful in obtaining work here, was found in the snow, reduced to a skeleton, a few nights since, and taken to the hospital, where he has since died from the long lack of food. The body weighed sixty pounds.

THE Boston Transcript says that persons in position to know of the matter, state that the loss of interest and dividends, and the shrinkage on railway shares and securities of railroads at the South and West, have occasioned much more personal distress in Boston than was caused by the great fire in that city.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 9th. William D. Coleman, Clerk of the Board of Public Works, has purloined a large amount of State bonds from the sinking funds, and when found guilty he took eight ounces of chloroform, and when the officer entered his room he cut his throat.

THE Communism of our working classes may be attributed in no small measure to the immense influx, since the Franco-Prussian war, of foreigners imbued with the doctrines of the political incendiaries of the Old World. The Frenchized-Teutons, who have swarmed to our shores during the past two years, are social nitro-glycerine.

MISSION TENT.—There has been a call for subscriptions to furnish a Mission Tent. The old Mission and the Mass. Conference Tent have both been worn out in the service. The time will soon come for Tent meetings, which is one of the best, if not the very best way to reach the people. The cause demands double the sacrifice and effort to enlighten and save that we are making. Shall we want for a Tent? Shall we want means and men to make an onward movement to save men by pulling them out of the fire of the last day? Brethren, help us to a Tent.

L. BOUTELL.

THE YEARLY CONFERENCE.—Where shall it be? It is the Annual Meeting of the Mass. Conference. We desire the largest gathering we have ever had. The times demand it. Our interests call for it. The first week in April is the time for it. Who will make preparation for a large meeting and a great blessing? Who? L. BOUTELL.

VERMONT CONFERENCE.—The next Quarterly Conference will be held with the church at East Roxbury, Vt., commencing Tuesday evening, March 3d, and continuing three days. As this is a central place, we hope the preachers from all directions will gather at this meeting, together with delegates from all churches. Come up to the feast. The heart of Roxbury is all warm to greet you. God has done and is doing a good work there. H. F. C.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—There will be a protracted meeting with the Advent church in Wilbraham, Mass., commencing Monday evening, Feb. 23d, and continuing each evening through the week, and over Sunday, March 1st, if the Lord will. Brethren and sisters in the region around are invited to come in and help us. Come in the name and spirit of the Master to labor for the salvation of sinners. Sr. E. L. Crumb will be present to preach the Word.

P. S. BUTLER, Pastor.

CONFERENCE.—The Lord willing, there will be a Conference held at Melvin Village, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, March 4th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Brn. E. A. Stockman and A. Ross are expected to preach the Word. A general invitation is extended to all, to come over and help us. Come, Brn. and Srs., in the name of Israel's God. Come with the armor on, to labor for the salvation of the perishing. Rally once more to the "old battle ground" at Melvin. Sinner! the invitation is extended to you. Come and go with us! Come to Jesus! "Now is the accepted time. Behold now is the day of salvation." T. W. PIPER.

IF the Lord will, we commence a series of meetings, assisted by Bro. Clegg, at the large Hall, West Grove, Chester Co., Pa., Thursday evening, Feb. 26th, and continue over Sunday, March 1st. This is a new field, where the great Bible truths have never been proclaimed. The Lord has in a strange manner opened the way for us, and we are going trusting in his almighty arm. We ask the prayers of all the lovers of Jesus and the truth that the effort may be blest of God. I. N. WILFONG.

IF the Lord will, we shall commence a series of meetings in Enfield, Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, to continue evenings through the week, and as much longer as it may seem best.

S. AYRES. W. G. RUGGLES.

CONFERENCE.—The R. I. and Eastern Conn. Conference will hold its next Annual Meeting at Lafayette, R. I., commencing Wednesday, two o'clock P. M., March 4th, and continue over the 6th. All preachers and churches belonging to the Conference should report personally or by letter. Please let us hear from all.

N. A. ANGELL, Conference Clerk.

NOTICE.—If all our preachers would introduce the Crisis properly, others would take it as well as Adventists, and five hundred new subscribers could be added in ten weeks by preachers taking this course. Think of it, brethren.

H. MUNGER.

THE Lord willing, the third meeting of the Eastern Conf. Dist. of the State of New York will be held at South Butler, N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 26th, 1874, and hold over the Sunday following. We hope to see a full representation of all the churches in the Dist. A cordial invitation is extended to the brethren and sisters in other parts of the State to meet with us, in the name of the Lord, to strengthen the things that remain, and to unite in spreading the truth. Come praying. Let each church remember the quarterly collection to defray expenses. Let each church be represented by delegates as far as possible, otherwise by letter without fail.

B. P. STEVENS, Pres.
C. G. OAKES, Sect.

P. S. Teams will meet the midday trains east and west at Savannah depot. Direct road, Thursday and Friday, stage meets morning trains. Inquire of E. Luce, ticket agent. C. G. O.

NOTICE.—The stockholders in the Wayne Co. Tent are to meet at the same time and place of the above meeting, to make disposition of the Tent, and arrange its work for the coming season. We want all to report by person or letter. Address all letters to C. G. Oaks, South Butler, Wayne Co., N. Y., for this and the above meeting. May all be done to the glory of God.

Per request, C. G. O., Stockholder.

A PROTRACTED MEETING will be held at Garland, Me., commencing Feb. 28th, at two P. M., and continuing as long as it seems duty. We hope our brethren and sisters in adjoining towns will come over and help us. Homes will be provided for all who come. Call on Abner Millit, Wm. H. Doughty, N. N. Wood.

ORDINATION.—Bro. Darius Call, a member of the A. C. Church of Norwalk, Huron Co., Ohio, was duly ordained to the work of the gospel ministry on Tuesday, Feb. 10th, 1874, and is hereby commended to all the churches of Christ. Bro. Call's labors have been blessed of the Lord the past winter in the conversion of many souls to Christ, during his labors in a new field in the southeastern part of Huron Co., and we trust the future will be still more abundant in testimony that God is with him.

Elders D. C. Jefferson, E. McCullock, Frank Burr, Ordaining Committee.

HOOSICK CHURCH has engaged the following preachers for one year, Sabbaths, as follows:—Eld. R. Mosher Feb. 8th, April 5th, June 14th, Aug. 9th, Oct. 4th, Dec. 13th. Eld. H. K. Flagg March 8th, May 3d, July 12th, Sept. 5th, Nov. 1st. Eld. A. W. Sibley April 19th, June 28th, Aug. 23d, Oct. 18th, Dec. 27th. Eld. W. J. Blanchard Feb. 22nd, May 17th, July 26th, Sept. 20th, Nov. 29th. Eld. C. W. Baker Mar. 22nd, May 31st, Nov. 15th.

S. W. WORTHINGTON, North Bennington, Vt., for the church.

THE Advent Christian Church of Lewiston, Me., hold their meetings regularly every Sabbath in the Hall over First National Bank, Main St. Prayer and praise meetings at ten o'clock A. M. Preaching at half-past two and half-past six P. M. Also prayer meetings Tuesday and Friday evenings at half-past seven.

The Advent Christian Church of Lewiston, Me., have secured the labor of Bro. Jared Whitman as their pastor. For the church, JAS. TRACY.

CONFERENCE.—The fourth Quarterly Conference will be held at South Hope, Me., to commence Friday, Feb. 20th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and hold over Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to come. We hope to see a good delegation of ministers to preach the Word.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

RE-PRINTED

ELDER S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's works, which have been out of print some time, so that we have not been able to fill orders, are now published, and we can supply as follows:—

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun, Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena. Illustrated with cuts. 216 pp. 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

Illustrated with cuts. 25 cts.

THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL.

This is a work of history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts. AG'T.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

AG'T.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M.

We have this valuable work in its unabridged form of 330 pages, neatly bound in cloth, for sale. Price $1.00; postage, 16 cts.

AG'T.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

This paper is edited by Elds. John Couch, Wm. Sheldon, A. A. Phelps, Miles Grant, and others, and is published monthly, at $1 a year, with a choice book, or fine lithograph engraving, given to each subscriber. Furnished to subscribers of the Crisis three months free, or both one year for $2.75, with a book or engraving free.

All orders for the Banner and Crisis should be addressed to Geo. T. Adams, 160 Hanover street, Boston, Mass. All orders for sample copies (sent free) or for the Bible Banner alone, should be addressed to H. A. KING, 14 Murray street, New York.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.'

For sale at this Office. AG'T.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. A'GT.

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

"WHITE AS SNOW."—Isa. 1: 18.

J. D. ELLIOTT.

"White as snow!" oh, what a promise
For the heavy-laden breast!
When by faith the soul receives it,
Weariness is changed to rest.

Red, "like crimson," deep "as scarlet"—
Scarlet of the deepest dye—
Are the manifold transgressions
That would else upon me lie.

God alone can count their number;
God alone can look within;
O the sinfulness of sinning!
O the guilt of every sin!

Heavy laden worn and weary,
To the promise let me go;
Though your sins be "red like crimson,"
They shall be as "white as snow."

"White as snow!" oh! have you watched it,
Softly carpeting the ground,
Wreathing, with a wreath of silver,
Every common thing around?

"White as snow!" can my transgressions
Thus be wholly washed away?
Leaving not a trace behind them,
Like a cloudless summer day?

Yes, at once, and that completely,
Through the blood of Christ, I know
All my sins, though red like crimson,
May become as white as snow.

Much forgiven! quite forgiven!
Once for all, yet daily too;
Let me live near Him who saves me,
Let me keep the cross in view.

Much forgiven! then let boasting
Be forever cast aside;
Shall a newly pardoned sinner
Dare to lift his head in pride?

Much forgiven! O my Savior!
If my present state be such,
May the farther words describe me—
"This poor sinner loveth much!"

Clinton, Mass.

AT THE LAST.

JOHN CUMMING.

When the last day of this dispensation shall arrive, much that is now available for our salvation will be gone forever. When the last day, not of a year, but of an age, shall come, every opportunity of seeking grace will be gone forever. It will be the day of testing character that is, not of creating a character that is not;—the day of reaping, either in tares for the flames, or in wheat for eternal garners, the seeds that we have sown in the present world. Suppose this day were the last of the age, and the great white throne and the dread Judge were there, and the books were opened; have you to seek what you would then give infinite worlds if you had—a God, a Savior, pardon of sin, an adoption into the family of God, fitness for the kingdom of heaven?

Were this day your last on earth, or were this day earth's own last day as it now is, are you ripe for gathering, are you prepared to meet your God? You must feel this momentous thought in that day; anticipate the experience of it, lest that experience may be agony at last. Then the Sun of grace will have set behind the hills of the west only to rise as the Sun of glory in the eternal east upon them that fear him. The throne of grace will have been merged into the throne of judgment; and the gates that shut out all that defile, and shut in all that is holy, will be sealed as they will be shut forever. Upon that last day, you will have heard your last sermon upon earth.

A sermon is the least valued often of all things that are spoken and printed now; but it is a very solemn thing to hear; it is a very precious thing, however feeble if faithful, to be privileged to listen to. For what are sermons? Voices crying in the desert, "Prepare ye to meet your God." Their excellence is their earnestness, their simplicity, their faithfulness. Now, they may be vehicles of light, and life, and everlasting peace. Their echoes will rise and reverberate at the judgment throne; but not as summonses to believe, but as witnesses either that you have profited by them, or that they have hardened you in your transgression. Suppose, then, that no more appeals were to be addressed to you; suppose that the day were come when it shall be no more said, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters;" when no kind voice will say, "Behold the Lamb of God;" when no earnest accent will reverberate in your hearing, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Are you now in that state in which such invitations will be unnecessary? Are you now what you would wish to be then, when what you are will endure forever, and no transition from darkness unto light, or from sin to holiness, can take place any more?

How dreadful, if in that last day of the last dispensation—the one that now is—these words should be addressed to you when you cry, "Open, open, Lord;" "I have called and ye refused. Because I have reached out my hand and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you; then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me." A day comes when that text shall be actual; it is not true now, it is not fulfilled yet. Have you sought God, and found him? Have you called and been answered? Is christianity a name, a profession, a decent robe; or is it an inner experience, a life, a power, in the sight of God and before all mankind?

In that last day, the last prayer that will be heard on earth will be offered unto God, and no answer in mercy and in love can be given. Now, however, the suppressed moan of the lowly, humble and believing heart, cleaves the air faster than an angel's pinion, and is heard by God upon his throne amid the voices and songs of the seraphim. But at that day the loudest cry of the strongest spirit in its agony will provoke an echo, but it will obtain no answer. Now we may come with boldness to the throne; then there is no throne of grace to come to. Now it is, "Seek, and ye shall find;" then, "Ye shall seek me, but not find me." Now it is, "God never said to the seed of Jacob, Seek my face in vain;" then, "They shall call but I will not answer them."

At that day the last affliction that will be sanctified to the people of God will have been dealt out, no more to be repeated. We thank God often for his blessings; how rarely do we thank him for the afflictions that he sends us, which are his richest blessings in disguise! The baptism of sorrow often prepares the heart as the dew does the soil, for the baptism of the Holy Ghost. God knocks now at the door of every heart by affliction, by trial; but then he will knock at our hearts no more. A day will come, when the afflictions of the people of God shall cease as chastisements, for they will have no need of them; and when the afflictions of those who are not the people of God shall cease as admonitions, for their lot is fixed forever. Realize that day; conceive it is come; and ask your own selves in the sight of God, What is my hope and trust against that day?—Advent Herald.

ENCOURAGING.

L. BOUTELL.

I attended a meeting of days recently in Chester, Vt., with Elders Carpenter, and Chedell. We commenced on Saturday, Jan. 17th, continuing afternoons and evenings, each day till the 26th. The meeting was well attended, considering it was a new field, and the prejudices of the people quite strong. From the first to the last the interest increased. We had good congregations of earnest hearers to listen to the somewhat new exposition of the prophetic word, as well as to the common principles of the gospel in the fulfillment of Gods plan to save the lost race.

A goodly number came to our help from Springfield, and other places, making our meetings very interesting by their prayers and songs, divinely inspired. As in all our meetings, fearfulness gave way as the people came out to hear, and the Spirit of the Lord quickened and set the flame of love burning, and truth shining. Soon some became interested for their salvation, while conviction rested upon others that they needed a new work done for them, that their lamps might be found burning so that their bodies might be full of light.

The Holy Spirit was in our midst impressing the hearts of all of the necessity of having their sins forgiven and preparation to meet the Savior. The people were stirred by the preaching of the gospel. To God be all the glory for the good done through the agency of earthen vessels: for the power is of him and not of us. God has given his word, every part of it, for the specific purpose of converting and turning men from Satan to himself—from idols to the living God—from death to life.

I am sure a deep impression was made upon the good people of Chester who attended the series of meetings. If we could have continued them still longer, I think we should have seen conversions among them. I am hoping it will open the way for a more successful meeting in the future. The signs of our Lord's soon coming were faithfully given, also the resurrection from the dead and restitution; truths that we think all christians should be deeply interested in at the present time. We should by the power of God and his never-failing word make a mighty effort to raise the standard of the church, and convert men to God.

WORDS OF COMFORT.

L. J. ADAMS.

"All things work together for good to them that love God." Precious words written to comfort and strengthen God's tried, tempted and suffering ones. Let faith grasp them and wait patiently, knowing they cannot fail. Trust in God and fear not. "He doth not afflict willingly;" he loves you too well to let one trial too many come, or to remove any that is necessary,—

The gold by fire is purified,
The Christian is by trouble tried.

As he said to Paul so he says to you; "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness." can you not say with Paul, "most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefor I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; for when I am weak then am I strong." He has heard your prayers and is answering them. He wounds to heal. Yield to his holy will. These light afflictions which are but for a moment will work for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Brother, sister, murmur not, but pray for grace to lie passive in his hands. "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." You cannot afford to lose one sorrow that he sends, or leave untouched one drop of the bitter chalice. He knows best what you need. Take the cup; he will give you strength to drink it. "Like as a father pitieth his children so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust." "They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion which cannot be removed but abideth forever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever." Lift the cross. Does it look too heavy for you in your weakness? Remember him who bore a heavier one for you. He waits to lift the heavy end of yours. You must bear Christ's likeness here if you would wear the crown in glory. Keep quiet in his arms, and let him stamp it on your heart. Does every touch bring pain, and cause your quivering heart to bleed? "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." These pains are but the birth-pangs of the soul's true life. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. . . . Now no chastening for the present seemeth joyous but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the firey trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." You remember the words of the angel to John while beholding in vision the redeemed of the Lord round the throne;—"These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat. For the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." He is fitting you to stand with that innumerable company and join in the echoing chorus of praise.

A CHURCH COVENANT AND CONSTITUTION.

Since order is heaven's first law, and God is not the author of confusion, and church organization is sanctioned by Scripture and general usage, therefore we whose names follow do hereby agree to associate ourselves in that capacity that we may be in harmony with the word of God, and for the purpose of promoting mutual knowledge, virtue and piety, and with such objects in view, and for the glory of God and our good, do hereby adopt the following Covenant and Constitution:

COVENANT.

We, believers in Christ, and looking for his future, personal appearing and kingdom, believing it to be our duty and privilege to unite together in solemn covenant to maintain Bible order and duly observe Christ's ordinances, as in his Word required, do hereby agree that we will endeavor to watch over each other in love, according to the plain requirements of the New Testament, and the spirit of Christ and his Gospel, and we hereby receive the Scriptures as our only rule of faith, practice and discipline, and are willing when we violate that rule in word or deed to be kindly instructed and corrected by each other, making christian character our only test of fellowship and communion, cordially receiving all as christians who walk by that rule.

CONSTITUTION.

Article 1st. This church shall be known as the Christian Church of Adventists in ——.

Article 2nd. The officers of this church shall consist of a Pastor, who shall preside as chairman in all business meetings of the church, when present, and such a number of deacons as may be required; also, when deemed best, ruling local elders or leaders (1 Tim. 5 : 17; Titus 1 : 5; Heb. 13 : 7, 17), in number and location as the interests of the church shall seem to demand, and a clerk.

Article 3d. The duty of the Pastor of the church shall be to preach the Word of life—the Gospel—and take the oversight of the church willingly, visiting its members and giving Scriptural counsel and admonition, while he shall watch for souls as one that must give account to God. The duty of the lay elders or leaders shall be to act as leaders in social meetings for prayer and conference, each in his own vicinity; taking the oversight of the members in such locality as may be agreed upon in the absence of the Pastor; laboring by counsel and prayer to promote their spiritual interests as may seem best. The duty of the deacons shall be to furnish the elements of the Lord's Supper, and have the care of the furniture of the Lord's table; also, to inquire into and relieve the wants of the poor of the church as duty may require, and they may be able to do by contributions taken for that purpose; and use their best endeavors to solicit and obtain funds from the church and others for the support of the gospel preached to them, that the Pastor may not be hindered, but encouraged and sustained in his work. The duty of the clerk shall be to keep the church book containing the Covenant, Constitution and members' names; to keep a faithful record therein of admissions, dismissions, withdrawals, deaths of members, baptisms, etc.; to send a written report to the conference annually of the condition of the church, which report shall be inserted in the church book, and to keep all records required to be kept by the church.

Article 4th. All the above named officers shall be chosen at a business meeting of the church, by the vote of a majority of those present, due notice being given to all the members of the time, place and object of such meeting; and these several officers shall continue in office until others are appointed, or at the will of the church.

Article 5th. Any person who professes faith in Christ, and gives Scriptural evidence of a christian character, and assents to the Covenant and Constitution of this church, desiring to become a member, shall make his or her request known to the Pastor; which request shall be made known by him to the church at a public meeting, when a vote by the church in favor of their admission shall constitute the applicant a member. And it is also provided that if a majority of the church so decide, persons of the character described in this article may be received by the Pastor without the vote of the church formally given.

Article 6th. It shall be the duty of the officers and members of this church to deal with offending members for the violation of their covenant, after due Scriptural effort has been kindly and faithfully made to reclaim and restore them, when a charge, or charges, fully and plainly specified, shall be preferred in writing, signed by the complainant's name, and fully sustained by good and unimpeachable witnesses, according to Christ's rule (Matt. 18 : 15, 16; Luke 17 : 3, 4), and the spirit and letter of the Word, plainly expressed elsewhere; and such proceedings shall not be made known by any member of the church to any besides their number, until final decision is arrived at, and then only as decided by the church.

Article 7th. If any member of this church in good standing shall wish to withdraw, by making his or her request known in writing to the Pastor, with the reason in full therefor, he or she shall have the liberty of so doing at any time, and shall be entitled to a letter of commendation expressive of his or her christian character, written by the Pastor.

Article 8th. This church shall hold four quarterly meetings each year, as nearly as practicable at regular intervals, when the Lord's Supper shall be administered, and a regular covenant and business meeting shall be held, at which the covenant and constitution of the church shall be plainly read; which business meeting may be adjourned to other time and place there named, and the officers of the church shall have power to appoint special business meetings when deemed necessary, and all legislation of the church shall be done by a vote of the majority at a proper business meeting.

Article 9th. It shall be the duty of the several officers of this church to attend the annual district meeting if at all practicable, or report to the same by letter; they shall also endeavor to attend the annual session of "The Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec," when convenient, and this church has the right to elect and authorize delegates to act in conference for them, "in number not to exceed six," to be chosen and sanctioned at a business meeting, by a vote of the church, and to have certificates of such qualification written and signed by the clerk.

Article 10th. This Constitution may be altered or amended at any time, a business meeting being called for the purpose, if by two-thirds of the members it shall be thought advisable, the officers all concurring; and due notice shall be given to all the members at least one week before such meeting.

At the Farnham District meeting, among other things suggested, it was proposed that we endeavor to unite upon a system of church order of uniform character, to be established throughout the bounds of the Conference, to promote harmony. The above form was suggested to some by me, who desired its publication in the Crisis, and I have been written to since the meeting asking for a copy. I therefore submit it to all concerned, as being a proper way of doing an important work, far better and more scriptural than to write a simple covenant and members' names upon a sheet of note paper, to be carried in some one's pocket until worn out, or lost among other papers.

If we meet in conference again, and have the lay element there, we must "set things in order," and have our church officers duly constituted and acting; and the organization of our Conference requires and supposes the proper and immediate organization of our churches. As Adventists we have learned by sad experience that the cry, "Come out of Babylon," produced a Babylon, and gave encouragement to confusion. But the most have painfully learned a better way, and an effort to establish Bible order is now considered of more importance among us.

'TIS THY WILL.

Folded closely in thy bosom,
Savior, let me lie;
Till the tempest gathering o'er me,
Beating all around about me,
Passeth by.

While the furnace fire is burning,
Hold me, hold me still;
May I feel while trembling, quivering
With the pain through all my being,
'Tis thy will.

'Tis thy will, O loving Father,
'Tis enough to know,
That thy hand the fire is kindling,
That thou knowest all my sufferings
Here below.

Though this earthly house is shaking,
Tottering to the fall!
I've a glorious mansion yonder;
Thither let me gladly hasten,
At thy call.

By the river side I'm waiting,
Now thy voice to hear,
Calling, "Come, the feast is ready,
"Gird thy bridal robes around thee,
Never fear."

What have I to fear, dear Savior,
Thou hast conquered sin;
Then through grace I'll cross the river,
And with songs of joy triumphant,
Enter in. —Selected.

CRUX DE CRUCE.

IS PIUS IX. THE LAST OF THE ROMAN PONTIFFS? ST. MALACHY'S STRANGE PROPHECY.

Is Pius IX. the last of the Roman Pontiffs? The curious prophecy attributed to St. Malachy, archbishop of Armagh in Ireland, and who died in the arms of the "last of the fathers of the church," as the French proudly call Bernard of Clairvaux, distinctly asserts that he is. In that alleged inspired dream, the Irish patriarch gave the number of popes that remained yet to come, giving to each of them an epigrammatic mark by which he could be concisely distinguished, and the sign he attached to the pontiff who closes his hazardous enumeration corresponds, in a remarkable degree, with the venerable Holy Father, who, perhaps at this instant, has the death rattle at the door of his chamber. That sign is the three Latin words, "Crux de Cruce," which is interpreted by some Catholic authorities to signify the persecution of the cross from a cross—that is, that the pope suffers crucial affliction from a royal power, which has the cross for the chief emblem on its escutcheon of authority. And this, as has been said, points the finger at Victor Emanuel. In his kingly emblems, the cross surmounts everything. If we mistake not, Father Garesche, a learned Jesuit priest, in a lecture which he lately delivered not far from New York, gave this interpretation, as explicitly as fine language could make it, to the "Crux de Cruce" of the ancient metropolitan of Armagh.

The Herald does not pretend to settle the authority of St. Malachy's prophecies. But it is as clear as the sun in the meridian that the words "Crux de Cruce" are in singular agreement with the relations between Pius IX. and the first monarch of United Italy. And, that being the case, it is an interesting and serious question. Is Pius IX. the last of the Roman pontiffs? It is a startling question. Its proper form is, Is the great Roman Catholic church sentenced to death? For, no pope, no Catholic church, Catholicity cannot survive the papacy for one second. And Catholicity is a thing of no small radius, diameter, and circumference. St. Malachy, therefore, or whoever wrote in his name, gave ground for putting a question of tremendous magnitude. A short time, however, will quite solve the curious interrogation, for it cannot be long before the Holy See will have a new occupant, or cease to be the great central religious altar of more than three-fourths of the vast population of Christendom.

In the meantime, Pius IX. is, in all human probability, on his death-bed; and the noble old man—with face one of the finest Rome has witnessed for many a day—has the world watching at his couch.

Let us see who these watchers are. The king of Italy has his mind on the spot with particular anxiety of manner.

Prince Bismarck, who, by recent statutes, has made the emperor the high priest of the German people, and who ardently wishes that there may never be another supreme head of the Catholics, is attending to the Roman telegrams, to the exclusion of every other duty.

M. Thiers, [late] President of the French Republic, and, though a Protestant, a firm upholder of the papacy, is on the qui vive with all the activity of an aged statesman of genius for the first intelligence of an event which he knows will move Catholic France to floods of tears and sighs of true devotion.

Francis Joseph, of Austria, is in constant communication with his ambassador at the Vatican on the fluctuations in the health of the illustrious patient.

The Count de Chambord, who once had impassioned hopes that Pius IX. would place the crown of St. Louis on his temples, and the sword of Henry the Great in his hand, is in unfeigned grief over the apprehended dissolution of one for whose rights the royal blood in his veins was always ready to flow.

The Turk at Constantinople—the Prince of the Crescent, the successor of Mohammed—esteemed this octogenarian primate of the cross as if Rome had never inspired crusades to fight against Saladin for the recovery of Jerusalem, as if there never had been a battle of Lepanto, as if there never had been a Charles Martel and plains of Poictiers, he is listening for the first intimation of his death, that he may honor his memory by putting crape on the standards of the Ottoman Empire.

The Czar of Russia, it is said, hated Pius IX. with a bitter hatred, and he is impatient to be informed that the pontiff has breathed his last.

Victoria, Protestant queen of a great Protestant nation, whose first kings are saints in the Roman calendar, has her tender ears open for the sad news that the Holy Father is dead. She congratulated him on the day he was fifty years a priest; she congratulated him on the day he was twenty-five years a pope; when she learns he has expired, she will give to his name, and to his virtues, and to the great office he so filled, the good private homage of her heart.

Finally, all the churches feel the most intense interest in this death-bed. Around it it is easy and just for the imagination to conceive clustered all the great leaders of the Protestant forms of faith, anxious with the conjecture and ready to seize the hope that with Pio Nono the "scarlet woman of the Apocalypse" may die, and give up her soul forever. But in a particular position and with pre-eminent right, and, though last in the enumeration, yet the most natural in it, around this memorable death-bed stands the whole Roman fold, 300,000,000 in number. Never was sovereign pontiff so loved by Catholics as Pius IX. He was and he is to them no self-made cleric, but the very vicar of God; grand to look at; most noble in his disposition; an angel in every virtue; a second Prince of the apostles in all respects; the most outraged of all holy men, and the very ideal of their hearts and understandings.

Whether the Catholic faith is true, or not true, this is the way the Catholic people of all the earth have centered their fondness on Pius IX.; and sore are they within at learning that his long reign over them is at last at its end; and when they shall read that he is no more, copious will be the tears that will flow from their eyes, broken will be the sobs with which they will pronounce his name, and ardent will be the prayers that will penetrate the clouds for the sanctification of his spirit. It is a splendid mark of religious faith, and a splendid tribute to illustrious worth. Far be it from all to give it a wanton insult.

These facts give an idea of the interest that is concentrated on the sick couch or the death-bed of Pius IX.

But there is one watcher of this death-bed who is entitled to special consideration. It is the king of Italy. He has long wished for the death of the pope; for the pope kept him long out of Rome, on which he set his heart, and now that he has Rome, he is filled with uneasiness while the pope lives. Well may he wish that the mediæval prophet of Armagh, or whoever wrote in that ascetic metropolitan's name, issued a true prophecy when he made the pope of the "Crux de Cruce" designation the last of the Sovereign Pontiffs.—N. Y. Herald.

A SCIENTIFIC SENSATION.

To the Editor of the Kansas City Times:

A friend of mine residing in Florence, an American man of science, traveling for the sake of his health, lately wrote to me as follows:—

"I have attended the meetings of one of the numerous scientific coteries with which Italy is blessed. In one of them a subject was broached which if generally known would startle the whole civilized world. One of the members, a man whose name is known in both hemispheres, asserted that the celebrated Donati (who lately died much regretted by scientific men) had ben a victim, not to disease nor to time, although he was in a "green old age," but to nervous excitement, or fright, caused by a discovery which he had made of great and even agonizing importance to the human race.

Donati had for many years been employing his unbounded energy in exploring some of the "hidden things in astronomy." Of these investigations he kept a strict record, of solar phenomena especially. He constructed an instrument by which he could calculate the earth's exact place in the great ellipse that it travels around the sun, and also, in his own estimation, its distance from the sun, although in this latter point, he was not universally credited by his scientific colleagues. He never failed to make minute daily records of the result of his observation, and to this custom he owed his fresh discovery. On the very day that the cable was laid, his instruments showed that the earth like some vast ship towed by invisible hands, was drawing nearer to the sun. Every month after that epoch, its distance was perceptably lessened, as shown by his instruments, much more delicate than telescopes or the human eye.

When the French cable was laid, there was an acceleration very marked in this attraction to the sun. Donati thought that this movement was increasing in a geometrical ratio(?)

He explained this alarming fact by certain reasonings based on the connection between gravitation and magnetism, which I suspect my friend was hardly able to follow.

His conclusion was this: That in twelve years, the climate of Europe would become tropical if not unfit for human existence, and that in a few more years this globe, which with all its faults we love so well, would be precipitated into the sun.

It seems that Donati had in vain tried to bring this matter before the Italian Government (hoping through it to reach the nations most interested in oceanic telegraphs), but that war and politics had prevented any notice being taken of his representations.

He thought that if America and England could be induced to examine his data and proofs, they, seeing the tremendous consequences of man's tampering to far with the machinery of nature, would speedily cause these cables to be things of the past.

His failure induced him to think of private enterprise, and several wealthy Italians, amateurs of science, combined together, chartered a brig and expensive machinery, and by their patriotic (although patriotism is too petty a name) efforts produced the first break in Field's cable, laid by the Great Eastern. Donati's instruments quickly showed that the earth was nearing its normal ellipse. But the break was quickly repaired, and once more the earth commenced its infinite spiral journey to the flames!

Donati's health gave way. Age and disappointment hastened his dissolution. A few days before his death he carefully sealed up all his manuscripts, with directions that they should not be opened for five years."

So much for my correspondent, Mr. Editor. Make of him such use as seems best to you. I am, yours respectfully,

REST AT HOME.

WM. D. TUCKER.

We are waiting for the dawning
Of the bright celestial morning,
When the clouds of glory breaking
Will reveal our Savior's coming;
Then the loved ones who are sleeping,
And for whom we now are weeping,
Will awake to die, no, never,
But with Jesus shall forever
Rest at home.

When in the blessed new-earth home
With Jesus, we shall never roam;
But angels bright, and loved ones meet,
To rest at our dear Savior's feet.
Then pain and death shall flee away,
And sorrow end in gladsome day;
There we shall meet to part no more
On Canaan's fair and fadeless shore,
And rest at home.

There shall the "tree of life" e'er grow,
There shall the crystal river flow;
There we will join the throng to sing
Glad praises to our heav'nly King;
There we shall walk the streets of gold,
And rest from care in that bright world,
Where Jesus we'll delight to see,
And joy in life eternally,
To rest at home.

Yes, we're waiting for the dawning
Of the bright celestial morning,
When the clouds of glory breaking
Will reveal our Savior's coming;
And our hearts with joy are beating,
As the moments swiftly fleeting,
Tell to us that time is ending,
And that Jesus soon is coming
To give us rest at home.

Haydenville, Mass.

BEARING GRIEF.

"I hold it to be a truth of great import that while grief ill-borne demoralizes and deteriorates, grief well-borne,—borne with fortitude, patience and wisdom,—yields the soul a bountiful harvest of compensations. Increased moral power is developed by this battle with pain. It is easy to surrender and give way to despair; easy to complain, and mope, and forget the wants of the world in our own private misery; easy to become so absorbed in the indulgence of our own emotions, that by degrees we lose the consciousness of high duty to mankind. But it is very hard to suppress the pain in our hearts, and pluck out of the wound the barb that has pierced us. Yet grief is disintegration of character, unless we subject it to this heroic treatment. Before the first outburst of the tempest we are overborne, and we inflict useless agony on ourselves if we choose to break rather than to bend. In a stern struggle with disaster, nevertheless, lies its only power to bless us in the end. The effort we must make, painful as it is, to get the mastery of our own soul.

There is no sadder sight than to see one permanently crushed and broken in spirit under sorrow. And there is no grander spectacle than that of a free soul rising superior to evil, distilling honey like the bee of Samarcand, out of poison and death. Vigor of will and nobility of character are to be learned nowhere but in the stern school of misfortune."—F. E. Abbott.

HOME AND HEALTH.

NINE REASONS AGAINST TOBACCO-USING.

Christians cannot use tobacco,

1. Because it is a filthy habit, as all will allow. God has emphatically condemned all uncleanness and filthiness. "But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks." Eph. 5 : 3, 4. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." 2 Cor. 7 : 1.

2. Because it is contrary to nature. God never gave any human being a natural taste for tobacco. On its first introduction into the system, nature rallies with all its powers to expel it; hence it produces vomiting, faintness, etc. Some plead, that God never "created anything in vain," and as he has created tobacco, it must be good to use it just as they do. Very well; God created the thistle, the mullein, and the toad-stool, too. Why don't they chew them?

3. Because it does not glorify God. As the tobacco-user defiles all around him by his filthy juice, or impregnates the air with its nauseous fumes, can he look up to heaven and say, "I thus glorify God." No, he would not dare to do it. But the Holy Spirit has said, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10 : 31. No tobacco monger can do this.

4. Because it simply gratifies a lust of the flesh. The one uniform reason that tobacconists give for using it, is, that they have become used to it and love it; it tastes good, and they cannot make up their minds to deny this appetite. But hear the word of the Lord again; "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." Rom. 13, 14. "This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." Gal. 5 : 16, 24. See also Eph. 2 : 3; James 4 : 3.

5. Because it is idolatry. That we may make a god of the appetite, is clear from Paul's language, Phil. 3, 19. Of those who are governed by their appetite, he says, "Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is their shame, who mind earthly things." What appetite is more enslaving than that unnatural one for tobacco? None. To gratify this, a man will deny himself of his necessary food and raiment, will let his wife and children suffer want and privation, and will neglect his most pressing business at any time. I have seen all this myself. If a man was out of tobacco three days, and could go at evening to the house of God to worship the Lord, or five miles to the village and get his tobacco, at which place would he be found? At the latter every one knows. Then which god does he love best? the Lord, or his tobacco? "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," reads the first commandment.

6. Because it is a poison which destroys the health and life of those who use it. "Tobacco is one of the most deadly narcotics found upon the list of poisons." N. B. Coles, M. D. Abundance of testimony might be given on this point, but it is not necessary here.

7. Because it defiles the garments, flesh, blood, and brains, of the body, which is God's temple. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. 3 : 16, 17. Tobacco penetrates and defiles every fibre in the whole system. Let tobacco-users beware.

8. Because it destroys the graces of the mind. The moment a tobacco-user is deprived of his accustomed tobacco, he becomes irritable, peevish, cross, and snappish to all around him. This all know to be true. This is the effect of tobacco. All this is directly opposed to the work of the Spirit. Paul says, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5; 22, 23.

9. Because it is worse than squandering the means which God has committed to our care over which we are only stewards. The Scriptures very plainly declare that all we possess is only committed to our care by God, and that we are accountable to him for the use we make of it. See the parable of the talents. Matt. 25 : 14-30. Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase." Prov. 3 : 9. As the poor man hands out from one to five dollars for his filthy weed, and knows at the same time that his family needs that money, or that he owes debts that he ought to pay with it, can he say that he is honoring God by using his money to gratify his filthy, unnatural, health-destroying appetite? He must be far gone in depravity if he does think so.

Thousands of men, whose families are in needy circumstances, whose children are not being educated as they ought to be, "because father is not able to send them to school," and who are giving little or nothing for the cause of Christ, are nevertheless paying from ten to forty dollars per year for tobacco! What a fearful account such will have to settle with their Maker! To such he says, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." Isa. 55 : 2.

Many often say to us, "I use tobacco, and intend to, till you show me by the Bible that it is wrong, then I will give it up." Of course we cannot read from the Bible in so many words, "Thou shalt not use tobacco." It was not known in those times. But we do find many of its leading attributes and effects, when used, directly condemned by the Bible. Hence it is just as plainly condemned by the Scriptures as though it had said, "Thou shalt not use tobacco."—Review.

WASTE NO TIME.—After allowing yourself proper time for rest, don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study—whatever it is, take hold at once and finish up squarely and clearly; then to the next thing, without letting any moments drop out between. It is wonderful to see how many hours these prompt people contrive to make of a day; it is as if they picked up the moments that the dwadlers lost. And if ever you find yourself where you have so many things pressing upon you that you hardly know how to begin, let us tell you a secret. Take hold of the very first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into file, and follow after like a company of well drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line.

NECESSITY OF SLEEP.—"A man who would be a good worker," says Beecher, "must be a good sleeper." The quality of mental activity depends upon the quality of sleep. Men need on an average eight hours of sleep a day. A lymphatic man is sluggish, moves and sleeps slowly. But a nervous man acts quickly in everything. He does more in an hour than a sluggish man in two hours, and so in his sleep. Every man must sleep according to his temperament—but eight hours is the average. Whoever by work, pleasure, or sorrow, or by any other cause, is regularly diminishing his sleep, is destroying his life. A man may hold out for a time, but the crash will come, and he will die. There is a great deal of intemperance besides that of tobacco, opium or brandy. Men are dissipated who overtax their system all day, and under-sleep every night.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE RIGHTEOUS REIGN.

It will be order then,
Under the sceptre of a holy King,
Each creature, low and high, angels and men,
To the great concord sweetly ministering.
Self-will unknown, true harmony restored,
Happy obedience to the righteous Lord;
The multitude of wills all lost in one—
The will that rules from the eternal throne.
Disorders, strifes, confusions, groans, and cries,
Then ended in the endless harmonies!
O age of order, how we long for thee,
In these chaotic days of dark perplexity!

It will be freedom then!
True freedom such as nations never saw,
Even at their freest, in the days of old—
The freedom of submission to sure law;
Freedom from self and sin, and lust and gold;
Subjection to the truth, which maketh free;
Surrender of the intellect and soul
To a divine and sweet captivity.
O age of freedom! how we long for thee,
In these proud, self-will'd days of spurious liberty!

It will be morning then!
Morn of the long, long looked-for golden day;
Pure summer sunlight, dropping only health
And never-shaded joy, without one ray
Of poisonous bitterness to scorch or sear;
But calling up creation's boundless wealth
And beauty bright through all the eternal year,
The old sad night forever passed away.
O morn of love, when, when wilt thou appear?
—Prophetic Times.

TENDENCIES OF THE TIMES.

One of the most conspicuous peculiarities of the age, is the projection and pursuit of schemes for the cure of the social and moral evils that prevail. There is a general feeling, not only that reformations are needed, but that they are practicable; and plans are accordingly devised to educate the ignorant, to restrain and correct the lawless, to raise the degraded from debasement, and especially to communicate the blessings of religion to those who are destitute of them, and spread refinement, virtue, and enjoyment, through the whole community; and many are led by the efforts that are made to carry out these plans. and the success that seems to attend them, to entertain the belief that a rapid improvement in the character of the population is taking place, and that ere long a far purer religion and a higher measure of happiness than has hitherto been known, will generally prevail. Much is certainly done to stem the tide of immorality and irreligion that swells on every hand, and the indications of the future are incomparably more favorable than they would be, were the efforts that are made to spread the blessings of the gospel discontinued. Yet those who indulge in these expectations of a speedy renovation of society, seriously impose on themselves, we think, by looking too exclusively to the good that is apparently accomplished, and not to the sin and misery that continue unreached; and still more, perhaps, by framing their views of a perfect society by an inadequate standard.

There are not a few who seem to take their own families, churches, or neighborhoods, as exemplifications of all that religion is ever to accomplish for mankind; and were the whole nation raised to that range of cultivation, orderliness, and piety, it would equal their beau-ideal of the millennial age; while there are others who appear to form their notions of the character and condition of the irreligious and miserable generally by what lies within their sphere of observation, where the restraints of education, law, and religion are felt; and overlook the deeper degradation, the fiercer passions, the more appalling crimes and miseries that exist in the vast circles beyond. Were they, on the one hand, raised to a just perception of what the love, faith, sanctitude, and wisdom are which the gospel enjoins, and to which the children of God are to be exalted when the knowledge of him shall fill the earth as the waters cover the seas; and on the other, had they a clear view of the condition of the crowd around them; were they to catch a glimpse of the utter alienation, from God, the malignant affections, the terrible crimes, the hideous degredation, the frightful miseries of a great city for example like this, the good that exists would shrink from the vast dimensions they ascribe to it; and the redemption of the world, instead of being about to be completed, appear scarcely begun, and impossible without an immeasurably more efficient interposition of the Almighty.

If, as many maintain, the world is on the point of a vast reformation; if the nations especially that are civilized are on the verge of a general conversion; if the efforts that are now making by the church to carry the gospel to every tribe and every individual, are soon to be crowned with success, and all false beliefs, false worships, indifference, and hostility vanish from the earth, and be succeeded by universal faith and holiness; the indications of that happy change ought especially to be visible and conspicuous here, where the gospel is to such an extent already known, and where exertions are made on so large a scale to communicate its blessings to all who are yet destitute of them. The streaks of the dawning millennium ought to shoot up the horizon here, earlier and with a brighter glow than anywhere else. What then is in fact the religious condition of this great people, enjoying the gifts of the gospel in a higher measure than any other, and possessed perhaps more generally than any other with the idea of an approaching moral and religious reformation? What is the state of the general mind? What are the tendencies of the church? What likelihoods are there that the number of true worshipers is now to increase far more rapidly in proportion to the population at large than heretofore? What signs are there that atheism and infidelity, the perversion of the gospel, the rejection of its great doctrines, unbelief, fraud, falsehood, worldliness, sensuality, and sin in all its forms, are dying out; and faith, love, rectitude, benevolence, and obedience generally to the divine law taking their place?

We see not how any one who looks impartially at the character of the church and nation, and the direction in which they are moving, can persuade himself that there are any indications of such a change, or that the prospect is not rather of a relative decline of true religion, and a rapid growth of the parties and influences that are in antagonism with it.

In the first place, the nation was never more thoroughly pervaded through all its ranks by a spirit of worldliness; an eager desire of wealth; a love of gay and irreligious pleasures; and a passion for conspicuity and power, than at present. The passions that find their gratification in those forms, are raised to an unusual energy of excitement, and are impressing their character in a very emphatic manner, especially on the active and rising generation. There is a general and violent rush for wealth. Vast crowds at least no longer limit their views to a respectable competence, but regard riches as essential to their happiness; and struggle for them as vehemently as for subsistence itself. Nor is this passion for a great fortune confined to the irreligious, but reigns as conspicuously almost in the church as among the worldly, and is scarcely thought to be any more unsuitable in the one than in the other. If a small share of his hoard is devoted to benevolent and religious objects, a zealous worshiper of mammon may, notwithstanding his devotion to that deity, enjoy the reputation of a generous and liberal disciple of Jesus.

This hungry and grasping worldliness, however, is one of the most indubitable signs of the absence of religion. That passionate and sordid love, is an idolatry that cannot consist with the love of God. Where the treasure is, there will the heart be also. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Now are there any indications that this eager pursuit of wealth, of power, and of pleasure, is likely soon to be abandoned? Are there any signs that a great change in the popular estimate of them is about to take place?—that their ardent devotees are on the point of relinquishing them, becoming humble, self-denying, and spiritual, and turning to seek that inheritance that is undefiled and eternal in the heavens? Can a change more entirely against all appearances be imagined? Can a revolution more wholly out of the circle of probabilities be conceived than that they should speedily, under the promptings of the religious influences that are now exerted on them, renounce these pursuits which so absorb them, and become as distinguished for a just estimate of the treasures of this life, as they now are for their excessive love of them?

No one will pretend it. All the tendencies are in the opposite direction. Nothing can be more certain than that this determination to be rich, and to live in luxury and fashion, by which so many fall into foolish and hurtful lusts that drown them in destruction and perdition, is likely to continue and reign in the generation that is about to enter on the bustle of life, as absolutely as in those who are now absorbed in the strife, and to keep alive and nourish the brood of malignant passions and fraudulent arts that have ever formed its train. What more emphatic token is there that they are not to be temples of the Spirit of God?—that they are not to enjoy his presence?

In the next place, there never were worse principles avowed by great numbers than at present, nor more decisive evidences of their unchecked predominance given in irreligious lives, and debasing and enormous crimes. The crowd of open and contemptuous rejecters of christianity was never greater than at present. Nor were bolder endeavors ever made to give a general prevalence to positive irreligion. The enemies of the gospel do not any longer retreat from the public eye, or veil their hostility under feigned professions of respect. They are undisguised in the avowal of their rejection of it and of God, and in their assertion of their right to make their own laws, and seek their supreme good in whatever pleasures their passions prompt them to pursue, and the means within their reach enable them to enjoy. Nor did lawless principles ever reign in a greater number of breasts and give birth more frequently to violent and atrocious crimes. The papers are daily filled with recitals of thefts, brawls, outrages, and murders. The police of the great cities has become inadequate to the protection of property and life. The multitude who thus either openly renounce the authority of the Most High, or in effect make themselves their law, was never greater than at present.

What likelihood now is there that this vast crowd—many of whom, having had their birth abroad, have been nurtured in the worst forms of atheism, and trained to the indulgence of the most debasing appetites and passions—are about to be arrested in this career of sin, and become the rapt adorers of Jehovah?—the spotless followers of the Lamb? Are any signals of such a change seen in their principles or habits? Do any of the influences that now reach them promise to work so stupendous a revolution? Are there any schemes of agency projecting by the church that will be more likely than those employed heretofore to prove the means of their reformation? Surely no one will pretend it. The indications are altogether in the opposite direction. The evil immeasurably transcends the counteractive powers that are as yet arrayed against it; and is likely, in place of declining, to grow in strength and gain a wider sway.

In the third place, there were never more powerful agencies employed for the propagation of error and irreligion. Atheism, infidelity, and all the false forms of Christianity have now regular organizations for their support and diffusion. Each has a party who unite in avowing and advocating it, and each party employs the press and the living teacher, and makes systematic efforts to spread the knowledge of its principles, and gather proselytes. Large funds are devoted to the circulation especially of tracts, periodicals, and books, in which the great truths of Christianity are assailed and traduced, and atheism and infidelity taught in the most subtle and imposing forms. Universalists, also, those who hold that the impenitent are to be exempted from punishment by annihilation; the deniers of Christ's divinity and atonement; Swedenborgians, the disciples of modern pantheism, the deniers of the Spirit's influences; Puseyites, Catholics, Mormons, and other errorists, are as active and zealous as the friends of truth in the diffusion of their doctrines, and make as large appropriations for the purpose probably of their property. There is not a solitary class of false believers, no matter how daring and mischievous their sentiments are, who deem it their policy to conceal their light under a bushel. They all stand forth in the open day, proclaim their doctrines, claim for them the sanction of reason or revelation, and employ such enginery as they can command, to give them a general currency. The number of preachers, lecturers, and teachers of these several classes who are engaged in inculcating their doctrines is very great; the array of tracts, periodicals, and books issued by them exceeds a hundred fold, and not improbably a thousand fold, the publications that are circulated for the purpose of counteracting them, and the multitudes whom they reach and influence are immense.

What symptoms now are there that these powerful parties who are thus engaged in warring against the truth and propagating fatal error, are suddenly to be arrested in their career of propagandism, and sink into inactivity, or turn to the reception and inculcation of the gospel which they now reject? Are there any indications that their zeal has begun to flag, that they have become distrustful of their peculiar sentiments, or that the public are no longer disposed to listen to their teachings? Was there ever a period before when they appeared in such strength, made more strenuous efforts to accomplish their ends, or met with more signal success? Has there been a time when it was more apparent than it now is, that those who hold the truth are not likely to oppose any efficient counteractives to their influence? No one will be so absurd as to pretend it.—Prophetic Times.

FULLY PERSUADED.

Words by Dr. E. W. ABBOTT. (For the "Crisis.") Music by GEORGE E. LEE.

1. Al - most per - sua - ded in Christ to be - lieve, Al - most per - sua - ded his grace to receive:
Come now to Je - sus, O give him thy heart: Com - ing to Je - sus, your doubts will de - part.

2 Almost persuaded! I hear you exclaim,
Almost persuaded; your doubts still remain:
Not quite convenient! O do not delay,
You will be lost by remaining away.

3 Almost persuaded! but still you refuse;
Almost persuaded! why will you not choose?
Choose with the angels forever to share,
Glory immortal in Eden so fair.

4 Fully persuaded, then Christ is believed;
Almost persuaded, the Spirit is grieved:
Stay, gentle Spirit! O do not depart;
Fully persuaded, I give thee my heart.

"SO RUN THAT YE MAY OBTAIN."

J. M. QUIMBY.

This seems to imply a possibility of running and not obtaining. The apostle says in Heb. 12: 1, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us." So we learn it is a race for a prize, and I am glad the prize is not for one only, but we all may obtain one. Many of us have entered to run the race, but shall we all gain the prize? We may if we will.

Let us notice some of the weights. Says the apostle in Eph. 4: 22, "Put off concerning the former conversation the old man." In the 29th verse he says, "Let no corrupt communications proceed out of your mouth;" and in the 5th chap. 4th verse, "Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, but rather giving of thanks." The apostle speaks of these as weights, and how many of us have learned it by experience? When we have given way to jesting and trifling conversation, what leanness has taken the place of the Spirit of God; and we have lost our confidence, and how much it has hindered our running. Will any of us fail of gaining the prize in consequence? The Lord help us to lay aside these weights, and so run that we may obtain.

We can see that our conversation has very much to do with our running. James says, "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." Also, "If any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body." "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation," says Peter. "For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile."

Dear brethren and sisters, do we want eternal life in the kingdom? Do we want to gain the prize, and a home in that land where death can never come, and where graves are never made, where the good of all ages are gathered in an endless eternity? Then let us lay aside these weights, heed the instructions, and so run that we may obtain. The race is almost run; the prize will soon be given. Jesus will soon come in his glory, and how we shall want to hear him say "well done," which may the Lord grant.

"ACCEPTED IN THE BELOVED."

A MEDITATION.

Grace, charity, favor from God in Christ to such as I! Looking at myself, it is incredible. I see nothing in my heart, or life, or conduct upon which I could rest even the feeblest argument for its truth. On the contrary, I feel that God is wonderfully patient to bear with me as he has done all these years. But looking at him as he is revealed in Christ Jesus,—the only way, in fact, in which I can look at him,—it is not only credible, but probable, certain, true! "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me bless his holy name! Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits! Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies!"

The Redeemer, our glorious Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is the Father's Beloved One. Eminently, pre-eminently beloved is he, "who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant; and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." At the Jordan:—"And lo! a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And on the Mount of Transfiguration:—"Behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them, and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." In the Epistle to the Colossians he is called "his dear Son," better translated in the margin "The Son of his love." But no language can express the love of the Father to the Son. It is inexpressible, ineffable, infinite. Language fetters and limits everything it lays hold of; indeed, it does this to accommodate itself to our limited faculties; we could not understand it otherwise. But though we have no word to express, because we have no mental powers strong enough to realize, the love of God to his Son, we know that its outstreaming is so richly abundant that it embraces us in him; its divine, life-giving warmth draws us to Christ; its beneficent purpose, as if it could not give enough to and through the Beloved One, includes us with Christ in all the far-reaching arrangements that concern the future; and its overflowing kindness is such that it gives us now, "in him," all spiritual, gracious, heavenly blessings richly to enjoy! "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son a propitiation for our sins."

Well, what shall I say to these things? O God, surely thou art LOVE! I look upon and within myself, and find nothing that I can bring before thee except for the purpose of having it condemned; but turning away from a sight that sickens and kills self-righteousness, I look up to thee as the only resource left, and—yes! thou art Love—I see it written by thy command, "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." "In Christ Jesus!" O that I could be more thankful for this precious key-word of "the glorious gospel of the blessed God!" It is the very heart of the glad tidings of great joy, the divinely sublime proof that I—though consciously unworthy of any good thing—may bask in the sunlight of my Father's love, and feel personally sure that the Father loves the Son, seeing that he loves me "in him." Thus I become a conscious witness to the foundation-truth of christianity, that God hath chosen the church in Christ before the foundation of the world. I ascend up the river of life to its very source, and find in the love of the Father to his Son a cause sufficient to account for all the gifts, and graces, and blessings he has bestowed upon his children from the first hour until now; and surely thus, moreover, I am led to feel that I live by Christ, if I know anything at all of the life he came to give. If I have "peace," it is "in him;" or hope, or love, or joy, they are all his, the blessed things of Christ which the Father bestows on me—"for his sake?" Yes! "Through him?" Yes! But there is a finer, a deeper, dearer truth still which I must not, cannot forget—"in him!"

But where does the recognition of this holy truth bring me? When I am weary and faint, the cowardly tempter takes advantage of the fact to throw his fiery darts at me, telling me that I have not honored my holy profession, nor done anything for the glory of God or the good of men as I should have done, I sorrowfully admit the charge, but fall back upon the central, divine and inviolate truth that I am accepted in the Beloved. "I live, yet not I!" Glorying is excluded, yet I glory "in the Lord." It is needless to bring proofs that I have not yet attained neither am already perfect, for I admit at once that which no man knows so well as myself; yet I am accepted in One who is "perfect," and the day comes when he will present his church—of which by pure grace I am a member—to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. I shall be satisfied when I see thee, O thou unspeakably precious Savior; meantime keep me near thee, near thee! O, "abide with me!"

So, too, the recognition of this truth brings me relief when I am distracted by the confusion of tongues I hear around me. I cannot still the storm. "Christ and other masters," indeed! I sometimes fear that the other masters will shortly drown Christ's gentle voice entirely; but "that is my infirmity." I go back to my divine postulate. His church is in him; was chosen in him long before any Babels were built, or rather began to be built, for they are never finished; and his sheep will, therefore, hear his voice, whatever din there may be in the ecclesiastical world. They are all accepted in the beloved; are one with him; are the members of his body; and shall undoubtedly share in the joy and the glory of the ages to come. Thus God's eternal truths, springing out of his love to his glorious Son, become the sheet-anchor in every tempest, personal or relative, and tell me to possess my soul in patience and to "look up;" for glory will most certainly crown the edifice of which wonderful grace laid the foundation.

WHAT IS SANCTIFICATION?

D. N. FIELD.

Is it a special gift sometime in the course of christian life, or is it a blessing bestowed upon every disciple of Christ from the time of conversion? Is it true that christians do not receive the Holy Spirit, or become sanctified until years after they have put on Christ? There is evidently a confounding of the terms justification, sanctification and perfection, or the ideas connected with them. Every child of God is justified and sanctified, but yet he may not be perfect. It is probable that what the Scriptures mean by perfection, some of our Advent brethren mean by sanctification.

The word sanctification means separation, consecration, cleansing, purifying. To sanctify anything, then, is to separate it and set it apart from a common to a sacred or holy purpose. In addition to this it means when applied to men, not only to separate them from the world to God, but to make them holy. As an illustration of this definition, we read that God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it. Moses was commanded to sanctify to the Lord the first born. Again, Ex. 19: 10, "And the Lord said unto Moses, Go unto the people and sanctify them to-day and tomorrow, and let them wash their clothes." Again, Lev. 8: 10–12, "And Moses took the anointing oil and anointed the tabernacle, and all that was therein, and sanctified them. And he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all his vessels, both the laver and the foot to sanctify them. And he poured the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him to sanctify him."

From these passages we see that Aaron was sanctified in the same sense as the altar and its vessels. As Aaron and his sons, and the tabernacle were set apart for the service of God, so christians are set apart or separated from the world to the service of God, and in that sense sanctified. They are also sanctified in the sense of being made holy in disposition and character. Hence, Peter says of christians—"Elect according to the foreknowledge of God, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience." Speaking to the Thessalonians Paul says that God hath from the beginning chosen you through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." To the Ephesians he says that Christ "gave himself for the church that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." He addressed all the members of the church at Corinth as sanctified. See 1 Cor. 1: 2. In the same epistle, after referring to their former condition as Gentiles, he says, "But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God."—1 Cor. 6: 11.

That all christians are sanctified is still further evident from Heb. 10: 28–29. Speaking of apostates, Paul says—"He that despised Moses law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite to the Spirit of grace." So a man may be sanctified and still fall away and be lost.

There is a marked distinction between justification, sanctification and perfection. All christians are justified and sanctified, but all christians are not perfect. Justification is another name for pardon of sin, which is an act of government; and hence is something done for us, while sanctification is something done in us. Justification changes our state in law before God; sanctification changes our heart and life. Justification is an act done at once; sanctification is a work which is gradual. Justification removes the guilt of sin; sanctification removes its power. Justification delivers from the wrath of God; sanctification conforms us to his image.

Perfection is full growth, or maturity, or ripeness. It is so used in Luke 8: 14. We are taught in Scripture the duty of going on to perfection; to be perfect as our Father who is in heaven is perfect. We may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth until from babes in Christ we may become fathers and mothers in Israel; or, as Peter expresses it, until Christ shall "make us perfect, establish, strengthen, settle us." Still a perfect man may sin. We are told that Noah was a just man and perfect in his generation, and walked with God, yet he fell into what we should in this age of the world call a grevious sin. Abraham was a perfect man, and yet when he was in Egypt he denied that Sarah was his wife. David was a man after God's own heart, and yet he was guilty of a terrible crime. Peter, an apostle, denied his Lord with an oath.

In view of these facts, illustrative of human frailty, let us all be humble, and remember the admonition, "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

LIVING BY FAITH.

MRS. C CURRY.

"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—LUKE 18: 8.

What is the secret of our peace and happiness as christians? Are we living by faith? Living—being nourished by the words of our Father, which should be more than our meat and drink? or is the source of our life's sunshine only that reflected from the outward gifts of God's love, and which is likely to be quenched when they are withdrawn? If we are living the life of faith, we are walking in the light which visits the soul in direct rays from the Sun of Righteousness. Then we have communion with the Father through the Son. In health we feel buoyant and cheerful, and feel like letting some of our exuberance out in songs of praise, as do the birds. But are we not of more account than many sparrows? But when "Sickness casts its chain,

And lassoes strength and will
In its embrace, we try in vain
To bid our murmuring hearts 'be still.'"

The faith that the Son of man expects to find when he comes, sings songs in the night of sorrow,—precious, beautiful songs. God will have a tried people, and those who will stand nearest the great white throne are those who have come up through much tribulation. God will find faith, great faith, mighty faith. Those who believe in the Bible, and are looking daily for Jesus, have faith; they live by faith, and faith grows upon what it lives on; so the more faith they use, the more they will find to use.

The exercise of faith begets more faith. As it is used, more faith is required and always furnished to meet the demand, and no more. "Sufficient unto the day" is the faith given, and not in advance. Only as we use it do we draw the heavenly nourishment. The faith Christ expects to find is a living faith, fruitful in good works,—not by merit. God forbid that we take our works in one hand, and beg for a home in the kingdom as an equivalent in the other. But as our faith saves us, our works reward us. Even Paul said, Moses "had respect unto the recompense of the reward." God requires us to bring our sheaves with us. That lively looking for the Bridegroom with lamps trimmed and burning is the faith he will find.

DID CHRIST MAKE THE WORLD?

T. M. PREBLE.

NUMBER THREE.

A. Morton (assisted by Ezra Abbot, Jr., LL.D., formerly "Assistant Librarian of Harvard University," and the man who "revised and completed" H. L. Hastings' "Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament"), in his "Translation of the Gospels; with Notes," on John 1: 1, etc., says: "There is no word in English answering to the Greek word Logos, as here used. It was employed to denote a mode of conception concerning the Deity, familiar at the time when St. John wrote, and intimately blended with the philosophy of his age, long since obsolete, and so foreign from our habits of thinking, that it is not easy for us to conform our minds to its apprehension (p. 323). . . . The Logos of God was regarded, not in its strictest sense, as merely the Reason of God; but, under certain aspects, as the Wisdom, the Mind, the Intellect of God. To this the creation of all things was especially ascribed. The conception may seem obvious in itself; but the cause why the creation was primarily referred to the logos, or intellect of God, rather than to his goodness or omnipotence, is to be found in the Platonic philosophy as it existed about the time of Christ, and particularly as taught by the eminent Jewish philosopher Philo, of Alexandria. According to this philosophy, there existed an archetypal world of IDEAS, formed by God, the perfect model of the sensible universe; corresponding, so far as what is divine may be compared with what is human, to the plan of a building or city which an architect forms in his own mind before commencing its erection. The faculty by which God disposed and arranged the world of ideas was his Logos, Reason, or Intellect (p. 324). . . . . The Logos thus conceived of was necessarily personified, or spoken of figuratively as a person. In our own language, in describing its agencies—agency in its nature personal, and to be ultimately referred to God—we might indeed avoid attaching a personal character to the Logos considered abstractly from God, by the use of the neuter pronoun it. Thus we might say, 'All things were made by it' (p. 325). . . . The notion of the Logos, it is true, is obsolete; but we find something analogous to it in the use of the term Nature in modern times. Employed as this often is, the mind seems to rest in some indistinct notion of an agency inferior to the Supreme, or an agency, to say the least, which is not directly referred to God (p. 346). . . . .

"The Logos, it is to be recollected, was that power by which God disposed in order the ideas of the archetypal world (p. 326). . . . . It was his (John's) purpose, in the introduction of his Gospel, to declare that Christianity had the same divine origin as the universe itself; that it was to be considered as proceeding from the same power of God. Writing in Asia Minor for readers by many of whom the term Logos was more familiarly used than any other to express the attributes of God viewed in relation to his creatures, he adopted this term to convey his meaning, because, from their associations with it, it was fitted particularly to impress and affect their minds; thus connecting the great truth which he taught with their former modes of thinking and speaking (p. 335). . . . . The Logos, he (John) teaches was not the agent of God, but God himself. Using the term merely to denote the attributes of God as manifested in his works, he teaches that the operations of the Logos are the operations of God; that all conceived of under that name is to be referred immediately to God; that in speaking of the Logos we speak of God; 'that the Logos is God.'

"The Platonic conception of a personal Logos, distinct from God, was the embryo form of the Christian Trinity. If, therefore, the view just given of the purpose of St. John be correct, it is a remarkable fact that this language has been alleged as a main support of that very doctrine the rudiments of which it was intended to oppose. . . . . It is, then, of the attributes of God as displayed in the creation and government of the world, that St. John speaks under the name of 'the Logos.' To this name we have none equivalent in English, for we have not the conception which it was intended to express. The term 'Power of God' is, perhaps, as nearly equivalent as any that we can conveniently use. But in order to enter into the meaning of the passage, we must associate with this term, not the meaning alone which the English words might suggest according to their common use, but the whole notion of the Logos as present to the mind of the apostle. Adopting this term, we may say that the Power of God, personified, is the subject of the introductory verses of his Gospel. It is first said to be God, and afterwards declared to have become a man. It is first regarded in its relation to God, in whom it resides, and afterwards in its relation to Jesus, through whom it was manifested. Viewed in the former relation, what may be said of the Power of God, is true of God; the terms become identical in their purport. Viewed in the latter relation, whatever is true of the Power of God is true of Christ, considered as the minister of God. His words were the words of God; his miracles were performed by the power of God. . . . In regard to the personification of the Logos by St. John, which is a principal source of embarrassment to a modern reader, it was, as I have said, inseparable from the terms in which the conception was expressed, the actions ascribed to the Logos being of a personal character, and the use of the neuter pronoun being precluded by the syntax of the Greek language." (pp. 336-7.)

PATIENCE is bitter, but its fruit is sweet.

AGENT.

"STRIVE NOT ABOUT WORDS."

There are two kinds of strife. One is to "strive lawfully," the other is to "strive about words to no profit." To strive is to make great efforts with earnestness,—"to labor hard"—"to struggle in opposition." We do not strive without some strong motive power propelling us in the exertion. This power comes from two sources, usually. It comes from either love and good-will, or from combativeness or enmity and hatred. Men in a state of nature are excited to earnest acts by an influence from the two sources. A father might earnestly labor to save his son from evil because he loved him, and strive just as earnestly to defame and injure his neighbor because he hated him. But when men become christians, they are restricted from the earnest acts produced by the power of rivalry or contention, and are only allowed to be stimulated by love and a desire to benefit.

Men contend more about little things than great matters. They contend more about "words" than principles,—more about the manner of speaking, than the matter spoken of. One man has been trained to represent a subject in a certain way, another man describes the same thing differently, and they contend about the matter and become angry as if they were advocating radically different principles, when their difference is only in words and not in sentiments.

When christians allow themselves to indulge in strife upon any subject with the spirit of rivalry, hatred or revenge, they violate a sacred principle of the gospel, and commence a course of backsliding from God. When this strife about words is allowed in meetings of worship, their winning, saving influence is invariably lost. When a religious paper is made the medium of carnal strife about questions which angels could not settle, and abstractions which cause men to play on words and attempt to explain what they do not understand, producing alienation, contention and war, its usefulness in the cause of truth and salvation is destroyed.

Good articles are sometimes destroyed by a few sentences which are personal;—other writer's words quoted and thrown into their faces in an unkind manner. Such things tend to alienate brethren, harden sinners, and defame Christ. A person holding an error (and who can say that he has none) is much more easily convinced of it by showing him the truth upon the subject in its beauty, and in a loving, kind way, than by making his error appear hideous, and representing him as very foolish and wicked for holding it.

Let all who would do good study human nature, and understand that if we would save men, we must win and draw them as the "serpent" charms, and not attempt to drive and dictate them. If any speak, write, or do anything to others with a desire to injure their feelings or reputation, they are moved by a wrong spirit, and should rid themselves of it by earnest prayer and constant watchfulness to guard against it. The Spirit of Christ produces but one motive, and that is to benefit men in all we do in our associations with them. It never produces rivalry or retaliation.

May God grant us much of the divine Spirit and a fullness of heavenly love, which will conquer self, restrain from evil, and prompt us with a mighty energy to do good unto all men.

QUESTIONS.

We are constantly receiving questions upon Bible and religious subjects, from friends who are anxious to receive instruction, to have some snarl unravelled, some dark problem solved, or some light thrown upon that which seems doubtful and difficult to explain. We should be happy to accommodate these friends by making an effort to answer their questions, but with the multitude of cares and duties we have to attend to at present, we cannot possibly give our attention to them. Some of them we could probably answer satisfactorily if we had the time; and some of them we should doubtless be unqualified to answer correctly, or satisfactorily. We hope those who have propounded the questions will kindly excuse us, and not feel that we are not disposed to serve them with all the ability we have.

DISCUSSION IN CALIFORNIA.

When we wrote last, we had just closed a discussion with Prof. Chaney on the subject of Spiritualism. He made the poorest defense of the system of any man we have ever met in debate; not for want of ability, for he is a strong man intellectually, gifted in speech, and would be a champion if on the side of truth.

Tuesday evening, Feb. 3d, we commenced with him the discussion of the divine origin of the Bible, and continued the debate four evenings. He framed the question as follows:—

Resolved, That the Bible is chiefly a compilation from more ancient writings, wherein were veiled in allegories the mysteries of science and morals.

He commenced by asserting that Moses copied from the Vedas of India, and that therefore the Bible was not as old as the Brahman religion, founded by Brahma. The Vedas are the oldest religious books known, excepting the Bible. They consist of 1028 hymns. These Vedas were written in the Sanscrit language. They contain a few chronicles, but no chronology; hence their precise date cannot be ascertained. The most reliable authority places the origin of the Vedas less than seven hundred years before Christ. Their most probable date is about seven hundred and forty-three B. C.; whereas Moses lived and wrote over fifteen hundred years B. C.; hence could not have copied from the Vedas, or the Brahman religion, which was the first false system established in the history of the world, of which we have any knowledge.

There is but little reason, if any, to doubt that Brahmanism came from the same source as modern Spiritualism; that is, from demons. The Brahmans claimed that the Vedas were of supernatural origin. They worshiped the god of nature, the same as do the more advanced Spiritualists at the present day. Mr. Chaney said he did not believe in any personal God that had senses, but in a force in nature. We reminded him that there could be no force only where bodies previously existed; hence his God was but a result, and not a creator; helpless, irresponsible, unintelligent force, that cannot help us; that can neither see, hear, speak, nor feel; that which we can neither fear, love nor adore. Such was the god of Brahmanism; and such is the god of Spiritualism as advocated by Mr. Chaney; therefore, instead of the Jewish religion being a copy from the Vedas, Spiritualism is the copyist.

Following Brahmanism, came Buddhism, having its origin with Buddha, who is said to have died five hundred and forty-three B. C. The date of the rise of Brahmanism is ascertained in part from the commencement of Buddhism. The time between Brahma and the first Buddha is said to be about two hundred years; therefore the date of the first Buddha would determine the beginning of Brahmanism. The Buddhists have claimed that there were thirty-three Buddhist patriarchs previous to the one who died B. C. 543. This being true, the Vedas of the Brahmans would be thrown back several centuries before the first recorded death of a Buddha, B. C. 543; especially if the claim of the Buddhists be admitted, that one of their Buddhas lived "many thousand years." They say he was "eighty thousand miles in stature."—New American Cyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 67. But it is found that the claim for the thirty-three Buddhist patriarchs, before the one who died B. C. 543, is not sustained by good evidence. In the New American Cyclopedia, we find the following: "As the skillfully contrived story of thirty-three Buddhist patriarchs in uninterrupted succession is now exploded, we prefer the Cingalese date of 543 B. C."—vol. 4, p. 62.

As the Vedas were about two hundred years earlier, it would give their date some 743 years B. C.; hence Moses lived about 790 years before the Vedas were written. There is not the first particle of evidence to show that he copied from the Vedas. It is said: "All these Buddhas of the dimmest antiquity are dogmatic, mythological, and fantastic personages."—New Amer. Cyclopedia, v. 4, p. 67. "Oriental scholars now concur in fixing the date of its [Buddhism] origin about the beginning of the sixth century. B. C.—Chambers' Cyclopedia, vol. 2, p. 403. The Brahmans say: "The first being produced from the self-existent was Brahma, the great forefather of all spirits. Brahma created the heavens and the earth."—Chambers' Cyclo., vol. 2, p. 301.

Buddhism, the religion of the Hindoos, grew out of Brahmanism. Some of the Buddhist nations "have no word in their language to express a notion of a God."—Chambers' Cyclo., v. 2, p. 405. "They know no beings with greater supernatural power than any man is supposed capable of attaining to by virtue, austerity, and science."—Ibid. The same is true of Spiritualism. Buddha is said to have descended "from heaven as a white elephant; is conceived as a five-colored ray of light."—New American Cyclo., vol. 4, p. 61. "Buddhism knows of no creation."—Ibid, p. 64.

The following is a specimen of the Hindoo chronology: "The Hindoos" have "four great periods called yugs. The first.... lasted one million seven hundred and twenty-eight thousand years; the second, ... one million two hundred and ninety-six thousand years; the third, ... eight hundred and sixty-four thousand years; and the fourth [the present period] will continue four hundred and thirty-two thousand years." Theology of the Hindoos, p. 28.

The Lord gave us special help in the defense of his truth. The Bible seemed more precious than ever. It is truly alarming to see how rapidly infidelity is advancing among the people, and their great boldness in speaking against the Sacred Scriptures, our Savior, and his Father. The heaviest artillery of Satan seems to be directed now against God and the Bible. More anon.

M. G.

STRANGE TIMES.

That wickedness is rapidly increasing cannot be doubted by any one who is at all posted in the alarming frequency of the most daring crimes. As men turn away from God and the Bible, to grope in the darkness of infidelity, it may be expected that they will yield more readily and fully to the temptations of Satan, and the promptings of their evil natures. Men are becoming very bold in committing the most daring deeds. The following is a sample:—

RAILWAY TRAIN ROBBED.

The Chicago Tribune, of February 2d, contains the following particulars of the recent robbery of a railway train at Gad's Hill, Missouri:

St. Louis, Mo., February 1st. The train robbed at Gad's Hill, on the Iron Mountain railroad, last night, has been a general theme of conversation here to-day. The Little Rock express train left St. Louis at 9.20 yesterday morning, with its usual complement of passengers.

Gad's Hill is a small station at which trains do not stop unless signalled. The train was brought to a stand-still at sight of a red flag. It was boarded by seven desperadoes. The conductor, O. A. Alford, was ordered to give up his watch and money, which he did, but the former was returned. They then robbed the express messenger and safe, and took the registered letters from the mail-agent. While going through the cars they inquired the name of every passenger, and especially for a Mr. Pinkerton, who they probably thought had his pockets well lined with greenbacks. Among those plundered was J. S. Morley, President of the Iron Mountain Railroad. The thieves were each armed with two revolvers and a gun, and wore masks. Before the arrival of the train they had taken the precaution to open the switches, so that further progress would be impossible, and collected all the men, women, and children in the village around the platform. They are all described as being above the average height, none being under six feet.

After the robbers had seized Conductor Alford and other train men, and placed them under guard, one of the gang passed along the line of the train flourishing pistols, and commanded the passengers to keep quiet, or they would kill the conductor and engineer. Part of the band then robbed the express and mail, taking only money, and afterwards plundered the passengers. There were only twelve male passengers, five ladies and several children on the train. The total amount of money obtained, including $1,080 from the express, was $2,344. They took only gold watches from the passengers, and returned those of General Superintendent Morley, who was on the train, and Conductor Alford, because they had their names engraved on them. The robbers also took $800 from the citizens of Gad's Hill.

The thieves are unknown, but it is thought a clew to them has been ascertained. They were traced to Black River, six miles west of Gads' Hill, but the trail was lost there. The Sheriff of Wayne County is endeavoring to organize a posse at Piedmont to scour the country for the robbers, and it is understood that the Post-office Department and Adams' Express Company will take active measures to capture them.

As we approach the end, we may expect such things to multiply. We may well pray, "Let thy kingdom come." How much we need the help of Jesus every moment. Human strength is not sufficient to stand in the great conflict now going on with the powers of darkness. If we ever needed to have on "the whole armor of God," it is now.

CASTES IN SOCIETY.

Caste is a particular grade of society produced by hereditary distinctions, attainments, profession, or occupation. These castes are elevated or depressed according to popular opinion. In some communities that which would produce nobility and honor, in another community would produce ignominy and disgrace. Human scales which profess to give us the relative value of the character of different classes of men vary, according to the rules by which those values are determined. The divine scales never vary, but give us exactly the same decision at all times and with all classes. It presents but two castes, the righteous and the wicked. Its decisions are not varied by hereditary distinctions, worldly attainments, profession, or occupation; but are governed entirely by the purity or impurity of the heart. The human standard of valuation of the castes never recognizes the spiritual status, but the worldly—the external.

The gospel allows no distinctions or castes among its adherents. No one is allowed to say to his fellow, "master," or "father"; for they are all one—brethren or equals—in Christ Jesus. When any member of Christ's church allows himself to be elevated above his brethren by title, or in spirit, by consenting to receive honors of superiority, or coveting the applause of men, he is drinking in the spirit of the world, and will lose his first love. A church governed by such an influence will be divided into high and low castes, just like the world.

The advancement of true Christianity and real civilization in a community may be known by the equalization of society. The exalted will be brought down, and the abased will be elevated. But when society is by any means made more unequal in its advantages and enjoyments, it is receding from Christianity and drifting into heathenism. With God there is no partiality in the government of his creatures, therefore, the nearer men get to him, the less partiality there will be with them.

When a nation is drifting into a position of inequality among its citizens, as to profit, privileges and honor, it is going down in civilization, and tending to revolution and destruction. A government that will enact laws tending to elevate the higher and oppress the lower classes is committing suicide. When a nation elevates as rulers scheming speculators and grasping misers, it is weaving its own shroud, and digging its own grave.

According to these principles—the truthfulness of which we think but few will dispute—the world to-day is rapidly drifting to the vortex of ruin. Why is there such a universal cry of oppression among the lower classes? Why such convulsive throes among the hundreds of millions for more equality? It is because the gulf between the higher and lower classes is becoming wider and more impassable every day. The higher caste have more than heart could wish, and their eyes stand out with fatness, while the lower grade are lean with hunger, and starving where there is fulness of bread. A few, comparatively, are hoarding up the bounties of Providence, which were given, not for the few, but for all.

Hear a political editor tell a few facts relating to this subject:—

"Our best lawyers value their time from $40 to $50 per hour, which is a reasonable charge.... If, however, the case be one where half a million is at stake, then instead of a mere fifty you will be expected to advance a retaining fee of $500, or perhaps $1000. This prevents any one from securing the services of the lawyer thus retained. If a lawyer, even after receiving such a fee, should win the case, he will expect from $10,000 to $15,000 additional. Our great lawyers demand pay commensurate with their reputation, and hence some of them can boast a practice worth $50,000 per year. O'Connor, previous to his retirement, made annually, it is said, nearly four times that sum. Indeed, he was probably paid $200,000 for his services in the Jumel case. He is now worth more than a million, all of which he has made by his own genius and industry."—Concord (N. H.) Monitor.

"HOW ONLY THE DECLINE OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC CAN BE PREVENTED.

The next century will show us social changes material, in my opinion. Great changes in the relations of capital and labor; great changes in the position of woman; changes in the nature of government, in the relations of Church and State—these are the prominent facts of the next one hundred years. If they come, well. If they do not come, that boy is born, to-day, who, like Gibbon, when he wrote the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,"—that boy is born, to-day, who will write the decline and fall of the American republic. Because to any thoughtful man it is evident that the grasp of associated wealth in an age when the sin of not being rich is only atoned for by the effort to become so; the grasp of associated wealth of bank and railroad and manufacturer on legislative independence, on the possibility of individual independence, is so rigid and despotic and inevitable that, unless we evade it by some great social changes, it won't be possible for this republic to survive. We see a power infinitely grander than that of the feudal barons of three hundred years ago, infinitely more irresistible than that. To-day, Mr. Gladstone said, speaking of the Church,—the disestablishment of the English Church: "We cannot trust the Church beyond the clasp of the Government's hand; as a rival power wielding £90,000,000 sterling, it is too grave a charge to the British Government." Ninety million pounds—$450,000,000—too grave a charge for the British Government, three times as strong as ours; and yet one man, the head of the Pennsylvania Railroad—Mr. Scott—wields $450,000,000, and the very sweep of his garments as he marches east from San Francisco to Philadelphia is more than sufficient to sweep down Legislatures as he goes. I look for no safety here except in great social changes. I believe that the day is gone by in this country when you can get half a man's power out of him on a system of wages; it was possible two hundred years ago. Ignorant, short sighted, narrow viewed, the dependent laboring class accepted the best they had offered them, and lived from day to day and hardly overlooked the margin of another week; they were contented with the system. But intelligence, education, responsibility, the ballot, a share in the Government, has dispelled all that content, and unless we have co-operation, unless we have labor taken into a great copartnership with capital, labor will tear capital to pieces. That is in the future."

THE REPUBLIC IN EUROPE.

"Now, these changes which impend over us are impending over Europe. I think the republic in Europe is much nearer than many imagine. The republic in Great Britain is much nearer than many imagine. There is but one great bulwark, to-day, in the way, and that is land. There is nothing in the Church or the State or the Lords that would delay for twenty years the advent of the republic, because the same change has come over the masses there as exist here. Arch and Bradlaugh, and the masses behind them, they understand human nature, and the claims of every man born on the soil to recognition better than people think or allow. The moment they break down the aristocratic bulwark of the land owned by three hundred thousand men, the waters are out and the flooding sea; down in the vast abyss go the turrets and towers of old institutions, and the frigate of the British republic is anchored forever on the Thames. I believe, too, in the nearer advent of republicanism in France than any imagine. There is no Bonaparte left, thank God, and hardly a Bourbon left to rally under. The Duc d'Aumale's character and private views are the best introduction of any of the family, but even he cannot drag France back to the Bourbon dynasty, and the very necessity of the hour will bring France back into the arms of a great soldier or a great statesman. German arrogance looks over the border and France's pride has sworn the deepest oath that another generation shall not pass without revenge. There is no Bonaparte or Bourbon, but Sedan must be avenged. France will follow in the steps of any energetic man, and the right man will come. See the state of Spain to-day. Spain has no king and no queen to make a claim whose character could bear four hours' investigation. Spain floats into the hand of soldier or statesman from the very want of a dynasty. Look back in England; in all her political periods, what carried her back to the throne? The existence of some daughter or cousin or second son with ability. Spain has got nothing such, and consequently all the forces of Europe are in wild disorder to-day, that crash and jostle against each other like frigates in a storm. But underneath, in the near future, there seems to be but one possibility that national pride can be satisfied, that national position can be gained, only in a constitutional monarchy, which is nearly a republic or in a republic. France, as a monarchy, must be a third-rate power; France, as a republic, will govern Europe. This is the motive that carries the Frenchman back."—Boston Journal.

Who will be the "great soldier, or the great statesman," to hush the elements of this terrific national storm in silence, and evenly balance human society, so that equality and justice shall rule the world. The Great Immanuel—the King Eternal. He will put an eternal end to human partiality and satanic bigotry. He will raise to peerage with angels all who love him, and give them the riches and everlasting blessedness of his glorious kingdom.

NOTICE.—We are all out of the No. of Crisis containing Spurgeon's Sermon.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THY CHILDREN SHALL COME AGAIN.

C. H. SHEPHERD.

Jeremiah 31: 15 reads, "Thus saith the Lord; A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not." This prophecy was fulfilled in the infancy of our Lord Jesus Christ, when Herod, that wicked king, slew all the children of Bethlehem from two years old and under. Therefore it is not strange that the prophet said "lamentation and bitter weeping," when he saw by the prophetic eye those mothers of Bethlehem bereft of their children. They were torn from their embrace—murdered before their eyes, and they refused to be comforted.

But the Lord did not leave them comfortless; but says, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." The Lord understands his promise fully. He is too wise to err. In all his attributes he is infinite; therefore, we could not suppose for a moment that the Lord would give those finite creatures who were in deep anguish, lamenting for their slain children, a false hope. He knew whether those very children could come again from death's dark shade. He knew he could fulfill his promise; therefore he made the promise, "thy childdren shall come again." Yes, your children, Rachel! you will know them as yours. Blessed be God for words like these! What comfort would this language have been to Rachel if she had not believed that the Lord would restore to her her children? I answer, none; but she could trust him, believing his word.

There is hope, not only for Rachel but for all who have children in the enemy's land. How many mothers have been comforted by these words—"Thy children shall come again to their own border"—when they have seen the last flickering spark of life go out, their home made desolate, and their little ones carried to their last resting place. The morning will soon dawn, and all who sleep in Christ will awake. Blessed dawning!

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Pursuant to notice, on Thursday evening, January 29th, the Quarterly Conference met at Reed meeting-house, Richmond, Me., for the worship of God. Bro. H. D. Reed preached. There was good attention. Friday morning we had a good prayer-meeting; another in the afternoon. Evening, preaching by H. D. Reed. Saturday, on account of the storm, but a few were present, and we had but one meeting. Sunday morning was pleasant. We had a prayer-meeting, and it was good and profitable. P. M. Preaching by L. Rhoads; evening again by H. S. Mitchell. We think this meeting left a good impression on the people.

We felt sad to think there was no more interest with the preaching brethren in sustaining the Quarterly Conference. Preachers present, H. D. Reed, L. Rhodes, and H. S. Mitchell. Our next conference is in May. Any church wishing to have it can send in their request.

THE LATE PANIC.

Distrust is the child of dishonesty. When the people find their legislators, from President down to pettifogger, whom chance has elevated to place and power, engaged in plundering the public Treasury, speculating in Credit Mobilier stocks, voting themselves thousands of dollars "back pay," and doubling their own salaries at their own sweet wills; when it is seen that great land grants are bestowed on railway speculations, in which the people who own the land have little or no interest; when defalcations in banks, revenue offices, trust companies, post-offices, etc., are so frequent, is it a matter of surprise that the people have no confidence in public men, or that a crushing panic follows such wickedness? With an honest government, in which the people could place reliance, there could be no ground for such "scares."—Phrenological Journal.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Wishing to move our office on the first of May next, to less expensive rooms, and having several thousand back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER on hand, which we do not wish to move, we make the following liberal offers:—

We will send one or more copies of back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER in neat wrappers post-paid, to any address for two cents per copy. This is a small part of the cost; for we have to pay postage, find wrappers, and hire them wrapped and mailed; but we believe great good can be done if each of our readers will send us ten to fifty addresses of persons who they think would be benefitted by receiving a copy of the BIBLE BANNER, enclosing two cents for each address. A friend of ours called at this office a few months since, and gave us a score or two of addresses, with two or three cents per copy for postage, etc., and we have been greatly surprised at the result. Unfortunately, however, in a financial point of view, for us, this brother selected a large number of ministers of the gospel, many of whom accepted our "year-free" offer. Hence we ask our readers to send us a large proportion of those who will be likely to subscribe. Reader, if you respond, please do so at once, and address,

Correspondence.

From Bro. G. W. Turner.

Dear brethren and sisters of like faith, both East and West:—After so long a time I feel it a duty to let you know what I am doing in the cause of the Master. As I let my mind run back twenty years, I remember that many of our great and good pioneers in the Advent movement are now sleeping under the power of the great monster, death; my brother C. B. T., according to the flesh, with the rest. There are others who once stood in the front ranks of the battle, but whose voices are now, for some reason, hushed into silence. I am led to ask the question, Who of all the tribes that started out shall go in to inherit the land? We must believe that a Caleb and a Joshua will be preserved to enter the glorious Canaan of rest. But while we see so much on every hand to decieve, if possible, the very elect, we are more than ever satisfied that the old Gospel ship is very near to land. Many have become ashamed that definite time was ever preached, and feel some as Jonah did after he preached to the Ninevites, and want to crawl away under a gourd-plant, somewhere, and see what the Lord will do. Others are caught in some of the traps that the devil has set to catch men in these last days.

Dear Bride of the Master, do you love God with all your soul, might, mind and strength, and your neighbor as yourself? If you do, lift up your heads; the blessed Savior said that love was the fulfilling of the law, and if we love God, he certainly loves us. And if he be for us, who can be against us, and prosper? God will vindicate his cause in due time. Let us keep at our work, and soon we shall hear the "well done." We want some of your ministers of God, whose hearts are fired up with love, who are treading on one another's heels there in the East, to come West. Here is room enough, and a chance to live in the good old Pioneer style,—log-houses without being chinked very tight, one grade of society, plenty of pudding and milk, pork and beans, and work enough to get a good appetite for it. And the best of all is, many good, sound minded men and women that can be gained as a Bride for the Master. I have just been laboring in Barron Co., which is not divided into towns yet, where splendid homesteads may be taken of the Government;—good land, timber and water, and where the people are hungry to hear the word of life.

Right here I want to say to the noble conductors and supporters of our good paper, the Crisis, that I am very grateful to you for sending it to me so long, free, for as I am not able to give away many tracts, and I preach to a good many poor people, I give away the Crisis and Times, and I find it often gets subscribers and does great good, which we can only compute at the day of Judgment. Now I do hope that some good lover of the Lord that reads this will make up his mind to come to Wisconsin. The harvest is great here, and laborers are few.

God grant that we may all be kept in these perils of the last days, by the power of God through faith unto salvation which is ready to be revealed in the last time. We have need of patience, that after having done the will of God we might receive the promise. "He that is to come, will come, and will not tarry." Amen.

Eauclair, Wis.

From R. G.

The call for short letters finds a response in my heart. Much of the religious reading on our tables is not calculated to increase deep-toned piety in every day life. The inner man must be fed in order to grow and expand. What we need is spiritual aliment, and if it comes in a nut-shell, so much the better.

The christian life is somewhat varied in different temperaments, but the principles are the same in all. To walk life's rugged path amid struggles, trials and besetments with an even, uniform heart and mind, requires divine assistance at every step. Such aid is proffered, and has oftimes been received by the disciples of Christ in all ages of the church's history, especially in these last days, "upon whom the ends of the world are come."

A walk with God, daily help from his hand is what is needed now to strengthen and encourage the weary, worn travelers. This we can have in all its fullness, "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over," and with it we can do all things. Help from God tells the whole story,—hourly help. We can have it amid the most chequered scenes, varied temptations, fiery trials and perplexities with which we are beset on every hand.

Rest, peace and quiet in the heart will cause the turmoil of business, frustrated plans and projects, family cares and domestic duties, of whatever sort, to sink into insignificance. In every pressing necessity, Christ is a "present help." No change or condition can nullify the infallible word on this point. Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall not fail. The promises are ours; we have only to try them to prove their strength and help.

Springfield, Mass.

From Bro. E. N. Bliss.

As I have been solicited to write for the paper of what I am doing and have been doing since I came here, I will take my pen and see what I can do. This is the first time I ever wrote for the Crisis, and as I do not desire notoriety, I had much rather go along in my own quiet way, doing what my Master gives me to do, and look to him for my reward, than to be seen or heard of men. I am striving so to live that I may at last hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." But as that would not be doing as we like to be done by—for we all love to hear from the dear ones scattered abroad—and in view of what the A. A. M. Society has done for me, I feel it duty to write.

I am about thirty-five miles south of the north line of the State, and about the middle of it east and west. I came from Chicago into Republick Co., last Feb. After I arrived at Werterville, I had between sixty and seventy miles to walk to get to my destination; one day through a driving snow storm. But I arrived safely, and went to work in the name of the Lord, and he has blest me much, and has given me souls for my hire. I spent about three months last summer in the Kansas Mission Tent with the State Evangelist, a good brother whose heart is in the work. I do not think the Conference could have made a better choice; and I hope he may be re-elected to fill the office the coming year. May God bless his labors.

The cause is gaining ground here, in spite of all the opposition that can be brought against us. I have all the calls to preach that I can attend to, and my time is engaged now until the middle of April, in new fields. My work is missionary work almost entirely; and when our eastern Brn. complain of their pay, let me say that all the money I have received since I came into this State the 22nd of Feb., 1873, is $13.45. I have been here almost a year, and if it had not been for the aid sent me by the A. A. M. Society, I should have been compelled to leave the State, as my health is so poor that I am not able to do manual labor to get money to travel much. I will soon write and let you know what I am now doing, and what the good Lord has done for me. I am looking for immortality when Jesus comes, and not before.

Glen Elder, Mitchell Co., Kansas.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear ones in Jesus:—I have been thinking how sweet it would be to have you all come and sit by me, and talk of the blessed things that are laid up for those that love Jesus. And when I think of these things, it makes me long for the morning to dawn in splendor and glory, when all the dear ones shall be gathered where there will be no more pain, sorrow, suffering or trials to trouble or disturb us. Never did I feel so weary, so perfectly sick of everything earthly, as I do now, and have for the past few months. If I ever prayed for the kingdom to come, I do now.

For years I have not suffered in cold weather as I have the past autumn and winter. When I lie here long days in such extreme pain, how I long for Jesus to come; and when pain is so severe that sleep does not relieve my poor aching body, I sigh for home, where there will be one eternal day of perfect rest and peace. How precious does Jesus appear to me; and how glad I am I sought and found him in the days of my youth, before sickness had made me almost helpless. How I want to praise Jesus face to face for his precious love, for his exceeding great goodness in accepting a weak, helpless child like me. How good he is. O, who can reject his offered mercy? who can spurn his love, and turn him away? How my heart runs out after those who do not know him as their Savior and Friend. How I want to take them by the hand and point them to Jesus.

Dear ones, will you please unite to ask the Lord, with me, to restore to me the use of my left hand and arm, and grant me the use of it, if I live, till Jesus comes. It is so painful at times it seems as if I could hardly endure it. It was better in the summer, but is much worse this winter, and I fear unless I have help soon I shall lose the use of it entirely. If it is Father's will, I can say, Amen; but pray that if it please him I may have the use of it. I need your earnest prayers, sympathies, and words of comfort and consolation.

I believe we shall soon see Jesus and be made like him, to die nor suffer again.

No. Dana, Mass., Jan. 30th, 1874.

From Sr. O. Smith.

To all who love our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ:—Jesus said, when he went away, he would come again and take us to himself; and I believe that time is very near. O dear ones, let us try and all get all ready to meet that precious Friend with joy. The Lord has seen fit of late to permit the cold hand of death to come into my family and take my kind companion, now in my old age. O it did seem to me I could hardly bear up under it, but Jesus whispered, Be still, and know that I am God; and from that time the language of my heart has been, Lord, though thou slay me, I will trust in thee. I have sweet peace in my soul, for I feel I shall soon meet my companion again. We shall soon meet all those loved ones who are in the enemy's land. Yes, they will come forth! Praise the good Lord!

The people of God under these afflictions are often tempted to be impatient; but they should wait calmly for the time God has appointed for their deliverance. How important it is for us to have grace to bear our afflictions. God sees it needful for the people to be tried; and if we could see the end of these afflictions, and how they work for our good, we should have no cause for complaint. I do praise God that my faith stands in the power of God. In the darkest hour I can trust in Jesus, and have peace. How blessed it is to have such a Friend. Let us not be impatient, but in all trials look to God for supporting grace, and he will take care of the trial, and will work all for our best good and his glory. Let us keep our eye single, and be hasting unto the coming of our Lord from heaven, and so be fitted for the rest which remains for the people of God.

I am eighty years old next month. My pilgrimage is almost over, but I praise the great Jehovah that I am what I am; and my daily prayer is that we who have so much light may be more united in our ef-

AGENT.

"STRIVE NOT ABOUT WORDS."

There are two kinds of strife. One is to "strive lawfully," the other is to "strive about words to no profit." To strive is to make great efforts with earnestness,—"to labor hard"—"to struggle in opposition." We do not strive without some strong motive power propelling us in the exertion. This power comes from two sources, usually. It comes from either love and good-will, or from combativeness or enmity and hatred. Men in a state of nature are excited to earnest acts by an influence from the two sources. A father might earnestly labor to save his son from evil because he loved him, and strive just as earnestly to defame and injure his neighbor because he hated him. But when men become christians, they are restricted from the earnest acts produced by the power of rivalry or contention, and are only allowed to be stimulated by love and a desire to benefit.

Men contend more about little things than great matters. They contend more about "words" than principles,—more about the manner of speaking, than the matter spoken of. One man has been trained to represent a subject in a certain way, another man describes the same thing differently, and they contend about the matter and become angry as if they were advocating radically different principles, when their difference is only in words and not in sentiments.

When christians allow themselves to indulge in strife upon any subject with the spirit of rivalry, hatred or revenge, they violate a sacred principle of the gospel, and commence a course of backsliding from God. When this strife about words is allowed in meetings of worship, their winning, saving influence is invariably lost. When a religious paper is made the medium of carnal strife about questions which angels could not settle, and abstractions which cause men to play on words and attempt to explain what they do not understand, producing alienation, contention and war, its usefulness in the cause of truth and salvation is destroyed.

Good articles are sometimes destroyed by a few sentences which are personal;—other writer's words quoted and thrown into their faces in an unkind manner. Such things tend to alienate brethren, harden sinners, and defame Christ. A person holding an error (and who can say that he has none) is much more easily convinced of it by showing him the truth upon the subject in its beauty, and in a loving, kind way, than by making his error appear hideous, and representing him as very foolish and wicked for holding it.

Let all who would do good study human nature, and understand that if we would save men, we must win and draw them as the "serpent" charms, and not attempt to drive and dictate them. If any speak, write, or do anything to others with a desire to injure their feelings or reputation, they are moved by a wrong spirit, and should rid themselves of it by earnest prayer and constant watchfulness to guard against it. The Spirit of Christ produces but one motive, and that is to benefit men in all we do in our associations with them. It never produces rivalry or retaliation.

May God grant us much of the divine Spirit and a fullness of heavenly love, which will conquer self, restrain from evil, and prompt us with a mighty energy to do good unto all men.

QUESTIONS.

We are constantly receiving questions upon Bible and religious subjects, from friends who are anxious to receive instruction, to have some snarl unravelled, some dark problem solved, or some light thrown upon that which seems doubtful and difficult to explain. We should be happy to accommodate these friends by making an effort to answer their questions, but with the multitude of cares and duties we have to attend to at present, we cannot possibly give our attention to them. Some of them we could probably answer satisfactorily if we had the time; and some of them we should doubtless be unqualified to answer correctly, or satisfactorily. We hope those who have propounded the questions will kindly excuse us, and not feel that we are not disposed to serve them with all the ability we have.

DISCUSSION IN CALIFORNIA.

When we wrote last, we had just closed a discussion with Prof. Chaney on the subject of Spiritualism. He made the poorest defense of the system of any man we have ever met in debate; not for want of ability, for he is a strong man intellectually, gifted in speech, and would be a champion if on the side of truth.

Tuesday evening, Feb. 3d, we commenced with him the discussion of the divine origin of the Bible, and continued the debate four evenings. He framed the question as follows:—

Resolved, That the Bible is chiefly a compilation from more ancient writings, wherein were veiled in allegories the mysteries of science and morals.

He commenced by asserting that Moses copied from the Vedas of India, and that therefore the Bible was not as old as the Brahman religion, founded by Brahma. The Vedas are the oldest religious books known, excepting the Bible. They consist of 1028 hymns. These Vedas were written in the Sanscrit language. They contain a few chronicles, but no chronology; hence their precise date cannot be ascertained. The most reliable authority places the origin of the Vedas less than seven hundred years before Christ. Their most probable date is about seven hundred and forty-three B. C.; whereas Moses lived and wrote over fifteen hundred years B. C.; hence could not have copied from the Vedas, or the Brahman religion, which was the first false system established in the history of the world, of which we have any knowledge.

There is but little reason, if any, to doubt that Brahmanism came from the same source as modern Spiritualism; that is, from demons. The Brahmans claimed that the Vedas were of supernatural origin. They worshiped the god of nature, the same as do the more advanced Spiritualists at the present day. Mr. Chaney said he did not believe in any personal God that had senses, but in a force in nature. We reminded him that there could be no force only where bodies previously existed; hence his God was but a result, and not a creator; helpless, irresponsible, unintelligent force, that cannot help us; that can neither see, hear, speak, nor feel; that which we can neither fear, love nor adore. Such was the god of Brahmanism; and such is the god of Spiritualism as advocated by Mr. Chaney; therefore, instead of the Jewish religion being a copy from the Vedas, Spiritualism is the copyist.

Following Brahmanism, came Buddhism, having its origin with Buddha, who is said to have died five hundred and forty-three B. C. The date of the rise of Brahmanism is ascertained in part from the commencement of Buddhism. The time between Brahma and the first Buddha is said to be about two hundred years; therefore the date of the first Buddha would determine the beginning of Brahmanism. The Buddhists have claimed that there were thirty-three Buddhist patriarchs previous to the one who died B. C. 543. This being true, the Vedas of the Brahmans would be thrown back several centuries before the first recorded death of a Buddha, B. C. 543; especially if the claim of the Buddhists be admitted, that one of their Buddhas lived "many thousand years." They say he was "eighty thousand miles in stature."—New American Cyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 67. But it is found that the claim for the thirty-three Buddhist patriarchs, before the one who died B. C. 543, is not sustained by good evidence. In the New American Cyclopedia, we find the following: "As the skillfully contrived story of thirty-three Buddhist patriarchs in uninterrupted succession is now exploded, we prefer the Cingalese date of 543 B. C."—vol. 4, p. 62.

As the Vedas were about two hundred years earlier, it would give their date some 743 years B. C.; hence Moses lived about 790 years before the Vedas were written. There is not the first particle of evidence to show that he copied from the Vedas. It is said: "All these Buddhas of the dimmest antiquity are dogmatic, mythological, and fantastic personages."—New Amer. Cyclopedia, v. 4, p. 67. "Oriental scholars now concur in fixing the date of its [Buddhism] origin about the beginning of the sixth century. B. C.—Chambers' Cyclopedia, vol. 2, p. 403. The Brahmans say: "The first being produced from the self-existent was Brahma, the great forefather of all spirits. Brahma created the heavens and the earth."—Chambers' Cyclo., vol. 2, p. 301.

Buddhism, the religion of the Hindoos, grew out of Brahmanism. Some of the Buddhist nations "have no word in their language to express a notion of a God."—Chambers' Cyclo., v. 2, p. 405. "They know no beings with greater supernatural power than any man is supposed capable of attaining to by virtue, austerity, and science."—Ibid. The same is true of Spiritualism. Buddha is said to have descended "from heaven as a white elephant; is conceived as a five-colored ray of light."—New American Cyclo., vol. 4, p. 61. "Buddhism knows of no creation."—Ibid, p. 64.

The following is a specimen of the Hindoo chronology: "The Hindoos" have "four great periods called yugs. The first . . . . lasted one million seven hundred and twenty-eight thousand years; the second, ... one million two hundred and ninety-six thousand years; the third, ... eight hundred and sixty-four thousand years; and the fourth [the present period] will continue four hundred and thirty-two thousand years." Theology of the Hindoos, p. 28.

The Lord gave us special help in the defense of his truth. The Bible seemed more precious than ever. It is truly alarming to see how rapidly infidelity is advancing among the people, and their great boldness in speaking against the Sacred Scriptures, our Savior, and his Father. The heaviest artillery of Satan seems to be directed now against God and the Bible. More anon.

STRANGE TIMES.

That wickedness is rapidly increasing cannot be doubted by any one who is at all posted in the alarming frequency of the most daring crimes. As men turn away from God and the Bible, to grope in the darkness of infidelity, it may be expected that they will yield more readily and fully to the temptations of Satan, and the promptings of their evil natures. Men are becoming very bold in committing the most daring deeds. The following is a sample:—

RAILWAY TRAIN ROBBED.

The Chicago Tribune, of February 2d, contains the following particulars of the recent robbery of a railway train at Gad's Hill, Missouri:

St. Louis, Mo., February 1st. The train robbed at Gad's Hill, on the Iron Mountain railroad, last night, has been a general theme of conversation here to-day. The Little Rock express train left St. Louis at 9.20 yesterday morning, with its usual complement of passengers.

Gad's Hill is a small station at which trains do not stop unless signalled. The train was brought to a stand-still at sight of a red flag. It was boarded by seven desperadoes. The conductor, O. A. Alford, was ordered to give up his watch and money, which he did, but the former was returned. They then robbed the express messenger and safe, and took the registered letters from the mail-agent. While going through the cars they inquired the name of every passenger, and especially for a Mr. Pinkerton, who they probably thought had his pockets well lined with greenbacks. Among those plundered was J. S. Morley, President of the Iron Mountain Railroad. The thieves were each armed with two revolvers and a gun, and wore masks. Before the arrival of the train they had taken the precaution to open the switches, so that further progress would be impossible, and collected all the men, women, and children in the village around the platform. They are all described as being above the average height, none being under six feet.

After the robbers had seized Conductor Alford and other train men, and placed them under guard, one of the gang passed along the line of the train flourishing pistols, and commanded the passengers to keep quiet, or they would kill the conductor and engineer. Part of the band then robbed the express and mail, taking only money, and afterwards plundered the passengers. There were only twelve male passengers, five ladies and several children on the train. The total amount of money obtained, including $1,080 from the express, was $2,344. They took only gold watches from the passengers, and returned those of General Superintendent Morley, who was on the train, and Conductor Alford, because they had their names engraved on them. The robbers also took $800 from the citizens of Gad's Hill.

The thieves are unknown, but it is thought a clew to them has been ascertained. They were traced to Black River, six miles west of Gads' Hill, but the trail was lost there. The Sheriff of Wayne County is endeavoring to organize a posse at Piedmont to scour the country for the robbers, and it is understood that the Post-office Department and Adams' Express Company will take active measures to capture them.

As we approach the end, we may expect such things to multiply. We may well pray, "Let thy kingdom come." How much we need the help of Jesus every moment. Human strength is not sufficient to stand in the great conflict now going on with the powers of darkness. If we ever needed to have on "the whole armor of God," it is now.

CASTES IN SOCIETY.

Caste is a particular grade of society produced by hereditary distinctions, attainments, profession, or occupation. These castes are elevated or depressed according to popular opinion. In some communities that which would produce nobility and honor, in another community would produce ignominy and disgrace. Human scales which profess to give us the relative value of the character of different classes of men vary, according to the rules by which those values are determined. The divine scales never vary, but give us exactly the same decision at all times and with all classes. It presents but two castes, the righteous and the wicked. Its decisions are not varied by hereditary distinctions, worldly attainments, profession, or occupation; but are governed entirely by the purity or impurity of the heart. The human standard of valuation of the castes never recognizes the spiritual status, but the worldly—the external.

The gospel allows no distinctions or castes among its adherents. No one is allowed to say to his fellow, "master," or "father"; for they are all one—brethren or equals—in Christ Jesus. When any member of Christ's church allows himself to be elevated above his brethren by title, or in spirit, by consenting to receive honors of superiority, or coveting the applause of men, he is drinking in the spirit of the world, and will lose his first love. A church governed by such an influence will be divided into high and low castes, just like the world.

The advancement of true Christianity and real civilization in a community may be known by the equalization of society. The exalted will be brought down, and the abased will be elevated. But when society is by any means made more unequal in its advantages and enjoyments, it is receding from Christianity and drifting into heathenism. With God there is no partiality in the government of his creatures, therefore, the nearer men get to him, the less partiality there will be with them.

When a nation is drifting into a position of inequality among its citizens, as to profit, privileges and honor, it is going down in civilization, and tending to revolution and destruction. A government that will enact laws tending to elevate the higher and oppress the lower classes is committing suicide. When a nation elevates as rulers scheming speculators and grasping misers, it is weaving its own shroud, and digging its own grave.

According to these principles—the truthfulness of which we think but few will dispute—the world to-day is rapidly drifting to the vortex of ruin. Why is there such a universal cry of oppression among the lower classes? Why such convulsive throes among the hundreds of millions for more equality? It is because the gulf between the higher and lower classes is becoming wider and more impassable every day. The higher caste have more than heart could wish, and their eyes stand out with fatness, while the lower grade are lean with hunger, and starving where there is fulness of bread. A few, comparatively, are hoarding up the bounties of Providence, which were given, not for the few, but for all.

Hear a political editor tell a few facts relating to this subject:—

"Our best lawyers value their time from $40 to $50 per hour, which is a reasonable charge. . . . If, however, the case be one where half a million is at stake, then instead of a mere fifty you will be expected to advance a retaining fee of $500, or perhaps $1000. This prevents any one from securing the services of the lawyer thus retained. If a lawyer, even after receiving such a fee, should win the case, he will expect from $10,000 to $15,000 additional. Our great lawyers demand pay commensurate with their reputation, and hence some of them can boast a practice worth $50,000 per year. O'Connor, previous to his retirement, made annually, it is said, nearly four times that sum. Indeed, he was probably paid $200,000 for his services in the Jumel case. He is now worth more than a million, all of which he has made by his own genius and industry."—Concord (N. H.) Monitor.

"HOW ONLY THE DECLINE OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC CAN BE PREVENTED.

The next century will show us social changes material, in my opinion. Great changes in the relations of capital and labor; great changes in the position of woman; changes in the nature of government, in the relations of Church and State—these are the prominent facts of the next one hundred years. If they come, well. If they do not come, that boy is born, to-day, who, like Gibbon, when he wrote the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,"—that boy is born, to-day, who will write the decline and fall of the American republic. Because to any thoughtful man it is evident that the grasp of associated wealth in an age when the sin of not being rich is only atoned for by the effort to become so; the grasp of associated wealth of bank and railroad and manufacturer on legislative independence, on the possibility of individual independence, is so rigid and despotic and inevitable that, unless we evade it by some great social change, it won't be possible for this republic to survive. We see a power infinitely grander than that of the feudal barons of three hundred years ago, infinitely more irresistible than that. To-day, Mr. Gladstone said, speaking of the Church,—the disestablishment of the English Church: "We cannot trust the Church beyond the clasp of the Government's hand; as a rival power wielding £90,000,000 sterling, it is too grave a charge to the British Government." Ninety million pounds—$450,000,000—too grave a charge for the British Government, three times as strong as ours; and yet one man, the head of the Pennsylvania Railroad—Mr. Scott—wields $450,000,000, and the very sweep of his garments as he marches east from San Francisco to Philadelphia is more than sufficient to sweep down Legislatures as he goes. I look for no safety here except in great social changes. I believe that the day is gone by in this country when you can get half a man's power out of him on a system of wages; it was possible two hundred years ago. Ignorant, short sighted, narrow viewed, the dependent laboring class accepted the best they had offered them, and lived from day to day and hardly overlooked the margin of another week; they were contented with the system. But intelligence, education, responsibility, the ballot, a share in the Government, has dispelled all that content, and unless we have co-operation, unless we have labor taken into a great copartnership with capital, labor will tear capital to pieces. That is in the future."

THE REPUBLIC IN EUROPE.

"Now, these changes which impend over us are impending over Europe. I think the republic in Europe is much nearer than many imagine. The republic in Great Britain is much nearer than many imagine. There is but one great bulwark, to-day, in the way, and that is land. There is nothing in the Church or the State or the Lords that would delay for twenty years the advent of the republic, because the same change has come over the masses there as exist here. Arch and Bradlaugh, and the masses behind them, they understand human nature, and the claims of every man born on the soil to recognition better than people think or allow. The moment they break down the aristocratic bulwark of the land owned by three hundred thousand men, the waters are out and the flooding sea; down in the vast abyss go the turrets and towers of old institutions, and the frigate of the British republic is anchored forever on the Thames. I believe, too, in the nearer advent of republicanism in France than any imagine. There is no Bonaparte left, thank God, and hardly a Bourbon left to rally under. The Duc d'Aumale's character and private views are the best introduction of any of the family, but even he cannot drag France back to the Bourbon dynasty, and the very necessity of the hour will bring France back into the arms of a great soldier or a great statesman. German arrogance looks over the border and France's pride has sworn the deepest oath that another generation shall not pass without revenge. There is no Bonaparte or Bourbon, but Sedan must be avenged. France will follow in the steps of any energetic man, and the right man will come. See the state of Spain to-day. Spain has no king and no queen to make a claim whose character could bear four hours' investigation. Spain floats into the hand of soldier or statesman from the very want of a dynasty. Look back in England; in all her political periods, what carried her back to the throne? The existence of some daughter or cousin or second son with ability. Spain has got nothing such, and consequently all the forces of Europe are in wild disorder to-day, that crash and jostle against each other like frigates in a storm. But underneath, in the near future, there seems to be but one possibility that national pride can be satisfied, that national position can be gained, only in a constitutional monarchy, which is nearly a republic or in a republic. France, as a monarchy, must be a third-rate power; France, as a republic, will govern Europe. This is the motive that carries the Frenchman back."—Boston Journal.

Who will be the "great soldier, or the great statesman," to hush the elements of this terrific national storm in silence, and evenly balance human society, so that equality and justice shall rule the world. The Great Immanuel—the King Eternal. He will put an eternal end to human partiality and satanic bigotry. He will raise to peerage with angels all who love him, and give them the riches and everlasting blessedness of his glorious kingdom.

NOTICE.—We are all out of the No. of Crisis containing Spurgeon's Sermon.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THY CHILDREN SHALL COME AGAIN.

C. H. SHEPHERD.

Jeremiah 31: 15 reads, "Thus saith the Lord; A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not." This prophecy was fulfilled in the infancy of our Lord Jesus Christ, when Herod, that wicked king, slew all the children of Bethlehem from two years old and under. Therefore it is not strange that the prophet said "lamentation and bitter weeping," when he saw by the prophetic eye those mothers of Bethlehem bereft of their children. They were torn from their embrace—murdered before their eyes, and they refused to be comforted.

But the Lord did not leave them comfortless; but says, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." The Lord understands his promise fully. He is too wise to err. In all his attributes he is infinite; therefore, we could not suppose for a moment that the Lord would give those finite creatures who were in deep anguish, lamenting for their slain children, a false hope. He knew whether those very children could come again from death's dark shade. He knew he could fulfill his promise; therefore he made the promise, "thy childdren shall come again." Yes, your children, Rachel! you will know them as yours. Blessed be God for words like these! What comfort would this language have been to Rachel if she had not believed that the Lord would restore to her her children? I answer, none; but she could trust him, believing his word.

There is hope, not only for Rachel but for all who have children in the enemy's land. How many mothers have been comforted by these words—"Thy children shall come again to their own border"—when they have seen the last flickering spark of life go out, their home made desolate, and their little ones carried to their last resting place. The morning will soon dawn, and all who sleep in Christ will awake. Blessed dawning!

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Pursuant to notice, on Thursday evening, January 29th, the Quarterly Conference met at Reed meeting-house, Richmond, Me., for the worship of God. Bro. H. D. Reed preached. There was good attention. Friday morning we had a good prayer-meeting; another in the afternoon. Evening, preaching by H. D. Reed. Saturday, on account of the storm, but a few were present, and we had but one meeting. Sunday morning was pleasant. We had a prayer-meeting, and it was good and profitable. P. M. Preaching by L. Rhoads; evening again by H. S. Mitchell. We think this meeting left a good impression on the people.

We felt sad to think there was no more interest with the preaching brethren in sustaining the Quarterly Conference. Preachers present, H. D. Reed, L. Rhodes, and H. S. Mitchell. Our next conference is in May. Any church wishing to have it can send in their request.

HIRAM S. MITCHELL, Sec.

THE LATE PANIC.

Distrust is the child of dishonesty. When the people find their legislators, from President down to pettifogger, whom chance has elevated to place and power, engaged in plundering the public Treasury, speculating in Credit Mobilier stocks, voting themselves thousands of dollars "back pay," and doubling their own salaries at their own sweet wills; when it is seen that great land grants are bestowed on railway speculations, in which the people who own the land have little or no interest; when defalcations in banks, revenue offices, trust companies, post-offices, etc., are so frequent, is it a matter of surprise that the people have no confidence in public men, or that a crushing panic follows such wickedness? With an honest government, in which the people could place reliance, there could be no ground for such "scares."—Phrenological Journal.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Wishing to move our office on the first of May next, to less expensive rooms, and having several thousand back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER on hand, which we do not wish to move, we make the following liberal offers:—

We will send one or more copies of back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER in neat wrappers post-paid, to any address for two cents per copy. This is a small part of the cost; for we have to pay postage, find wrappers, and hire them wrapped and mailed; but we believe great good can be done if each of our readers will send us ten to fifty addresses of persons who they think would be benefitted by receiving a copy of the BIBLE BANNER, enclosing two cents for each address. A friend of ours called at this office a few months since, and gave us a score or two of addresses, with two or three cents per copy for postage, etc., and we have been greatly surprised at the result. Unfortunately, however, in a financial point of view, for us, this brother selected a large number of ministers of the gospel, many of whom accepted our "year-free" offer. Hence we ask our readers to send us a large proportion of those who will be likely to subscribe. Reader, if you respond, please do so at once, and address,

Correspondence.

From Bro. G. W. Turner.

Dear brethren and sisters of like faith, both East and West:—After so long a time I feel it a duty to let you know what I am doing in the cause of the Master. As I let my mind run back twenty years, I remember that many of our great and good pioneers in the Advent movement are now sleeping under the power of the great monster, death; my brother C. B. T., according to the flesh, with the rest. There are others who once stood in the front ranks of the battle, but whose voices are now, for some reason, hushed into silence. I am led to ask the question, Who of all the tribes that started out shall go in to inherit the land? We must believe that a Caleb and a Joshua will be preserved to enter the glorious Canaan of rest. But while we see so much on every hand to decieve, if possible, the very elect, we are more than ever satisfied that the old Gospel ship is very near to land. Many have become ashamed that definite time was ever preached, and feel some as Jonah did after he preached to the Ninevites, and want to crawl away under a gourd-plant, somewhere, and see what the Lord will do. Others are caught in some of the traps that the devil has set to catch men in these last days.

Dear Bride of the Master, do you love God with all your soul, might, mind and strength, and your neighbor as yourself? If you do, lift up your heads; the blessed Savior said that love was the fulfilling of the law, and if we love God, he certainly loves us. And if he be for us, who can be against us, and prosper? God will vindicate his cause in due time. Let us keep at our work, and soon we shall hear the "well done." We want some of your ministers of God, whose hearts are fired up with love, who are treading on one another's heels there in the East, to come West. Here is room enough, and a chance to live in the good old Pioneer style, —log-houses without being chinked very tight, one grade of society, plenty of pudding and milk, pork and beans, and work enough to get a good appetite for it. And the best of all is, many good, sound minded men and women that can be gained as a Bride for the Master. I have just been laboring in Barron Co., which is not divided into towns yet, where splendid homesteads may be taken of the Government;—good land, timber and water, and where the people are hungry to hear the word of life.

Right here I want to say to the noble conductors and supporters of our good paper, the Crisis, that I am very grateful to you for sending it to me so long, free, for as I am not able to give away many tracts, and I preach to a good many poor people, I give away the Crisis and Times, and I find it often gets subscribers and does great good, which we can only compute at the day of Judgment. Now I do hope that some good lover of the Lord that reads this will make up his mind to come to Wisconsin. The harvest is great here, and laborers are few.

God grant that we may all be kept in these perils of the last days, by the power of God through faith unto salvation which is ready to be revealed in the last time. We have need of patience, that after having done the will of God we might receive the promise. "He that is to come, will come, and will not tarry." Amen.

Eauclair, Wis.

From R. G.

The call for short letters finds a response in my heart. Much of the religious reading on our tables is not calculated to increase deep-toned piety in every day life. The inner man must be fed in order to grow and expand. What we need is spiritual aliment, and if it comes in a nut-shell, so much the better.

The christian life is somewhat varied in different temperaments, but the principles are the same in all. To walk life's rugged path amid struggles, trials and besetments with an even, uniform heart and mind, requires divine assistance at every step. Such aid is proffered, and has oftimes been received by the disciples of Christ in all ages of the church's history, especially in these last days, "upon whom the ends of the world are come."

A walk with God, daily help from his hand is what is needed now to strengthen and encourage the weary, worn travelers. This we can have in all its fullness, "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over," and with it we can do all things. Help from God tells the whole story,—hourly help. We can have it amid the most chequered scenes, varied temptations, fiery trials and perplexities with which we are beset on every hand.

Rest, peace and quiet in the heart will cause the turmoil of business, frustrated plans and projects, family cares and domestic duties, of whatever sort, to sink into insignificance. In every pressing necessity, Christ is a "present help." No change or condition can nullify the infallible word on this point. Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall not fail. The promises are ours; we have only to try them to prove their strength and help.

Springfield, Mass.

From Bro. E. N. Bliss.

As I have been solicited to write for the paper of what I am doing and have been doing since I came here, I will take my pen and see what I can do. This is the first time I ever wrote for the Crisis, and as I do not desire notoriety, I had much rather go along in my own quiet way, doing what my Master gives me to do, and look to him for my reward, than to be seen or heard of men. I am striving so to live that I may at last hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." But as that would not be doing as we like to be done by—for we all love to hear from the dear ones scattered abroad—and in view of what the A. A. M. Society has done for me, I feel it duty to write.

I am about thirty-five miles south of the north line of the State, and about the middle of it east and west. I came from Chicago into Republick Co., last Feb. After I arrived at Werterville, I had between sixty and seventy miles to walk to get to my destination; one day through a driving snow storm. But I arrived safely, and went to work in the name of the Lord, and he has blest me much, and has given me souls for my hire. I spent about three months last summer in the Kansas Mission Tent with the State Evangelist, a good brother whose heart is in the work. I do not think the Conference could have made a better choice; and I hope he may be re-elected to fill the office the coming year. May God bless his labors.

The cause is gaining ground here, in spite of all the opposition that can be brought against us. I have all the calls to preach that I can attend to, and my time is engaged now until the middle of April, in new fields. My work is missionary work almost entirely; and when our eastern Brn. complain of their pay, let me say that all the money I have received since I came into this State the 22nd of Feb., 1873, is $13.45. I have been here almost a year, and if it had not been for the aid sent me by the A. A. M. Society, I should have been compelled to leave the State, as my health is so poor that I am not able to do manual labor to get money to travel much. I will soon write and let you know what I am now doing, and what the good Lord has done for me. I am looking for immortality when Jesus comes, and not before.

Glen Elder, Mitchell Co., Kansas.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear ones in Jesus:—I have been thinking how sweet it would be to have you all come and sit by me, and talk of the blessed things that are laid up for those that love Jesus. And when I think of these things, it makes me long for the morning to dawn in splendor and glory, when all the dear ones shall be gathered where there will be no more pain, sorrow, suffering or trials to trouble or disturb us. Never did I feel so weary, so perfectly sick of everything earthly, as I do now, and have for the past few months. If I ever prayed for the kingdom to come, I do now.

For years I have not suffered in cold weather as I have the past autumn and winter. When I lie here long days in such extreme pain, how I long for Jesus to come; and when pain is so severe that sleep does not relieve my poor aching body, I sigh for home, where there will be one eternal day of perfect rest and peace. How precious does Jesus appear to me; and how glad I am I sought and found him in the days of my youth, before sickness had made me almost helpless. How I want to praise Jesus face to face for his precious love, for his exceeding great goodness in accepting a weak, helpless child like me. How good he is. O, who can reject his offered mercy? who can spurn his love, and turn him away? How my heart runs out after those who do not know him as their Savior and Friend. How I want to take them by the hand and point them to Jesus.

Dear ones, will you please unite to ask the Lord, with me, to restore to me the use of my left hand and arm, and grant me the use of it, if I live, till Jesus comes. It is so painful at times it seems as if I could hardly endure it. It was better in the summer, but is much worse this winter, and I fear unless I have help soon I shall lose the use of it entirely. If it is Father's will, I can say, Amen; but pray that if it please him I may have the use of it. I need your earnest prayers, sympathies, and words of comfort and consolation.

I believe we shall soon see Jesus and be made like him, to die nor suffer again.

No. Dana, Mass., Jan. 30th, 1874.

From Sr. O. Smith.

To all who love our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ:—Jesus said, when he went away, he would come again and take us to himself; and I believe that time is very near. O dear brethren and sisters, let us get all ready to meet that precious Friend with joy. The Lord has seen fit of late to permit the cold hand of death to come into my family and take my kind companion, now in my old age. O it did seem to me I could hardly bear up under it, but Jesus whispered, Be still, and know that I am God; and from that time the language of my heart has been, Lord, though thou slay me, I will trust in thee. I have sweet peace in my soul, for I feel I shall soon meet my companion again. We shall soon meet all those loved ones who are in the enemy's land. Yes, they will come forth! Praise the good Lord!

The people of God under these afflictions are often tempted to be impatient; but they should wait calmly for the time God has appointed for their deliverance. How important it is for us to have grace to bear our afflictions. God sees it needful for his people to be tried; and if we could see the end of these afflictions, and how they work for our good, we should have no cause for complaint. I do praise God that my faith stands in the power of God. In the darkest hour I can trust in Jesus, and have peace. How blessed it is to have such a Friend. Let us not be impatient, but in all trials look to God for supporting grace, and he will take care of the trial, and will work all for our best good and his glory. Let us keep our eye single, and be hasting unto the coming of our Lord from heaven, and so be fitted for the rest which remains for the people of God.

I am eighty years old next month. My pilgrimage is almost over, but I praise the great Jehovah that I am what I am; and my daily prayer is that we who have so much light may be more united in our effort to spread the good news, and labor to save the perishing.

South Hadley Falls.

From Sr. E. Percy.

I still receive the Crisis, and its weekly visits to me are like water to a thirsty soul. Eternity alone will unfold the joy and comfort its columns give to my poor lonely heart. Dear brethren and sisters, is it not joyful to think Jesus will soon come and save us from this wicked world? We read—"Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

As I think of the salvation that Jesus has purchased for us, and the love that he has bestowed upon us, my heart is filled with love to him. How good the Lord is! I have often praised him with all my soul for giving me grace to conquer the enemy, and live for Jesus. Dear friends, the time is coming, if we are faithful, when we shall praise God for every trial and every cross that we have borne; and when Christ comes we shall wear a crown in his everlasting kingdom.

I still have a hope of a glorious immortality through Christ, and when he comes to renovate the earth, and awaken the sleeping millions, I hope to meet all my loved ones, and with them enter into that rest that remains for the people of God. I am looking for the soon coming of the blessed Savior, and can say with all my heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

West Wheelock, Vt., Jan. 30th, 1874.

From Sr. C. E. Whitaker.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I esteem it a privilege to comply with the request of Bro. Couch in the last Crisis, to write short articles on experience.

I have a well grounded hope, and am in confident expectation of soon seeing our blessed Jesus coming in his glory. It is a little more than thirty-one years since I found peace in believing in Jesus, and began to look for his appearing and kingdom, and though oft disappointed, my way is onward. The path grows brighter. We are not of this world. Glory to God! We are almost home. My companion and children are with me, loving the appearing of Christ. The youngest, not yet eight years old, daily prays to be saved in that blessed land; and I doubt not he would, should Jesus come to-day. My all is on the altar. Praise the Lord! It is good to trust in Christ. We love to hear the glad tidings, through the Crisis, which speak the kingdom near. O that more would see the beauty of these precious truths and accept of offered mercy!

Brattleboro, Vt., Feb. 9th, 1874.

From Enfield, Mass.

Dear Brn.:—We are here holding meetings in the name of the Lord. It has been supposed that Enfield was proof against Adventism, but the God of heaven has opened the way for the truth to be proclaimed to the people. Pray for us and the work.

We have the Town Hall, opened by the selectmen, free as long as we wish to stay. Please remember this work at the throne of grace. Your Brn. in Christ, Samuel Ayres, W. G. Ruggles, H. H. Tucker.

Bro. E. Morrill writes:—"I am still holding on to the promise of God—kept by this grace—enjoying the 'blessed hope.' I am truly longing for the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, to put an end to sorrow, suffering, pain and death. I have been passing through trials. My children have been sick—two at a time; then my wife was stricken down with disease; but it has brought me nearer Christ. All these trials, dear brethren, by the blessing of God, will serve to wean us from the world, and we shall more earnestly long for the world to come, where the enemy cannot get in to tempt and try us. God has blest. My children have got well, and wife is recovering. Now comes another trial. My valuable horse, that has carried me and other laborers for Christ a number of thousand miles while holding tent and protracted meetings, died last Saturday night. This leaves me without a horse. Still I am the Lord's—ready to serve him any way and any where. I feel perfectly passive in his hands, and am willing to go into the woods and labor, or any other way that may open before me by his hand; for I know (with all my mistakes, faults and imperfections) that I am the Lord's, and he is mine; and by his grace helping, I am going to serve him till Jesus comes, which I expect will be in a very short time. Let us be faithful a little longer, then we will be saved together, and saved forever.

P. S.—I would say to brethren in places off from the R. R., where I have promised to visit and hold meetings this winter, that (on account of the loss of my horse) I shall not be able to fulfill my promises at present, until the way opens for me to have another one."

Obituaries.

Colbath. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Dover, N. H., Jan. 29th, 1874, Mrs. Sarah P., wife of Wm. Colbath, aged seventy-seven years.

She was one of the early believers in the doctrines that have distinguished us as a people. Her house was often the home of the weary ones on their pilgrimage through this ever changing world of mortality, tears and sorrow. She leaves an aged companion, sons and daughters to mourn her loss. But few of the aged ones, that were able to go in and out before us, remain. Death, the last enemy, will soon be destroyed.

S. S. Brewer.

Howard. Fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 28th, 1874, Jabez S. Howard, of Fairhaven, Mass., aged fifty-four years.

Bro. Howard leaves a dear companion, an aged mother, and three children, besides many warm-hearted friends who mourn their loss. His delight was in the service of God, and he loved the communion of saints; and while the loved ones mourn, yet they mourn not as those who have no hope; for we have the blessed assurance that he will come forth in the morning of the resurrection, clothed with immortality and eternal life, and live with Christ forever upon the new earth. Words of comfort to the mourning friends were spoken by Bro. Edwin R. Wood, of Exeter, R. I.

J. R. Smith.

Case. In Gage Co., Neb., Jan. 27th, 1874, Matilda J. Case, aged sixty-six years.

She embraced Christ as her Savior many years ago. Respected and loved by her many friends, she fell asleep believing her Redeemer would soon come. We addressed a large gathering of friends on the blessings awaiting those that die in the Lord (Rev. 14: 13.) May the Lord sustain the son with whom she lived, and be have strength to declare the whole counsel of God.

G. G. Godfrey.

Livermore. At Milo, Me., Nov. 29th, 1873, Bro. Charles E. Livermore, aged thirty-seven yrs.

Bro. L. was out of health for many years, and having no family, he gave his whole soul to the service of Jesus. He was clerk of the church at M., and took the general oversight of the little flock there. His godly example, christian counsel and untiring efforts to advance the cause of Christ cannot soon be forgotten, or his place be easily filled. He fell asleep in full and joyful hope of the personal advent of Christ being just at hand, and a literal resurrection when Jesus comes. By his request I spoke at the funeral from Job 14: 14,—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

F. A. Baker.

Blanchard. In Washington, Mass., Sept. 22d, 1873, Julia A., wife of Mr. Levi Blanchard, and sister of Bro. Shaler Worthington, aged thirty-four years.

Sister B. loved the place of prayer. She was a living christian, giving evidence of love to Jesus and hope in a better resurrection. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn her loss, together with a large circle of friends. Words of comfort by the writer.

C. W. Baker.

Finch. Bro. John Finch died Jan. 29th, 1874, of disease of the brain.

He was a firm believer in the personal coming of Christ. Funeral sermon by the writer.

M. R. Miles.

Miles. Died Feb. 1st, 1874, my father, Pernum Miles, aged eighty-nine years.

He was a firm believer in the personal, literal advent of Christ in '43, as also were all his living children, except one who was only eleven years old He sleeps in Jesus. We expect soon to hail him on the immortal shores of the kingdom of God.

M. R. Miles.

Shattuck—Wiggin. In Colebrook, N. H., Feb. 12th, 1874, at the residence of the bride's father, by Eld. C. S. Shattuck, Mr. Luther Shattuck, of Belvidere, Vt., and Miss Abby A. Wiggin, of Colebrook.

FOREIGN NEWS.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 13. The Emperor of Austria arrived here this afternoon, and was most cordially received by the Czar and members of the imperial family.

London, Feb. 16. The southeastern portion of Europe was visited by heavy gales which did much damage. The telegraph wires are prostrated, and there have been numerous disasters on the Black Sea.

Berlin, Feb. 16. In the Reichstag, to-day, Gen. Von Moltke, in the course of a speech in support of a new Military bill, said: "What we acquired in six months we shall have to protect by force of arms for half a century to come. France, notwithstanding a majority of her people are convinced of the necessity of peace, is imitating our army organization." He concluded: "We have become powerful, but remain peaceful. We require an army for defense, not conquest."

There was a disastrous conflagration at London, Feb. 14. Loss, $15,000,000.

Japan.—The official census of 1872, just published, fixes the entire population at 33,110,825. Males and females are about equal in numbers. There are twenty-nine members of the imperial family, four hundred and fifty-nine of the higher order of nobles, and about seven hundred thousand of the lower order of gentry.

The king of the Sandwich Islands is dead.

A Havana letter announces the death of the Cuban General Francisco Marceo.

The Cubans obtained complete possession of Bayamo on the 24th ultimo. They surprised a small Spanish reconnoitering expedition from Gibara and killed all but thirteen, who escaped.

The Spanish brigadier, Vascones, at the head of a column of 1200 men, is reported to have been attacked while recently crossing the river Canto by a force of Cubans under Vincente Garcia, losing six hundred men and himself killed.

The emperor of Russia will visit England in April.

In England and Wales there are 19,483 places of religious worship, occupied by one hundred and thirty one different denominations.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 16.—A grand dinner was given last evening by the Czar to his imperial and royal visitors. In his speech his Majesty said that the emperor of Germany, the queen of England, the emperor of Austria, and himself would preserve the peace of the world.

The Prince of Wales, as the representative of the Queen, bowed his thanks, and the Emperor Francis Joseph responded, reiterating the sentiments of the Czar.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Albany, Feb. 19. A verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree was rendered in the Lowenstein murder case. The prisoner was sentenced to be hung on the 10th of April next.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 19.—Michael McKeon the wife murderer, was to-day sentenced to State Prison for life.

Omaha, Neb. Feb. 13.—William McWalter, who murdered a man at Nebraska City about a year ago, shot and killed Rudolph Worth, and wounded two others in a fight here to-day, has fled southward. An armed body of thirty men are in pursuit.

Harrisburg, Penn., Feb. 13.—N. T. Perry and Mr. Rynear, lumbermen, were instantly killed this morning at Ridgeway, Elk County, by a slide of logs.

White Plains, Feb. 18.—The trial of Patsey Conroy, leader of the masked burglars, on a charge of robbing the house of Mr. Emmet, at New Rochelle, was concluded this afternoon. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty.

Cincinnati, Feb. 18.—During the Mardi Gras procession through the German portion of this city, last night, George Ebenbenner, aged twelve years, was fatally stabbed by a masker. The boy was standing on the sidewalk, remarking upon the various costumes.

Sandusky, Ohio, Feb. 13.—Rush R. Sloane, removed in October from the Presidency of the Cincinnati, Sandusky and Cleveland Railroad, was arrested here to-day on seventeen distinct charges of embezzlement, prefferred by the Company.

Brooklyn, Feb. 18.—Private Watchman Charles Augustin observed a burglar entering the residence of E. A. Doty, 660 St. Marks avenue, at 3 P. M. He followed and challenged him, whereupon the man turned and threatened to take Augustin's life. The watchman fired three shots at him with a revolver, one inflicting a mortal wound, penetrating the right lung.

Boston, Mass., Feb. 17.—The inquest into the murder of Lawrence Norton Sunday morning has resulted in charging John Barry with the act, and he has been committed to answer.

The religious practices of the Prince of Wales are creating considerable uneasiness among Protestants in England. He and his wife are often seen attending public worship at All Saints', one of the most ritualistic of all the London churches. The Roman Catholics are already predicting that the Mass will be re-established when he reaches the English throne.

— Franklin B. Evans was hung Feb. 17th at Concord, N. H.

— The population of Nebraska was 28,000 in 1860. It is now estimated at 300,000, and half this increase has been made since 1870, when the last census was taken.

— It is stated that still another disease has broken out among the horses in Brooklyn, more dangerous than the other. The animals are covered with offensive sores.

— Matilda Dilks, a widow, was found mutilated, and her throat cut in a garden at Pennsville, N. J. Three men were arrested on suspicion.

Notices.

Alton Bay Campmeeting.—The Campmeeting at Alton Bay will commence Aug. 22nd, and hold over Sabbath, Aug. 30th. J. Couch.

Mission Tent.—There has been a call for subscriptions to furnish a Mission Tent. The old Mission and the Mass. Conference Tent have both been worn out in the service. The time will soon come for Tent meetings, which is one of the best, if not the very best way to reach the people. The cause demands double the sacrifice and effort to enlighten and save that we are making. Shall we want for a Tent? Shall we want means and men to make an onward movement to save men by pulling them out of the fire of the last day? Brethren, help us to a Tent.

L. Boutell.

The Yearly Conference.—Where shall it be? It is the Annual Meeting of the Mass. Conference. We desire the largest gathering we have ever had. The times demand it. Our interests call for it. The first week in April is the time for it. Who will make preparation for a large meeting and a great blessing? Who? L. Boutell.

Vermont Conference.—The next Quarterly Conference will be held with the church at East Roxbury, Vt., commencing Tuesday evening, March 3d, and continuing three days. As this is a central place, we hope the preachers from all directions will gather at this meeting, together with delegates from all churches. Come up to the feast. The heart of Roxbury is all warm to greet you. God has done and is doing a good work there. H. F. C.

Protracted Meeting.—There will be a protracted meeting with the Advent church in Wilbraham, Mass., commencing Monday evening, Feb. 23d, and continuing each evening through the week, and over Sunday, March 1st, if the Lord will. Brethren and sisters in the region around are invited to come in and help us. Come in the name and spirit of the Master to labor for the salvation of sinners. Sr. E. L. Crumb will be present to preach the Word.

P. S. Butler, Pastor.

The Western District of the New York A. C. Conference will meet Friday evening, March 6th, with the church in Springwater, and continue over the Sabbath. We hope to see a good delegation from the Dist. Remember the quarterly collections.

A. P. Moore, Sec.

For the Poor.—Jefferson Mayell, $4.84.

Geo. T. Adams.

The next Quarterly Meeting of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York will be held with the church at South Creek, Bradford Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, March 6th, to continue over the following Sunday. Those coming by railroad will leave the cars at Gillett's Station, twelve miles south of Elmira, on the Northern Central Railroad. Trains leave Elmira for the south at 5.40 A. M. and 2.40 P. M. that stop at Gillett's. Trains from the south stop there at 11.15 A. M. and 10 P. M.

Brethren and sisters in Christ, come to this meeting with your hearts filled with the love of God, and a willing mind to work for the salvation of the perishing. Friends will meet you at the station.

E. C. Cowles, Pres.
J. W. Taylor, Sec.

Hatley District Meeting.—The Second District Meeting of the Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec is appointed to convene at the old meeting-house in Hatley, on the evening of March 4th, to continue over the following Sabbath. Ministers from abroad are expected to be in attendance, and the occasion will be one of special importance. All the ministers and official members of the Hatley District are expected, as required, to be present, and ministers and others, resident in other Districts of the Conference would do well to attend, as several matters of great interest to the cause with which we are identified will come up for discussion.

Let all interested come if at all practicable, and you will meet with a christian reception, and trust you will feel that it is good to be present; but if you fail to attend, we fear you will have it to regret after. Let us unitedly pray for the success of the meetign.

C. P. Dow, Pres.
E. C. Orcutt, Sec.

The first Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church in Fairfield, Huron Co., Ohio, will commence on Saturday, March 7th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all the lovers of Jesus in the surrounding country to be present and take part in the exercises. Also a special invitation is given to the church in Norwalk, with their pastor, to unite with us on this occasion.

Per order of the church, E. M'Culloch, Pastor.

Conference.—The R. I. and East. Conn. Conference will hold its next Annual Meeting at Lafayette, No. Kingstown, R. I., commencing Wednesday, two o'clock P. M., March 4th, and continue over the 6th. All preachers and churches belonging to the Conference should report personally or by letter. Please let us hear from all.

N. A. Angell, Conference Clerk.

To the Preachers and Churches belonging to the East. Conn. and R. I. Conference:

Dear Brethren:—At the last session of Conference, held at Natick, R. I., Dec. 3d to 5th, 1873, a committee was appointed to revise, alter, amend, or make a new Constitution for the government of the Conference, and report the same for adoption at the next annual meeting. As a result of their labor, a new Constitution will be reported and recommended for adoption at the ensuing meeting, materially different from the present one.

We shall expect the preachers and churches who are members of the Conference, and who feel a lively interest in its religious and organic prosperity to represent themselves at this meeting, and we hope none will fail to do so. We are neither anxious nor desirous to part company with any of our former associates; neither do we wish nor intend to make the Conference a sort of ecclesiastical prison to retain members, either preachers or churches, who manifest an unwilling or indifferent disposition to remain in it. We expect those who retain membership with us will be working men, women, and churches.

To all who love our Lord Jesus Christ and his work we extend a cordial and hearty welcome, and say, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord." "A word to the wise is sufficient."

A. Durfee, Chairman.

If the Lord will, we commence a series of meetings, assisted by Bro. Clegg, at the large Hall, West Grove, Chester Co., Pa., Thursday evening, Feb. 26th, and continue over Sunday, March 1st. This is a new field, where the great Bible truths have never been proclaimed. The Lord has in a strange manner opened the way for us, and we are going trusting in his almighty arm. We ask the prayers of all the lovers of Jesus and the truth that the effort may be blest of God. I. N. Wilfong.

A Protracted Meeting will be held at Garland, Me., commencing Feb. 28th, at two P. M., and continuing as long as it seems duty. We hope our brethren and sisters in adjoining towns will come over and help us. Homes will be provided for all who come. Call on Abner Millit, Wm. H. Doughty, N. N. Wood.

The Advent Christian Church of Lewiston, Me., hold their meetings regularly every Sabbath in the Hall over First National Bank, Main St. Prayer and praise meetings at ten o'clock A. M. Preaching at half-past two and half-past six P. M. Also prayer meetings Tuesday and Friday evenings at half-past seven.

The Advent Christian Church of Lewiston, Me., have secured the labor of Bro. Jared Whitman as their pastor. For the church, Jas. Tracy.

I am spending a few weeks in the State of Conn., and shall be pleased to hear from friends who have often wished to be remembered if I visited this State. Address me immediately at Danbury, Ct., in care of V. R. Fenn.

E. S. Jennings.

Those wishing to preach in Rochester Village, N. H., will please correspond with Eld. Jonathan Horn, or Nath'l. Dorman.

Brethren wishing to preach in Manchester, N. H., please correspond with Bro. Henry J. Hicks.

RE-PRINTED

ELDER S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's works, which have been out of print some time, so that we have not been able to fill orders, are now published, and we can supply as follows:—

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun, Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena. Illustrated with cuts. 216 pp. 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

Illustrated with cuts. 25 cts.

THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL.

This is a work of history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts. Ag'T.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

For sale at this Office. Ag'T.

A NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2 50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. A'gt.

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

LEAVE IT ALL WITH JESUS.

Leave it all with Jesus,
Weary, burdened soul;
Though thy sins are many,
He will make thee whole.
Leave it all with Jesus,
He will set thee right;
Dost thou walk in darkness,
He will give thee light.

Hast thou failed in trying
Sinners to reclaim?
Does the world reproach thee
For the christian's name?
In thy closet kneeling,
Lift thy heart in prayer;
Leave it all with Jesus,
Thou wilt find him there.

Are the ties of friendship
Broken one by one?
Leave it all with Jesus,
Let his will be done.
Leave it all with Jesus,
He has said to thee,
I will bear thy sorrows,
Only trust in me.

Is thy spirit wounded?
Is the tempter near?
Does the thought of dying
Fill thy heart with fear?
Leave it all with Jesus,
Hear his words to thee;
As thy day, O pilgrim,
So thy strength shall be.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

W. KELLAWAY.

THE BLESSED SACRAMENT AND THE RITUALISTS' HOLY HORROR.

What foolish things these Ritualists are continually doing in England! Last week I recorded their endeavor to exorcise the spirits in a haunted neighborhood; now another curiosity appears in the form of a letter. But I think I had better give you the editorial of the Rock on the matter.

"Once upon a time, the late Lord Glenely was very wroth with the Rev. Mr. Naugle for having called public attention to the minute instructions of the Roman Catholic Church as to what her priests should do in case a mouse were to run away with a morsel of the consecrated host. In the same spirit the Directorium Anglicanam gives a receipt for straining flies and spiders out of the Eucharistic cup. In these cases the ludicrous almost over-masters the profane; but the extract that follows provokes an unmitigated shudder. It is taken from the last number of the Church Review, and occurs in a letter written by 'A Sacristan of C. B. S.,' on the subject of 'Wafers v. Bread':—'The terrible irreverences which are perpetrated at the altar from the use of crumbling bread are something frightful to think of. On last Sunday, at a country church which I happened to attend (early), the priest, on communicating me, let fall on my sleeve a portion (and that not small) of the Blessed Sacrament. I had closed my eyes, as I always do, to shut out worldly thoughts and sights, and was not aware of the accident the instant it happened; but I managed (Deo Gratias) by some means or another to catch the largest portion then, and did what I could for the particles afterwards. No one can tell the utter affliction (I mean this strong term) of such an event unless they have had the misfortune to be similarly circumstanced. Putting aside the terrible insult to the most Holy Sacrament, the misery of having one's thoughts distracted from one's own communion is past all words to imply. Poor English Church! How long, O Lord, holy and true, shall such irreverences, profanation and sacrilege be done thee in thy holy temple?' This unhappy man also speaks of the 'many unfortunate churches where to communicate is quite distracting'; a remark that—though in a sense very different to his—comes home to our own feelings, which have been outraged again and again by the superstitious gestures of persons who, like the writer of the above letter, evidently adore the elements, and therefore stand convicted by their own Prayer Book of 'idolatry to be abhorred of all faithful christians.'"

ANOTHER STRANGE PROCEEDING.

Here is another strange and one may almost say blasphemous action in a Ritualistic Church. It happened in the schools belonging to St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, London. A meeting for prayer had been convened; the people assembled; and the following were the proceedings. A brief address was first delivered by Mr. Wilkinson, the vicar; who after his speech requested those present to kneel in silence while he pleaded their cause with God at the throne of grace. This having been done, and the petition having been made for the auditory, they were requested to listen for the answer, when, presently, a voice arose from some mysterious quarter of the room, declaring, "I have heard thy prayer," etc. In the same Church a Mr. Bodington, an active and notorious member of the "Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament," is announced to preach next week.

FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE.

A WEEKLY PAPER FOR ENGLAND.

For a year past your correspondent has been laboring in England in preparing and disseminating truth for God's glory and man's benefit. The Repository has done much to scatter grace and truth. Thousands of tracts and books have been distributed throughout the length and breadth of the British Isles. Parcels of works have been sent to India, China, Australia, Cape Colony, New Zealand, and other parts of the world. Leaves of health have been scattered abroad to restore their many readers to the truth of God. The result of all this truth dissemination no one can fully see or truly estimate. Yet sufficient is known to encourage and lead the worker to hope a plentiful harvest in the time of harvest.

But, brethren, though much has been done by desultory and occasional literature, we are beginning to feel the need of a weekly organ such as you enjoy. How pleasant it is to have the Crisis and Times and Herald come to your homes week by week, bringing in them cargoes of precious things to feed and refresh the mind in the high road (narrow though it be) to the kingdom of heaven. England has no such paper, and no such organization as you have to give it such a paper. But shall it not have such a boon? This is the question for your christian love and philanthropy to partly decide. The weekly paper, O, what a help to any cause, political or religious! It strikes blow after blow; it adds line upon line; it woos often and often, until at last in many cases the heart is won and the mind turned.

A celebrated Frenchman has prophesied that the time will yet come when the newspaper will contain the whole of human hought. And another writer (Schlegel) says that already "periodical publications and newspapers have become a power, and an art or a science, and society itself falls more and more under the sway of journalism." If, then, the periodical paper is of such a power, how glad we shall be in this land to press it into service for Jesus.

Brethren, shall we have a paper for England? That depends in a measure on your answer of another question: Will you partly help the expense of publication? There are not as many in England as in "free" America who hold like precious faith in the truth and promise of God; and of those who do, many are miserably poor and unable to help such an undertaking. And your correspondent is not able of himself to assume so great an enterprise. He has the will to serve. He believes he knows also of others with the same will; but the means are always a necessity of any undertaking. It would cost considerable money to commence such a paper; but then among so many readers as the Crisis has, it would be easy, very easy to collect the funds required.

Brethren, as a New Year's gift what will each one give to this cause? Will any of you volunteer in your different towns to act as agents or collectors for this object, taking the free-will offerings of the brethren and forwarding them either to G. T. Adams, Boston, or direct to 78 Newgate St., London, England?

If you will now help; if you will donate liberally, England shall have its organ of witness, its deficiency being made up of your bounty. And who knows how many precious things shall return to you far more in spiritual help than money could even begin to buy? Every subscriber of $5 can have a copy of the paper sent him free for a year—if he wishes it; and every subscriber of $10, $50, or $100, or more, can have two or more copies free for a year.

Probably some would like to help so good a work, but could not contribute to its expense as donators, while they would be willing to take copies at $3.00 a year post-free. Will such please send their names to Eld. W. Kellaway, 78 Newgate street, London, England. The postage on a letter is only 6 cts. the half ounce.

Perhaps the Editors of the Crisis may be good enough to say a word for this really great move. We are asking some of the "chief speakers" to come to England in the Spring. The paper would prepare their way, and give them while in England the best means of publishing the truth. Every way, this proposed paper is a great desideratum.

WHO WILL BE SAVED?

H. MUNGER.

This is a great question. No one can answer it but by referring to the Scriptures. They vary in modes of expression so much that no one text or passage will cover the whole ground; therefore we must take the cases of individuals the Lord has accepted in days past. Salvation depends upon the great mercy of God. Having a right to his mercy to save us is on conditions.

First, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." This, without other qualifying texts, would lead almost to universal salvation. To believe simply in a Jesus Christ will not answer; for one half of the most wicked part of mankind believe this; even those that are guilty of killing God's children, and breaking all his commandments.

Under the gospel, repentance stands first. When a sinner repents he taps God's great fountain of mercy, and as sure as water will, by gravitation, run down hill, so sure will he feel God's mercy. Yet he is not saved in the strict sense. He has entered the road with a part of the armor on. He has just enlisted for a warfare, and must obey orders until the enemy kills him, or he is released from his position by the Captain of his salvation. Suppose he has not always obeyed? He should confess and come back to Father's house, and he shall find mercy.

I got into the river once,—came near drowning, but by the help of my brother got out and was saved. Yet I may be drowned if I get in again. There are many such salvations as this. There are many who have started on the road for salvation, and been overtaken by the tempter, and gone astray. To get such to return is a great work for us. To tell them of the great sins they are guilty of will discourage them; or to tell them they must do this or that, or believe so and so, will not cause them to start again. But tell them many good men have got off the track and got on again by confession, like David, Peter, and others, and they may be induced to come back also. Show them the great mercy of God, and the easy thing to be done by them to start again. It is but little we can do at the most. We do not need a whole kit of tools to begin work of any kind. If we can succeed in simplifying their duty, it will work better than to tell them of great duties necessary in order to be saved. Necessary grace will be added as we need it in this warfare. All cannot feel, see or do alike in any work. If we rely on Christ for help, we shall be saved; for none can pluck us out of his hand. If we are desiring and trying to be good, God knows it, and does not condemn us if we eat meat or herbs, both, or neither. If our hearts condemn us not, God is greater than our hearts, and he says he will not. All know when they are under condemnation. It is our God we have to do with alone.

Take the numerous tests of salvation in our times, and among our people. One says, I must sell to be saved; another, I must see the time argument; another, I must keep the seventh day. Now, what must we believe to be saved? All this? No; neither of them necessarily. If we want to be good and are trying to be, God will see to our case, and give grace for our day of future trials and temptations. We may belong to the body, and be a very small member and be saved when the body or church is saved. If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind, relying alone on Christ for salvation. There is no safe position till Christ come to end our warfare, or we fall by the enemy.

One kind of food does not feed the whole flock, nor one kind of armor suit every soldier. I am not writing this for those beyond my reach, but for the poor tempted ones that need help in this time of temptation. There are grades or growth in Christianity as in every else; and none will deny it, when they comprehend the meaning of the gospel teaching in different ages of the church. The reward will be for the effort made, not the work done. If you are trying to be good and trust in him, God will do the rest by his grace, which the best will need at last. This is God's way to save us all. No measuring by others will do for us. There is such a difference in circumstances, no rule will apply to all.

THE NEEDFUL QUALIFICATION TO PREACH THE GOSPEL.

WHAT IS IT?

A. ROSS.

Negatively, it is not to acquire a knowledge of Greek, Hebrew, or Latin. It is not classical knowledge of any kind, though such knowledge may be a great help in expounding the Scriptures. A learned man can embellish an error, as well as truth, with classic lore; and an illiterate man can, in simple style, utter truth which will be most effectual in its practical results. The embellishments of oratory in a discourse may charm but can never enlighten. When light shines upon, and convinces the understanding, it is the result simply of truth, convicting, convincing and swaying the mind on the side of duty and right.

The affirmative aspect of the question is, having the knowledge of the truth as the great qualification to preach the gospel.

But how is this knowledge acquired? by study or inspiration? I answer, both. "Study to show thyself approved unto God." "And that knowing the Scriptures," etc. "I will send you another comforter, even the Spirit of truth." From the foregoing quotations we learn that the word of God must be studied with the help of the Spirit. Where there is love for the truth contained in the sacred Book, there will be much time spent in searching its contents; and the labor of love is never burdensome. Search for truth as for hid treasures; because we love it, and because we love and search for it, we find it. And being bowed down like a cart pressed with sheaves, it becomes like fire in the bones, and we long to speak that we may be refreshed. The shortest and surest way of preparation for the work of the ministry is to obtain this love for the Bible, and enjoy a prayerful communion with God in the study of it. We should have a continual experience coroborating that of the prophets and apostles, one of which said, "Thy words were found and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart: for I am called by thy name O Lord."

Let the Scriptures be first in all cases. Human authors should never be used as scales to weigh the testimony of God in; but the Scriptures must be used as the infallible standard of appeal in all cases, to determine what is wheat, and what is chaff. "If they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." "He that hath my word let him speak it faithfully." If all Scripture given by inspiration of God is not sufficient to make us wise unto salvation through faith in Christ, and prepare us to every good work, can human authorities, or pulpits, encyclopedias with hundreds of blank sermons, the authors of which raise no claim to inspiration, supply the lack? Let the wise answer the question.

I saw a statement not long since, coming from the pen of a good young brother, that the Bible contained an endless variety of subjects, and this was offered as a reason for much study, which would be a weariness of the flesh sure. I think the truth of the Bible is classed under only three heads, Historical, Doctrinal and Practical. History relates to events in human experience; doctrine to principles underlying the system of divine revelations; precept, to the practical application to human conduct of all that is embraced in the two foregoing. It is neither safe for a minister nor a church to be ambitious for a variety, for such ambition will produce itching ears in the listeners, and a resort to fables in the minister; for he must, to hold his fevered and dyspeptic hearers, have an endless variety. Better cultivate a love for truth, and be in the Spirit enough to relish it with, or without embellishment. "Then said Jesus to the Jews that believed, if ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." In one place where Paul preached they became so enamored with truth that they desired him to preach the same things to them another Sabbath. And we have no right to conclude that their appetites were any more cloyed after the second hearing than they were at the first.

The historic narative of our Lord's crucifixion, his resurrection and ascension, and the promise of his return to earth again at the last judgment day, has been a leading theme of the true evangelical ministry for eighteen hundred years. The utterance of that great doctrinal text in the third chapter of John—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life," has been, if not the foundation of every sermon, woven into every sermon and prayer since. And has its frequent repetition destroyed its sweetness and made it a stale subject? Perhaps so, in Athens, where they worship an unknown God, and where their education is so refined that they can only relish some new thing. However, this is not the case with new-born babes who desire the sincere milk of the word that they may grow thereby.

In pastor and people two elements are needful to secure success. First, the vitalizing—second, the nutritous element. The Holy Spirit is the vitalizing element of the church—the word of truth the nutritious element.

From these considerations we may readily see the propriety of the Savior's command to the apostles,—"Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Let the minister know that he possesses this element of vitality in the study and ministry of the Word, and the church possess the same principle of vitality in hearing the word, and the "old, old story of Jesus and his love" will ever be new and entertaining. And treading the paths the fathers trod, maintaining a testimony in Israel, standing among the unfolding signs of the last times, we may "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory;" and in due time receive the end of our faith,—the salvation of our souls. We can derive an enjoyment and profit from those portions of Holy Writ which deal so largely in symbolic imagery, which has in these last hours of degeneracy become alike the sport of infidels and a hypocritical ministry.

THE GREAT CHANGE.

HENRY PRATT.

1. "Science has rendered necessary great caution in the acceptance of the letter of Scripture. It has proven that letter in many instances misleading and not trustworthy, except as interpreted by the light of circumstances, or with due regard to the audience to which it was originally directed. . . . People, like those down on Terry island, who stake their faith on the ten-horned mystery of Revelation, cannot get a hearing among reasonable men to-day, while fifty years ago even the commentators were ready with glib and confident explanations of these same texts.

2. "The assault of science has naturally driven the church to defend what is most defensible,—its core doctrines. Theology is wisely retiring from a scientific field, to its own field. . . . The same effect is observable in the general disuse of doctrinal preaching."—Springfield Republican.

To such Wm. Arnot, of Edinburgh, in the Evangelical Alliance, at New York, truthfully replies:—

"A common street cry of the day is, Give us plenty of charity, but none of your dogmas. In other words, Give us plenty of sweet fruit, but don't bother us with your hidden mysteries about roots, and engrafting. For our part, we join heartily in the cry for more fruit; but we are not content to tie oranges with tape on dead branches, lighted with tapers, and dance around them on a winter's evening. This may serve to amuse children; but we are grown men, and life is earnest. . . . . There are two errors equal and opposite: those who teach high doctrine, and wink at slippery practice; . . and those who preach up all the charities, and ignore or denounce the truth and the faith that grasps it. . . . A class of men is springing up and pressing to the front in our day, who laud charity at the expense of truth. . . . In their view, a man may become indeed a model of goodness, although he sincerely believes all the doctrines of the gospel; but he may reach that blessed state as quickly and as well, although he believe none of them. . . . (Example) John Bunyan, who received all the doctrines of the gospel, and Spinora, who rejected them all, attain equally to the odor of sanctity in this modern church of charity. . . . When they bring forward their savory dish, like poor old blind Isaac, when his slippery son presented his forged venison, I am disposed to ask, How hast thou found it so quickly, my son? . . . . Those who, in this age, lead the crusade against dogma, are forward to profess uttermost reverence for the life and teachings of Jesus Christ; but he did not despise dogma."

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Nothing more completely and abstractly dogmatical can be found in all the creeds of the church, than the short and fervid exclamation of Peter, in answer to the Master's articulate demand for the confession of his faith on this point. And how did the Master receive it? He not only acquiesced in the doctrine and expression of it by his servant, but he, departing in some measure from his usual habit of calm, unimpassioned speech, broke into an elevated and exultant commendation, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona!" Either doctrine—truth revealed by God and accepted by man—either doctrine is decisive and fundamental for the salvation of sinners, or Jesus Christ was a weakling. The divinity of Christ, as confessed by Peter, is a dogma; for that dogma Jesus witnessed; and for that dogma Jesus died. For it was because he made himself the Son of God, the high-priesthood hunted him down. Did he give his life for a dogma that is divine and necessary to the salvation of sinners? or did he fling his life away by a mistake? Men must make their choice. Those who are not for Christ are against him.

This cry for charity against dogma is sweeping through the land like a tornado. Fruits of the first quality are said to grow equally well with or without the truth; or, as Peter says, "the present truth," and a little better without it. Sanctification and holiness are readily obtained without the truth as "through the truth," and as "quickly" as Jacob's venison. What does it mean? Will those who take heed to the sure word of prophecy, and go forth to meet their Lord with lamps trimmed and burning, be no more pleasing to the Bridegroom than those who oppose them? Shall we have the fruit by engrafting, or on the Christmas Tree principle? Which? "Give us," says one, "the engrafting," "the abiding," and the sanctification and the holiness united by a living principle; and somebody says, Amen!

ARE WE ALMOST THERE?

L. B. WEAVER.

Dear ones upon the walls of Zion, are we not almost home? Is it not near morning? Have we not passed the hour of midnight? Are there no tokens that tell the day is near? Are signs not speaking loudly that something is about to transpire? What is the cause of all the crime, bloodshed and strife? Is it to be so always? Must this state of things always last? My blood chills in my veins as I read the awful crimes committed in the land in open daylight. Is this to go on? How long, O Lord, how long must this last? Does it not tell us that we are almost home? O, ye watchmen, tell us! O tell us! what of the night? Does the morning seem to dawn? Shall we soon enter port? Is the shore in view? If we abide in the ship, shall we be saved? Shall we soon hear the voice of the helmsman saying, Land! land! home! sweet home? I trust it is so. I long to enter there. My heart aches, and I look up and cry, Father, are we almost there? and I almost hear his sweet voice saying, "Behold, I come quickly."

O watchmen! blow the trumpet long and loud! give it a certain sound! Let the inhabitants of the earth know assuredly that Jesus is coming. While they scoff, let us pray. We are living in sad, yet glorious times. Sad, because so few will heed the last warning message of God's servants; glorious, because God's faithful ones will so soon enter into rest,

"Far from a world of grief and sin,
With God eternally shut in."

Then be faithful,—warn the wicked,—tell them of Jesus' coming. O, I want him to come soon! I am lonely. I weep and cry for deliverance, and with the poet sing—

"Watchman, tell us, does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?"

COWARDICE asks, "Is it safe?" Expediency asks, "Is it politic?" Vanity asks, "Is it popular?" But Conscience asks, "Is it griht?"—Punshon.

MY EXPERIENCE.

M. J. PRATT.

Feeling it duty, I take this opportunity of writing my christian experience, hoping it may do some one good, as I have been much benefitted by reading experiences from others.

I was converted twelve years ago, while attending a protracted meeting in Boston, and was baptized by Bro. H. L. Hastings. I felt that I must leave all and follow the Lord. I was happy in his love, rejoicing in hope of eternal life at the appearing of Jesus. I felt as if I had done everything needful for my salvation, and had not another cross to bear. But I soon found if I lived a christian life I had something to do, not only once in a while, but every day. It had seemed a heavy cross for me to pray before any one; but I prayed to the Lord for help, for I knew that if I was ashamed to pray before any one, I could not be wholly the Lord's, and he would not own me as his child when he came to earth. I lived some time in this way, till at last I was taken sick. I told the Lord then if he would raise me up I would live wholly to him, and take up every cross, and serve him as long as I lived. After a while I began to get better, and got along nicely until I was able to be dressed; then I felt I must pray every night, and thank the Lord for his goodness and care through the day. I had been in the habit of praying, but not before any one, and this was the cross. I took it up, and was blest. My heart was filled with sweet joy and peace.

One day I was thinking if I thanked the Lord for his care through the day, why not thank him in the morning for keeping me through the night? This was another cross. But I knew I must take it up, and dared not neglect it. I prayed night and morning, and took much comfort. I received rich blessings from the Lord, and found his "yoke easy and his burden light."

O how good to serve the Lord! Although not able to meet often with the dear saints of God, I have found sweet peace and consolation, that none but Jesus can give. I thank the Lord for his goodness to me, and mean to press onward to the end, that I may receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us be faithful a little longer, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

Holbrook, Mass.

COVETOUSNESS.

A. DEVEREUX.

Covetousness is one of the growing evils of the times. It is among those spoken of by Paul to Timothy that should be prominent in the last days; and we think it should be condemned more than it is. I presume ministers do not feel free to speak of it always in the light they see it; and if not, it is the duty of others of us to condemn it. It is quite a prominent evil with some who are looking for the Lord soon to come. If they are afraid of trusting their money in the Lord's hands, I do not know where they can safely trust it in these times.

I do not wish to convey the idea that all should sell and give away everything, for then there would be no homes, houses and lands for those to whom Jesus has promised them. But we do think all should be consecrated to God. Let him have the whole control of all our affairs, both temporal and spiritual. We think, if we do, he will require as much or more than he did of those under the "faulty" covenant. If we have a better covenant, and more is required of us in other respects than there was of them, then why not more required of us with regard to giving of our possessions? It seems to me that whenever we do not give as much as they did, we are unfit for the Lord's service.

DEBATE AT THE BAPTIST Church, Fort Wayne, Ind.

At the closing union meeting of the churches for the week of prayer, held in the First Baptist church, quite a warm discussion ensued between the ministers on a point of doctrine.

The Rev. A. Marine presided, and after reading a portion of Scripture, delivered a short address, in the course of which he expressed the belief that the world was fast approaching a grand climax when there would be no more sin—when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together; that the mighty army of God encircled the earth, and were almost ready to go forth to victory.

Dr. Stone announced that this was not a Baptist church this day, but the Lord's house.

Rev. John Woods said it was a sublime idea to think that the twelve hundred millions of people inhabiting the world should be converted to God. He thought the time was fast nearing when this should take place.

Rev. D. W. Moffat said it did not matter to him when the twelve hundred million should be converted, or whether they would be at all. It was his duty to preach the Gospel—to "occupy until I come," was the command of the Master which he regarded. If the Lord was to come to-night he would rejoice. Whether the churches united now or not, they would unite at the last end in crowning the Lord Jesus.

The Rev. J. W. Erdman rose and said he was glad for the brother's words. The two brethren (Messrs. Marine and Woods) had spoken unscripturally, and he could not believe but one-half of what they said; the other half he discarded. It is right to preach the gospel, but wrong to expect the world to be converted now. The judgment of God hangs over the world, and it was to flee from the wrath to come that the apostles preached. It pained him, he said, but he felt bound to protest against this delusion. Ministers had no right to preach unscriptural doctrines; no right to talk about the millennium coming before judgment.

It is the duty of ministers to preach to the world to flee from the wrath of God. The Lord Jesus will come, but he will first come to gather the people to his house, and then to judge the world before the millennium arrives. He protested against the false doctrine. If people think it is all right, they will soon be unconcerned. The statistics show that the conversions in India have been only four thousand a year for twenty years, and this would be a slow way of converting the world. The whole thing was unscriptural, and he protested against it; claiming that the apostles, the early church, and even the scholars of the day were on his side.

The Rev. J. B. Fairbank administered balm to the wounded feelings by saying it was the work of God, and all should share in the glory at the end.

The Rev. J. H. Meck tuned a few remarks to the music of a hymn, which expressed a desire to see all the world embraced in the same arms of love in which he was so safe, and this was in sympathy with the ideas of Messrs. Marine and Woods.

The Rev. Mr. Aylesworth prayed for blessings upon all, after which the Rev. J. R. Stone said he loved his Brother Erdman, and believed him sincere but astray. He did not believe a word of what he said. He could not find the views of Mr. Erdman in the Bible, and exhorted his brother to search the Scriptures.

After the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Robinson, the meeting dispersed; and so ended the union meetings under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance.—Fort Wayne Sentienl.

MY EXPERIENCE.

ELLEN M. HULBERT.

In early life I sought and found the Savior, and for a few years tried to live a christian life; but the plague of my own heart, and the wiles of the adversary were too much for me. Though I did not wholly yield to his devices, yet I had not much enjoyment in religion. Years passed on, and I became a wife; but my wine soon turned to wormwood, and my proud heart rebelled. A little son was lent me, which for two short years I was permitted to enjoy. I fondly thought he was mine, but he was taken away. Not by death, that would have been a blessing, comparatively. Often when I have stood by mothers that were weeping over their dead treasures, I have felt that if I could only know mine was as safe, my heart would be at rest. But my heavenly Father knew best, and when I had learned to trust him, he turned my captivity, and after twenty-one years he restored to me my boy; not to make an idol of, but to consecrate, with myself, and all that I have or am, to God to be his forevermore.

I am now fifty-five years old, and as I look back over my past life, and see all the way in which the Lord has led me, to humble me, and to prove me, and to know what was in my heart, whether I would keep his commandments or no, I am filled with love and gratitude to him for all his mercies. But more than all would I bless him for the trials and disappointmets that have shown me the vanity of trusting in earthly things; for I feel that without them I should never have known the sweet peace and rest that I now enjoy. I feel safe beneath God's guardian care. The tempests may howl, the storms may beat—they harm me not.

"Night deepens—'mid its gloom and chill
He draws me nearer to him still."

I had long felt that it would be a blessed privilege to follow my Savior in the ordinance of baptism; but my way was in his hand, and several times I was disappointed, and then darkness and doubts would trouble me, and the question would arise, Why was it? But one year ago last August I was led down into the watery grave, and was raised again to walk in newness of life; and I can truly say, my peace has been like a river, deep and abiding. No cloud has shadowed my pathway, but it grows brighter, and I trust it will coutinue to do so until the perfect day, when I shall meet with all the dear saints in the paradise of God, and so be forever with the Lord.

THY KINGDOM COME.

H. S. PINKHAM.

This is the prayer our Savior taught his disciples, and it is the language of every true child of God. It has been almost six thousand years since God created this earth, and his people are about to enter into that rest which he has prepared for them. What a glorious thought! exchange a world of sorrow, sin and death for one of life, light and glory; where death can never lay his icy hand on our dear ones, nor sin cause us to grieve our blessed Jesus. When I think of it my heart cries out, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!"

Ten years since I embraced this blessed hope of the coming kingdom, and it never looked so sweet as it does to-day. Almost home! how cheering the thought! Then we shall see our sweet little ones that are now sleeping beneath the cold sod, and all our dear ones who have been removed by the grim monster, Death, and dwell forever with them, and the great Life-giver who will restore them to us.

Brethren, can we not unitedly pray, "Thy kingdom come"?

HOME AND HEALTH.

IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT BREATHING.

Human life and health are so dependent upon the air taken into the system through the medium of the lungs, and a healthy state of these organs, that information upon this subject is always interesting and appropriate.

Nothwithstanding the excellent works extant, the breathing of many persons is so imperfect as to be the superinducing cause of their various ailments. Who, for instance, traces the bad feelings with which he is constantly annoyed; to lack of full and deep inspiration? Who traces the extreme nervousness and depression of the mind, almost bordering at times on desperation and insanity, to this cause? And yet the evidence is conclusive that there is no more prolific cause of dyspepsia, liver derangements, constipation, extreme physical languor with mental and nervous depression, resulting in the distortion of the spinal column, flattening of the abdomen, and rigidity of the entire muscular system, with cold extremities.

It is not enough that we are constantly surrounded by the air both out of doors and in our houses. If we do not introduce a sufficient quantity into our system, disease is the inevitable consequence.

The free and easy expansion of the chest is obviously indispensable to the full play and dilation of the lungs; whatever impedes it either in dress or in position is prejudicial to health, and on the other hand, whatever favors the free expansion of the chest equally promotes the healthy fulfillment of the respiratory functions.

Stays, corsets, and tight waistbands operate most injuriously, by compressing the thoracic cavity, and impeding the due dilatation of the lungs, and in many instances they give rise to consumption. I have seen one case in which the liver was actually indented by the excessive pressure, and long continued bad health, and ultimate death was the result.

Dr. Herbst, of Gottingen, has lately been performing some curious experiments in relation to the quantity of air that is breathed. Now, a person of any understanding will appreciate from them the comfort of full and unrestrained breathing. Dr. Herbst says that a middle-sized man, twenty years old, after a natural expiration, or emission of air, inspired or took in eighty cubic inches when dressed, and one hundred and sixty when his tight dress was loosened. After a full dilatation of the chest, he inhaled one hundred and twenty-six inches when dressed, and one hundred and eighty-six when undressed.

Another young man, aged twenty-one, after a natural expiration, took in fifty when dressed, and ninety-six when undressed. Had Dr. Herbst made his observations on some of the ladies who carry the use of corsets to extremes, we apprehend he would have obtained results of a nature really alarming.—Health and Home.

HUSK BEDS.

Considering the real worth of good husk mattresses, the ease with which they are made, and the little expense attending their manufacture, we have often wondered that they were not found in every home and in every single department. In the country their cost is comparatively nothing, while for comfort they are second to none but the costly hair mattresses, which few care to procure. Having used husk beds for several years, we can heartily indorse the following from the Belfast Journal, mercy premising that we prefer the husks should first be steamed and stripped to give the greatest possible lightness and elasticity. There is nothing equal to corn husks for under beds; yet few families have them, even in the country, where the trouble and cost of them are so small. They are always light and easy, and last a long time. Though costing at first about two or three times as much as straw, they are vastly cheaper in the end, and they last much longer, besides being a great deal better. This is the way to get them:

As soon as the husks are taken from the corn, before any mould or other harm comes to them, take the fairest and best leaves, free from all stalks, silk, etc., and spread them out to dry in some large, airy room, stirring them well every fair day for a month, or till they are perfectly dry. As they shrink fifty per cent in drying, it will take twice the bulk of straw to make a good bed.

As there is some wear out to them, as to everything, once in half a dozen years a little new will want to be added. In this way, for a dollar—for nothing, if you have them—you may get what is worth many dollars, and a great luxury that straw folks never know. Don't split the leaves; they do not become flat and solid as many suppose, but curl up and make the mass light.—The Household.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.—Although we do not wish to see children possessed of great animal power; it is as certainly true now, as it was thousands of years ago, that, "A sound mind can exist only in a sound body." Of the lower animals it is said, "Blood will tell;" and in reference to man, it is equally true. For special reasons, the family of Shem has been wonderfully preserved. The Hamites are distinctly marked, and the children of Japheth are known from all their kindred. We offer no doubtful theory as to the preservation of our race; but believe that God wisely separated the children of Noah into three distinct families. We also believe that a violation of this division is opposed to his will. The offspring of Aricans and Asiatics are wild men of the desert, and almost demons. The children of Africans and Japhetites are physically, intellectually, and morally deficient. Hence, it seems to be God's will that the families of earth shall remain distinct, and he has separated them by natural boundaries. In some respects, each family differs in educational wants.—Religious Historian.

WORK IN THE VINEYARD.

HATTIE LEVI.

O work in the vineyard, for now there is need,
The naked to clothe, the hungry to feed;
There's many that's waiting the gospel to hear,—
O tell them of Jesus, who soon will appear.

Go work in my vineyard, was Jesus' command;
There's plenty of work for all willing hands;
The day is far spent, soon the night will come on,
O, haste while it tarries, that thy work be done.

Go work in the vineyard, although you can't teach
In the pulpit or stand with eloquent speech;
With a motive that's pure, and a heart that is right,
You may perform works in which Christ will delight.

Go work in the vineyard, where'er Christ may lead;
Of the least of his children the Savior hath need;
O stay not for weakness, when mercy is near,
But trust him while striving, and be of good cheer.

O work in the vineyard! for surely the Lord
Has promised the faithful a righteous reward;
Be faithful, be humble, be earnest and true,
And blessings will follow your efforts and you.

TENDENCIES OF THE TIMES.

(Concluded.)

Another favorite method at the present day, of giving notoriety to doctrines and promoting their diffusion, is to hold conventions to discuss them and devise and institute measures for their dissemination. Almost all parties, no matter how senseless, how factious, or how irreligious they are, have an annual meeting of their representatives to debate their principles, perfect their organization, and extend their agency. This is an adroit expedient to catch the public eye, raise themselves into conspicuity, and invest their doctrines with a species of official authority. As their transactions are reported in the public papers, the knowedge of their principles and aims is transmitted to thousands who would otherwise never hear of them. No contrivance could be devised more happily adapted to gratify the vanity of ambitious leaders, and inflame the hopes and zeal of aspiring demagogues, who have no other theatre for the display of their powers, and no other method of gathering a crowd to the spectacle. Nine-tenths of those who figure in these self-constituted assemblies, whether infidels, Fourierites, internationalists, advocates of women's rights, agrarianists, liberty partisans, Mormons, mesmerizers, or demon questioners, would never succeed in making their names known beyond their own neighborhoods were it not that they may thus once a year present themselves in a sort of official character to the public gaze.

Are any signs seen that these restless and aspiring beings are growing weary of this charming game? Are any symptoms betrayed by them of a disposition to forego so rare a means of advancing their ambition and gratifying their vanity? Is there any likelihood that they will shrink back into their natural obscurity as long as they can find partisans to give them conspicuity, or induce the public papers to herald to the world their transactions?

In the fourth place, there are other powerful agents at work that exert a depraving influence on the taste, the principles, and the morals of great multitudes. Among these, one of the most efficient is the fashionable literature of the day, a large share of which is not merely without merit, but is directly irreligious and corrupting. Not a few of the popular novels are made the vehicles of propagating the most false and infidel doctrines, giving fascination to vice, and exhibiting the grossest enormities against God and man, as mere misfortunes, pardonble weaknesses, or brilliant foibles, rather than atrocious crimes. The bulk of those works are written to meet the taste of readers, not to refine and elevate it. The great question with their authors is, what will sell? What will meet the quickest and most impassioned response from the greatest number of readers? And the meaning of that is: what will give the widest play to a wild fancy; what will best rouse a lawless curiosity, and transport the reader to scenes where he may revel in all the forms of pleasure without restraint? And each endeavoring to transcend the others in novelty and extravagance, not merely meets, but inflames and exacerbates the passions which he aims to gratify. The circulation which these depraving books obtain is immense. They far outstrip all others, and have a principal influence in moulding the taste, determining the principles, and forming the character of great numbers of the young.

Besides these, there are other books, especially such as treat of metaphysics, that are expressly designed to sap the foundations of religion, and exert a powerful influence in that direction. The works of Coleridge, Kant, Schleiermacher, Cousin, and others of that school, have been the means of unsettling the belief of multitudes in the truth of revelation and the being of God, and leading them into a wild and daring skepticism. And they have been, and still are in a measure, the fashionable writers. Both the secular and religious press teemed for fifteen or twenty years with extravagant eulogies of Coleridge as the greatest of Christian philosophers, who not only rejects the inspiration of the Scriptures and sets aside all the great doctrines of redemption, but denies the being itself of God, and of the universe, except as ideas, and makes it his great aim to strike them forever from the faith of men; and misled by those commendations and the artful disguises under which he veils his atheism, crowds of those who were educated during that period, have taken him as their guide.

The literary and scientific lectures that are delivered in lyceums and addressed to popular assemblies in the cities, are often made the vehicle of disseminating doctrines and opinions that are subversive of religion and morals. That is a favorite method with the advocates of Agrarianism, Fourierism, Socialism, Idealism, Pantheism, and other lawless and infidel systems, of giving their theories a learned and dignified air, and insinuating them without suspicion into the minds of the young.

A large share of the fashionable amusements of the great cities are also highly corrupting, while the countless shops at which the means of intoxication are sold, are centres from which depravation, debasement, and destruction are diffused on an almost boundless scale.

What indications are there now that these powerful instruments of evil are about to drop from the hands of those who wield them, and the vast crowds whom they pervert and debase pass under the sway of better influences? Are there any appearances that the taste for such books, such doctrines, and such pleasures has become satiated? Was there ever a larger demand for them than at present? Was there ever less likelihood of their becoming unfashionable, and giving place to works—of equal interest to the multitude—of refined taste and virtuous principles? What change more wholly improbable can be imagined?

In the fifth place, there never was a period when a greater facility was manifested by multitudes of delusion in religious affairs, and the most preposterous and shameful deceptions found adroit and ardent propagandists, and met a crowd of ready and zealous dupes. No matter what doctrine is advanced, it finds listeners, believers, and partisans; no matter what project is proposed in the name of philanthropy or religion, a crowd is found ready to accept it, and give it their sanction and support.

The vagueness of the religious beliefs of many, and the facility with which they may be led into the gravest errors and superstitions, is exemplified in the most striking manner by the rapid spread of the delusion of the spirit-questioners; and a large number of educated and professedly religious persons who have given it their sanction. No attempt to impose on the ignorance and credulity of men; no device for making merchandise of their religious curiosity, doubts, and fears respecting the future life, ever before met in this country such success. Though great numbers, doubtless, who have joined the crowd of inquirers and spectators have had no faith in the cheat, yet multitudes have been duped into the full belief that the effects which they witnessed were the work of disembodied spirits, and that the responses that were given were communicated by them. The originators of the shameless quackery are undoubtedly at this moment exerting a greater influence than any hundred ministers of the gospel. Their disciples, scattered throughout the whole country, constitute a large body, and comprise not only the ignorant, the skeptical, the superstitious, and the profligate, but many of better classes, and even of the learned professions.

There are many other errors also prevailing extensively, that bespeak a singular readiness of persons of all ranks to be led away from the truth, and involved in wild and fatal delusions.

What appearances now are there, that this extraordinary facility of deception and apostasy to the most false, superstitious, and impious beliefs, is suddenly to die out and give place to good sense, watchfulness, wisdom, and an inflexible attachment to the truth? Are any gleams seen of a dawning millennium in the extreme darkness of mind, the utter disregard of the gospel, and the daring impiety which crowds thus exhibit? Are there any indications that they are about to turn from their false beliefs, reject their delusions, and become the intelligent, the pure, and the faithful disciples of the Redeemer? Is any change further from their thoughts, and more entirely against probabilities?

And, finally, errors and delusions are not confined to those mainly who are not professedly religious; they prevail in the church also, and on a greater scale, probably, than at any former period. Instead of standing wholly on the side of truth, and exerting by its principles, its teachings, and its example, only a salutary influence, it is itself the seat, in some of its branches, of gross apostasy; while those of its denominations that probably embrace the greatest number of true worshipers, are divided into parties that differ essentially in their views of the doctrines of redemption, and are laboring as strenuously in one of their divisions to disseminate errors that subvert the gospel, as they are in the other to inculcate and maintain the truth.

With these defections from the truth, the great doctrines of the gospel have, in a measure, fallen into neglect among those who have not rejected them. Instead of being taught with the frequency and distinctness they were fifty years ago, they are scarcely preached at all in many of the churches, and when made the theme of discourse, it is often but indirectly and under the veil of vague and general terms; and so greatly have the views of ministers and the feelings of churches changed on the subject, that the rejection of Christ's deity and expiation, the renewing influences of the Spirit, justification by faith, and other essential doctrines of the gospel, is by multitudes no longer considered as a disqualification for the sacred office, or a justifiable ground for ecclesiastical discipline. And these errors, it should be considered, had their origin, not with private and isolated individuals, but in the theological seminaries, and have been spread from them, and are accordingly held mainly by those who are teachers of the churches, and whose office it is to form the religious views and sentiments of their people.

What signs, now, are there in this condition of the churches, that the millennial day is about to dawn in unclouded effulgence? What grounds are there for the belief that those who are now strenuously maintaining these errors, are about to lose their faith in them, and discontinue their inculcation? What is there in their principles and passions, or the dispositions of the population, to justify the expectation that they will not go on in the propagation of their mistaken views; that other false teachers will not arise and inculcate other errors; and that the condition of the churches will not grow worse instead of better?

There is no such rapid spread of religion then, as many allow themselves to believe; nor any signs in the piety of the church, that the dawn of the millennium has begun, or is at hand. So far from it, that persuasion itself is a proof of the reverse; cherished as it is, against the most palpable facts, and the plain teachings of the divine word; as it indicates that the church in which it is fostered, instead of having emerged from the darkness of error and unbelief, is involved in a deep delusion respecting its own character and condition, and the great purposes of God.

The emphatic signals of the near approach of the great hour of the world's redemption are of precisely the opposite kind; the wide-spreading decline of the true religion, the extensive substitution in the church of philosophy for the theology, the large prevalence of false doctrines, the sudden rise and astonishing diffusion of the grossest apostasies, and, finally, the reviving strength and threatening attitude of the anti-christian powers; for these and the extraordinary delusions and unexampled impiety that abound in the world, we are forewarned in the Scriptures, are to be the precursors of Christ's interposition to rescue the earth from his foes, and make it the habitation of righteousness and peace. And whoever will impartially look at the facts, will see that these prognostics of his coming exist, and on a scale that has not been equalled at any former period.—Prophetic Times.

THEOLOGY.

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

"Rev. Mr. Tucker, at the Universalist church, yesterday afternoon, gave an exposition of the text recorded in Matthew 24th chapter, 31st and 32d verses: 'When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.' . . .

That Christ did come according to his promise is true. That he came not once only, but twice and thrice; yea, that he has come a thousand times in every age, and comes to-day, and will come to-morrow, and will continue to come until his work on earth is done and his mission all fulfilled, Universalists have no disposition to dispute or deny.

The only coming of Christ possible or probable is spiritual coming, for Christ is spirit. He came in power and great glory when his truth came to human minds and his love to human hearts. When Paul was converted Christ came to him. When the people of Ephesus and Corinth, Philippi and Rome were converted Christ came to them. The trumpet sounded, but it was in their own soul that it sounded.

Let no one ever say that Universalists deny the coming of Christ. He comes in spirit and aids those who are endeavoring to set up his spiritual throne in their hearts, or establish his spiritual kingdom in the earth. The text, however, does not refer to a general coming, but rather to his coming at a special time, to a certain people, and in a certain place. In other words, the text refers, in language highly figurative, to the destruction of Jerusalem, the overthrow of the temple, the judgment of the Jews, and the termination of their special religious career as a nation. In the 23d chapter of Matthew, Jesus is found in the temple at Jerusalem, upbraiding the Scribes and the Pharisees for their wickedness, and after expressing his opinion of their character and acts, he proceeds to tell them of the judgment that will befall them and also the occasion of it. He closes his prediction of it in these words: 'Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.' He speaks of the most tremendous judgment that ever fell upon mankind, and he confines the time to that generation. . . . .

It is evident, beyond all controversy, that all that was meant by the end of the world was the end of the Jewish polity, and the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple. The word world used in this place was not from the Greek kosmos, which signifies the material universe; but from aion, which signifies an age or dispensation. The question of the disciples then was, 'What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the Mosaic dispensation?' And this question our Lord was answering. He further says, 'Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven,' etc.,—speaking of the sign of his coming. Has this event taken place? Tradition says, No; but it will take place at the dissolution of this earth. But hear Jesus' own words: 'Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled.' By this plain and unmistakable testimony from the lips of the Savior himself, we are made to know that the time of which he spake, when he should come in his glory with his angels, was in the generation in which he and his disciples lived. If not, then Jesus testifies falsely, and was one of the greatest impostors, or foolish fanatics, the world ever saw. But his words refer no more to the literal coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, the destruction of the earth by fire, the general judgment, and the separation of nations or individuals, than chalk means cheese. All such interpretations are wholly gratuitous, and while excusable, perhaps, during the dark ages of the world's history, when men and women, priests and people alike, were ignorant and superstitious, they are not excusable in these times, when willful ignorance is no more nor less than a crime."

The above is the reported exposition of the coming of Christ by Rev. Mr. Tucker in Newburyport, Mass,, Jan. 25th. He says, "The only coming of Christ possible or probable is spiritual, for Christ is spirit."

If Christ cannot come personally, for the reason that he is spirit, it follows that he can come personally if he is a person. Christ came into the world in person. He lived, preached, suffered, died, rose from the dead, and went up to heaven in person. After his ascension, he said to John in vision, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore." Christ was dead personally, and he arose from the dead personally, and is so to live forevermore. Is it not possible that Christ can come again personally? By what authority does Mr. T. limit the power of God the Father to send his Son into the world again, or the power of Christ to come in person?

Mr. T. says that Christ came to those who were converted in the time of the apostles. To them "the trumpet sounded, but it was in their own soul that it sounded." How does this agree with what Paul has said of the sounding of the trumpet? "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 51–53. Again, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. How do such statements agree with Mr. T. when he says Christ comes at conversion, and sounds the trumpet in the heart? Would he describe the coming of Christ, and the sounding of the trumpet, as Paul has? No; for he says that Christ came spiritually at their conversion; that is, in no sense personally.

Mr. T. says that Christ came according to his promise. The promise was on this wise: "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself." Christ was with his disciples in person when he made the promise. He did not go away from them by his spirit. He has always been here in spirit. He went away in person, and he will so come, and raise them from the dead, and receive them to himself. "He that believeth in me hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." This is the promise Christ made to his disciples, of his return from heaven. When Christ was taken up into heaven, his disciples beheld him till a cloud received him out of their sight. And as they were gazing, the two shining ones that stood by said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Here we have the manner of Christ's coming particularly described. There is no particle of resemblance between this statement of Christ's coming and Mr. T.'s, who says that Christ comes in spirit when a man is converted, or that he came in any sense at the destruction of Jerusalem.

Mr. T. believes "that he (Christ) came not once only, but twice and thrice; yea, that he has come a thousand times in every age, and comes to-day, and will come to-morrow, and will continue to come until his work on earth is done, and his mission all fulfilled." Where is the evidence of Christ's thus coming? Where in the Scriptures do we find such a number of times that he would come? When he spake of his coming after having gone away, he used no words implying that he would come but once. His promise was, "I will come again." He has come once, and he did the work the prophets said he do. He will come again and do the work he has said he will do when he comes. He will raise his people from the dead, judge the world, gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity, set up his kingdom and reign. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. There is no third coming of Christ in the Bible. Mr. T.'s belief of a multitude of comings is without a shadow or foundation in the Word of God. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, there is no light in them."

Mr. T. claims that his text refers to the destruction of Jesusalem, and the end of the Jewish nation. The text in Matt. 24 is—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." These are Christ's statements of his coming. He told his disciples that when they saw Jerusalem compassed with armies, to flee to the mountains. Hence his elect from the four winds of heaven were not gathered together. Mr. T. would have us take what Christ said about his coming spiritually. All we can know about it is what we find in his Word; and if we are not to take his Word as he has given it, we can know nothing about it.

It will be borne in mind that Mr. T. claims that Christ came in the sense of the text at the destruction of Jerusalem, which was the end of the Mosaic dispensation, and end of the world, or end of the age. He then quotes Christ's words, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven," etc.; and then says Christ was "speaking of the signs of his coming." Thus Mr. T. places the signs of Christ's coming after he claims Christ had come. He claims that the Mosaic age ended at the end of the Jewish nation, and at that point Christ came in the sense of the text, and yet the signs of Christ's coming and of the end of the age did not take place till after the event took place.

The Mosaic dispensation commenced with Moses, and was to continue till Christ should come. "The law and the prophets were until John." Moses said the Lord would raise up a prophet like unto him, whom the people should hear in all things, whatsoever he should say unto them. When Christ came, the people should no longer look to Moses as their lawgiver, but to Christ. At the beginning of Christ's ministry, he gave his code of laws in his sermon on the mount. It was at that time that the Mosaic dispensation ended. "The law came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Jesus preached the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, and preached the gospel. Moses in person introduced the law dispensation, which continued a long time after his death. So Christ in person introduced the gospel dispensation, which has continued till now. The people rejected Moses in the old dispensation; and they rejected Christ in the new dispensation. Those who rejected Moses perished; so those who rejected Christ perished. Christ gave them up to perish. "How oft would I have gathered you, . . . but ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." They would not believe under the old, and they would not believe under the new dispensation. Christ introduced and lived in the gospel age. He told his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel. When therefore his disciples asked him, "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" (or age), they must have meant the age in which they lived, which was the gospel age. They had been trained in the school of Christ, had given up their Judaism, had been taught that Christ, and not Moses, was their Master. They could have had no reference to the Mosaic dispensation when they said, "and of the end of the world," or age.

Mr. T. says that Christ's words "refer no more to the literal coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, the destruction of the earth by fire, the general judgment, and the separation of nations or individuals, than chalk means cheese." This is the same as to say that what Christ said about his coming is no more like what he meant than chalk is like cheese. What Mr. T. says Christ meant by his coming, is no more like what Christ said than chalk is like cheese, nor half as much; for chalk may be made like cheese both in form and size. But there can be no shadow of resemblance between Mr. T.'s view of Christ's coming spiritually when a man is converted, or at the destruction of Jerusalem, and what Christ said in Matt. 24th and 25th chapters. Besides, Christ said of the time in which Mr. T. says Christ did come in the sense he meant—"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not." Mr. T. says Christ was there, or he did come there. But Christ told his people to believe it not. If Christ meant by his coming what Mr. T. claims, he was there in that sense. False Christs would come, but Christ contrasts their coming with his coming by saying, "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

It is certain that Christ's apostles did not understand that he would come thousands of times, nor that he would come when one was converted, and sound the trumpet in their soul, nor that he would come at the destruction of Jerusalem. John said, "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." Paul, in his letters to the Thessalonians said, "How ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven." "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? are not ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" "To the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him." "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." Paul to Timothy—"Until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." "I charge thee, therefore, before God and our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing." "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Paul to Titus—"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."

Did Christ and his apostles speak of his coming as Mr. T. does? If they believed as he does, they never used words that implied any such thing. If Christ is to come personally, how could he and his disciples use words more plainly to show it? Did they live in "the dark ages," Mr. T.?

If Christ did not mean what he said by his promise that he would come again, how does Mr. T. know that Christ meant what he said when he promised eternal life? If he thinks that Christ promised to save all men, it may be true that what he meant is no more like what he said than chalk is like cheese; so all men may be damned, by his own showing. Christ said, "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." Mr. T. takes this to mean just what Christ said; so do I. But suppose it should turn out that what he said is no more like what he meant than chalk means cheese; what then? He thinks this statement of Christ is so plain and positive that it settles the whole question of Matt. 24. He says, "By this plain and unmistakable testimony from the lips of the Savior himself, we are made to know that the time of which he spoke, when he would come in his glory with his angels, was in the generation in which he and his disciples lived. If not, then Jesus testifies falsely, and was one of the greatest impostors, or foolish fanatics, the world ever saw." So if Mr. T.'s application of the "generation" is not correct, or if Christ did not come in the time in which he and his apostles lived, Christ was a great impostor, and foolish fanatic. Or, in other words, if his view of the generation is not correct, and Christ did not come in the time in which the apostles lived, he was an imposter. Let Christ be true though it makes all men liars. If it were true that the word, "generation," has no other application in any other place in the Bible than the one Mr. T. has given, it would not follow that it is so used in this place. But the word has another application.

It is applied to a race, or to a class of persons; to those of like quality or character, without limiting any time, place or age. "Who shall declare his generation?" Isaiah 53: 8. "For God is in the generation of the righteous." Ps. 14: 5. Here the righteous are called a generation without referring to any period of time, age or place. In this sense, the Savior used the word, in some places, if not in every place, where it occurs; applying it either to the righteous, or to those who are not righteous. The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. Here the word is applied to both classes. Luke 16: 8. Mr. T. may say that it should read, The children of this age. Very well; he claims that the age in which Christ lived was the Mosaic age, so the generation would be limited only by that age. That age was nearly two thousand years long.

"This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." What generation? The one whose calamities we had been speaking of; the Jews. See Luke 21st. The nation of the Jews was broken down, their city destroyed, and they carried away into all nations, to become a hissing and a byword. To remain without any nationality, their city to be trodden down by the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. They have been persecuted, "scattered and peeled." This has been their condition from A. D. 70 to this day. And yet, notwithstanding, contrary to all human calculations, they remain a separate and distinct people. Jews are Jews everywhere; maintaining their identity as the seed of Abraham, and are able to trace their genealogy to the stock of Israel. Other nations have been broken down, and the people, without enduring a hundredth part of what the Jews have experienced, in a short time lost their identity. But Jesus said, "This generation," this people, shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled." Christ gave this as a standing, or perpetual sign of his coming and of the end of the world, or end of the gospel age which he introduced, and in which he and his apostles lived. "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled," is literally true. The generation of the Jews will be on the earth to see Jesus coming in the clouds of heaven, in like manner as he was seen to go away.

Christ's coming is in the future. He will come in like manner as he was seen to go away. And he will do what he has said he will do when he comes, without regard to the blasphemous epithets which Mr. Tucker has applied to him. J. S. WHITE.

[COUNT OVER THE MERCIES.—Count the mercies that have been quietly falling in your history. Down they come, every morning and evening, as the angel messengers from the Father of heaven. Have you lived these years wasting mercies, renewing every day, and never yet realizing whence they came? If you have, heaven pity you. You have murmured under afflictions, but who heard you rejoice over blessings? Ask the sunbeam, the raindrop, the star, or the queen of the night, "What is life but mercy? What are health, strength, friendship, social life?" Had each the power of speech, they would say, "I am mercy."

TIME.

C. MENDENHALL.

In affairs of this life it is well to be governed by some system, and to conduct our business in order, performing all duties with regularity, avoiding confusion and loss.

This, being admitted of worldly affairs, applies with equal force to things of far greater importance in relation to the future, for which this life is given as an opportunity for preparation. We should always strive to have regard for the "fitness of things,' knowing that there is a proper time—consequently an improper one for all things.

Solomon says—"To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heavens." By a misuse of judgment or lack of discretion, a deed though good of itself becomes decidedly objectionable; hence we read "a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment." Now as the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, we should strive to be wise unto salvation, "for now it is high time to awake out of sleep" and be ready for the Bridegroom's coming.

The time to seek pardon, to prepare for judgment is now. "Behold now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." The future is not under our control,—we may never attain to one day or hour of it. The present only is ours, and that is God-given and should be improved. Life is short;—the hours fast fleeting bring us nearer and nearer to that season when it will be too late for improvement,—too late for repentance, pardon or mercy.

Man is a poor, fallen, needy rebel, without power of himself to avoid a deserved punishment; he needs salvation,—it has been provided. By believing on Jesus he may be saved. That belief must be exercised now. Salvation is free for all to accept now.

Sinner do not postpone in this great matter. Jesus may come at any hour to banish sin and sinners. Death may in the near future cut you off as those who have no hope. Every moment granted us must be accounted for.

> O time! than gold more sacred; more a load
> Than lead to fools; and fools reputed wise.
> What moment granted man without account?"
> —YOUNG.

The masses seek worldly pleasures. Every spare moment is devoted to amusement, selfish gratification or the amassing of wealth; no time for Jesus,—all swallowed up in worldliness.

Will not some sinner come now to the fountain of life? improve time, in order to attain unto eternal joy and peace in the inheritance incorruptible.

Fellow pilgrim, are we employing our time to the glory of God? Let us each gird our loins and be faithful in all things, that it may be said of us "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

CHRIST FOR ME.

ELLA M. LUNT.

Christ is everything to the christian in times of trouble. Sickness, suffering, and sorrow meet us on every hand. No position, however exalted, is exempt; no pathway but what has its thorns,—no household so carefully guarded but sorrow and death may enter its happy enclosure,—no heart so happy but has its bitterness; all alike must drink from the bitter cup. But if we will make Christ our choice, he will bring us through all these trials, and at last we shall reach the shore of eternal blessedness, and unfading glory. The way may look dark, we may see no light ahead, and our frail bark is tossed to and fro on the sea of trouble, but even there we should have no fears; for Jesus will never forsake us. Just there he appears to our relief, and we hear that sweet voice "It is I, be not afraid." If we are in darkness, Jesus says, "I am the bright and the morning star." If we fall asleep we need not fear; for the same voice that uttered "It is I, be not afraid," also said "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead yet shall he live."

In view of such precious and abiding promises, why do not men and women make Christ their choice?

I will no longer look at the things that are seen, for they are only temporal, and will pass away. The purest, fairest and loveliest things of earth are doomed to decay; passing away is written upon all earthly; but amid the fading away of that which is seen, we may rejoice that the unseen is eternal. If we would make Christ our choice, we must be humble, for the children of God are at first in humility, trial and distress; at last in victory, exaltation and glory. We know for long ages those who made Christ their choice bowed their heads to the dark and pitiless storms of persecution and oppression; but the end repays them all, for John beholds them at last—their storms all over, their conflicts all ended, waving palms of victory, and striking on golden harps songs of everlasting triumph within the portals of the heavenly city. If we make Christ our choice, when he comes down the parting heavens we with confidence can look up and say, "This is our God," and hear in return "Well done!"

When I look forward to the time when this earth shall be brought back to her Eden beauty, and robed in her long promised mantle of immortal loveliness, I say with an honest heart, "Come quickly." Then shall we realize what we have gained by making Christ our choice.

> "My heart is fixed, eternal God, fixed on thee;
> And my immortal choice is made, Christ for me."

Biddeford, Me.

The true christian is patient in tribulation, and if God denies his request to be delivered from any trouble, he can even praise him for the denial.

THE NEW BIRTH.

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3.

The great Teacher made one emphatic point in this passage, viz., that a second birth is absolutely necessary to every sinner for the enjoyment of the kingdom of God. It implies the essential preparation or qualification for the kingdom. To prove definitely what is meant by being born again, we must find parallel passages in which the same point is made, expressed in different language, which will serve as an explanation or interpretation of this. We must look for passages expressing the absolute prerequisite for eternal salvation, which must consist in a radical change of condition; for that is just what is implied in the figure, or parallel. All will admit that the two births express a parallelism, the first illustrating the second. At the first birth we experience a radical change of condition; not the commencement of existence in the absolute sense, but the commencement of life in a qualified sense. It is stepping upon the stage at the commencement of social life,—the entering the list of a family, of a nation, as a child, as a citizen, as an heir claiming relationship to "father," "brother," "neighbor" and "friend." At that point our days of such a life with such surroundings commence to number; and when that life connected with such circumstances ends, the number of its days is told. At that point we commence a life of progression, starting at infancy and going to manhood. We there commence to fill the different positions of human experience, from the child to the soldier, the mariner, the husbandman, the father. We there commence to receive food,—first milk, then meat; to use our members—the eye, ear, lungs, feet and hands.

These are the important facts connected with the first birth; consequently, we may expect the same ideas expressed in the illustrated parallel.

Jesus expressed the same essential preparation for the kingdom of heaven when he said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 18: 3. The word converted expresses a radical change of condition, the same as the word born, only using a different figure. The Evangelist, in recording the history of Christ and those who had believed on him, says: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; even to them that believe on his name; which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1: 12, 13. This was a history of events which had already transpired. He says, "as many as received him," not shall receive him; "were born"—an event already experienced, and had become the "sons of God." When do we become the sons of God? When we believe on his name. When are we called the sons of earthly parents? When we are born, and never before. When are we converted? When we believe. Therefore conversion and the new birth take place at the same time,—both essential to the enjoyment of the kingdom of God.

Nicodemus could not understand how the organic literal body of a man could be born a second time. He did not understand that a second birth could produce anything but a body of flesh. Jesus in explaining this mystery to him says, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." He did not in this expression illustrate the births, but he explained to the confused Nicodemus what the two births would produce He states that the first birth produces "flesh," and the second "spirit." This reached the point of the ruler's difficulty; for he stumbled at the idea of a body of "flesh" being born after reaching manhood. But if the second birth produces spirit, and not a body of flesh, then that which stumbled him is removed. The Savior then borrows an illustration of the new birth, and that which it produces, from Solomon. Eccl. 11: 4, 5—"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

The Preacher speaks of the "bones" (flesh) and of the "spirit," of which he says, "Thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit"; that is, he could not "know" by the use of his organic senses the "way" a "spirit" changed its condition or position, as he could the change of a body of "flesh" at its birth. Christ very aptly illustrates the invisibility of the "spirit," which is changed by this birth, by wind which is invisible and cannot be seen coming or going, but is known to exist by its visible results. The second birth is not a change of "flesh," but of "spirit"; not of body, but of heart. Peter represents this change of soul, heart, or spirit, thus: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently; being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Pet. 1: 22, 23. Born, in this passage, does not mean begotten, because he immediately represents those experiencing it thus: "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby; if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious." 1 Pet. 2: 2, 3. Peter therefore represents persons newly converted as "newborn babes." This agrees with Christ, who said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Paul feared that the Galatians had turned from Christ to the law, and said, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." His labor and effort to produce in them conversion to Christianity he calls "travail in birth," which certainly implies that they experienced birth at their conversion. He applies this argument and figure by the allegory of the bond woman and free woman, and their sons, saying, "Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise; but as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the spirit, even so it is now." Is anybody persecuted now under the gospel? Yes. Who is it? He that is born after or "of the Spirit." John says, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." 1 John 3: 9. Some believe, and with some show of argument, that this passage applies to the resurrected state, because they say the Scriptures teach that the christian is liable to sin while in this state, which we admit is true; but the context proves very conclusively that it applies here. The apostle had just said, "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him." ch. 3: 6. In this passage he as positively asserts that those in Christ "sinneth not," as in the other passage; but none will contend that verse sixth refers to the future state. Again he says,—"We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." ch. 5: 18. In this passage he represents the believer as having been both begotten and born of God.

When the christian is represented as begotton of God, it does not follow that he is represented in the embryotic state, for that condition is never in the Scriptures taken to illustrate christian experience. They are represented as commencing in infancy, and growing to manhood, and as filling all social positions in this life.

But the question still comes up, how is it that he that is born of God "cannot sin"? Let the apostle explain himself. "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world." ch. 5: 4.

What is it that is born of God? Not the "flesh," for that was produced by the first birth; but the "spirit," as Jesus said. Paul elucidates this subject clearly as follows: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new. 2 Cor. 5: 17. A creature is a created being. A new creature is a being newly created. This is to be taken in a qualified sense; for he says of this new creature, "old things are passed away, behold all things are become new." It is not the commencement of its existence; but is the beginning of its existence in a changed or renewed condition. This change is not of the flesh, but of the heart, mind, or spirit.

Again he says of this change, "Ye have put off the old man ("old things") with his deeds, and put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. 3: 9, 10. The old man is the flesh controlled by a carnal will, and is put off as to its government and rule. The new man is the heart, the spirit, which is "renewed" by the eradication of moral pollution and the reception of the divine nature. J. C.

DEMONS.—When speaking of demons, Justin Martyr says:—

"I must tell you that heretofore those impure spirits under various apparitions went into the daughters of men, and defiled boys, and dressed up such scenes of horror, that such as entered not into the reason of things, but judged by appearance only, stood aghast at the spectres; and being shrunk up with fear and amazement, and never imagining them to be devils, called them gods, and invoked them by such titles as each devil was pleased to nickname himself by."—Reeve's Apologies, p. 10. Written A. D. 141.

Some of those ancient christian writers understood demonism, and faithfully sounded the note of warning. Spiritualism is only a rehash of the same thing, with new terms. It is only the religion of paganism revived in a new dress, to conceal, as far as possible, its hideous deformities. The more we see of its workings and know of its doctrines, the worse it looks. It is entirely antichristian, anti-Bible and anti-God in its tendencies and influence. M. G.

ARTICLES FOR PUBLICATION.

The intellectual, moral, and spiritual character of a religious paper depends upon the tone of its published articles. The object to be accomplished in conducting such a paper should be, to supply the real wants of its readers. If they need enlightenment upon any particular subject, clear and logical arguments should be written upon those subjects. If the readers are in danger, those dangers should be pointed out in a kind, winning and faithful manner, so that those exposed shall not have their eyes and ears closed to the danger by harsh words, or by the truth being made repulsive by connecting it with crude and fanciful ideas. Popular and dangerous currents of public opinion, customs and habits of the people are always sweeping the masses away from Christ and the gospel, down to perdition. These currents change with different generations and circumstances, so that it is important that the present tendencies to evil, and the present instrumentalities used by Satan to turn men from God should be made manifest.

The influences of this world, in its connection with the church, always tends to cause her to lower the standard of piety, and detract from the purity of her devotion; consequently, a constant effort should be made to keep before her the divine standard of christian character. Human experiences, outside of inspired persons, should never be taken as the standard of christian character, because they are not known to be right only by the gospel test, which every person can more correctly apply to themselves than to another.

One grand purpose of God, in his economy in the government of his church, is to produce constant and sympathetic social relations between his people. This is accomplished by personal intercourse, or by written or published communications. Therefore scattered believers, who meet with but few of "like precious faith," very much enjoy to read the communications from their brethren, expressing their sentiments, and breathing in words the faithfulness and love of their hearts.

Communications expressing pure and heartfelt devotion, strong and abiding love to God and his Christ, earnest longings for Christ's appearing, great delight in gospel worship, and sweet communion with the saints, tends very strongly to kindle the same heavenly spirit in the hearts of readers. Many thanks to those who have thus written. We need a holy inspiration when we write for the benefit of the church and the saving of the perishing, as much as we do when we pray for sinners. We need it in these last days, that our articles may glow with truth, and burn with heavenly love. We must have it to accomplish our holy mission. We must have it now, for the last hours in which we can use it to discharge our responsibilities to the world are passing.

O, that we could realize that we can do nothing without Christ! No act will be reckoned as fulfilling the divine law unless Christ is in it; for he alone can fulfill that law. He must mould it by his wisdom and truth, and produce it by the power of his Spirit. J. C.

DISCUSSION IN CALIFORNIA.

In our discussion with Prof. Chaney, in San Jose, we debated the following the last two evenings:—

"RESOLVED, That the Bible is the only divinely inspired book."

Of course, we had the affirmative of this resolution. We turned to the prophecies in the Bible for infallible proof of this proposition. He said he would not follow us on that subject; thus tacitly admitting that he had no means by which to refute the overwhelming evidence found in the sacred prophecies to prove the divine inspiration of the Bible. It was evident that these waters were too deep for his wading, and he chose to keep near the shore, and spend his time in working at some pebble objections, that had been often refuted. He was bold in making assertions, such as that no such persons as Abraham or Christ ever existed on the earth. We gave him some of the one hundred prophecies that were fulfilled at the first advent of our Savior, but he again refused to examine them. It was evident that he was not posted in the prophetic Scriptures.

He paid but little attention to what we said, but spent his time in talking about the stars, claiming that the characters in the Bible, such as Abraham, Moses, Christ, and others, were only things connected with the twelve signs in the zodiac. His system is a mixture of astronomy, astrology, and ancient mythology; being the most confused muddle of nonsense we ever heard advanced; and yet, many have so far departed from the truth as to believe such fables, just as the prophet said they would in the last days. His whole system differed but little from ancient Buddhism. And when we showed the almost complete correspondence between the two systems, he was free to acknowledge the fact, and several in the audience expressed their cheering consent. This is the fruit and tendency of Spiritualism. It is a return to the old heathen mythology and demoniac oracles, and communion with the lying demons.

Mr. Chaney prayed to the devil, a formal prayer of some length, and said, "The Modoc chief was a gentleman, when compared to the God of the Bible." The spirit of Spiritualism is as bitter towards the Bible, its Author, and Christianity, as Catholicism ever was towards Martin Luther and Protestantism. No doubt the worst is yet to come from this diabolical system.

Many people were astonished at what they heard from this infidel champion of Spiritualism. They were not aware that its leaders had become such bold blasphemers against all sacred things. They were appalled. In this way, we think much good was done in opening the eyes of those who stood in danger of being led into this horrible snare of the devil. Spiritualism has a very strong hold on the Pacific coast, and is leading thousands to perdition. It is the embodiment of all that is satanic. Thank the Lord, he has given weapons with which it can be successfully met and defeated in any fair, open combat. Its foundation rests on a lie of the devil, and it will end in utter destruction. M. THE GREAT CHART.

About one year since, we spoke to our readers of a remarkable Biblical, historical, and chronological chart, that had been prepared by Bro. S. C. Adams, Salem, Oregon. Bro. Adams is a devoted christian preacher, who has spent some six years in preparing this chart. During the past year he has had it engraved in Cincinnati, O., at an expense of twenty thousand dollars. It is twenty-two feet long, and about three feet wide. It is finely engraved, and is a beautifully illustrated panorama of the world's history, representing the nations, empires, sovereigns, important persons, manners, dress, civilization, discoveries and inventions, each in proper time. It gives as clear an idea of history as a map does of Geography. We consider it of more value than a hundred dollars worth of histories; and yet it is sold for twenty dollars.

This chart should be in every school and family where there is any desire for historical and chronological information. It is said to far excel anything of the kind ever prepared. It begins with Adam, and extends to 1874. In one day, we believe a person could get a better idea of the history of the world from it, than from reading historical books a whole year. Some of the charts are on frames, which cost two dollars extra. Those wishing the chart can address S. C. Adams, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CHINESE NEW YEAR.

This year, the Chinese new year began at midnight, between Feb. 15th and 16th. The Chinese make a great ado over the entrance of their new year. They completely eclipse the celebration of the 4th of July among the Americans, or any other festal season. They suspend business for seven days, and devote themselves to jollification, without limit. The amount of fire crackers consumed is astonishing. They seem to be very fond of a noise, and especially that of fire crackers.

There are now said to be some twenty-five thousand Chinese in San Francisco. On New Year's day, they dress themselves in their best apparel, and have a general visitation. In some of the streets the sidewalks are crowded with them, especially a part of Jackson, and Dupont, where every house is occupied by them. They receive American visitors with cordiality, offering them a portion of their choice bits of food, brought from China. It is quite palatable, and so prepared as to keep for some time. We could not tell its composition any better than the children of Israel could tell what constituted the manna found in the wilderness. Some of the Chinese restaurants are filled up in a very showy manner,—perhaps it might be said with pleasing taste. Pictures of their gods occupy a prominent place in these first-class restaurants. Their best specimens of food, fruit and flowers are placed on a table in front of these pictures, and incense wood, in small bits, is also kept burning near them.

There is quite a striking analogy, in some things, between the Chinese and the Catholic worship. The Catholics copied much from the heathen, in order to get and keep control over them. Instead of the heathen gods, the Catholics substituted the worship of saints. Instead of burning their wood, the Catholics burn candles. Instead of the Chinese god Josh, the Catholics have substituted the Virgin Mary; instead of the festivals for heroes, the Catholics have changed them to festivals for saints, and so on to the end of the chapter.

On New Year's day, the Chinese cancelled all debts; but in case one does not pay up, he is scorned and shunned. They have three temples devoted to the worship of their gods, which are fitted up in a fantastic, gorgeous manner. They go in before them and bow three times, quite like the Catholic bowing to the Virgin Mary. This is done to secure the assistance of their gods during the coming year.

One thing is quite evident, and that is, the Chinese are a curse to California. A great mistake was made when they were brought to this coast. Their influence is decidedly corrupting. It is said there is not a virtuous woman among them. The men are employed as servants in American families, the same as Irish women are in the eastern states; but no one hires a Chinese woman. The men are very industrious. They work for smaller wages than other laborers, and lay up more money, because of their cheap mode of living. Their business is about all done among themselves. They get supplies from China, and build up the interests of Chinamen at the expense of California interests. It is true that some manufacturers make money in hiring these foreigners at a lower rate than they could other men; but this is a damage to the laboring classes, and prevents the prosperity of those who must work for a living.

The following is from the Morning Call, Feb. 16th:—M. G.

"A few moments before the bell in St. Mary's Cathedral tolled in solemn cadence the witching hour of night, several spectral forms were yesterday observed to glide noiselessly along the streets leading to the north, and several of the new appointees were on the point of accosting them, when they observed their garbs, and allowed them to pass as if they were really visitants from the nether spheres. These forms were adorned with fawdry paraphernalia and bright colored flowing robes, and wended their way at a shuffling gait to the north. Arriving at a point near Meiggs wharf, they stopped, and appeared to be consulting on some important matter. Suddenly the group separated, and the individuals, proceeding to short distances from each other, commenced a series of genuflections and incantations strange to the vision of the Caucasian. After these ceremonies had been continued a few moments, and just as the clocks were tolling the hour of midnight, an attenuated form crept forward and tossed something into the water. The spectres then departed. Some North Beach hoodlums, in a small boat, who had been pulling along under the shadow of the wharf, observed the whole proceeding, and as soon as the forms had disappeared, bore down on the "something," and picking it up, found that they had captured the miniature model of a Chinese junk, covered with tinsel and Mongolian finery. Then the mystery of the spectral forms and strange ceremonies became apparent. A delegation from the Chinese quarter had been sent with the junk, which represented the old year, to the beach, for the purpose of setting it afloat, and allowing a mythical junk, representing the new year, to sail into the harbor of generations and accumulating cycles. The junk that was supposed to be floating out upon the waters of oblivion was the seventh year of Lu Hoi's cycle, and that which came in, the eighth year of the same, according to the computation of time as set forth by that venerable demi-god, Fu-hi.

The beginning of the Chinese new year is slightly eccentric, and always takes place between the last quarter and new moon. It is a season of general rejoicing in the Quarter, and yesterday proved no exception to the rule. At midnight every joss house presented a scene of brilliancy and Mongolian splendor only attained by the tinsel-loving Chinese. Bombs and crackers were exploded at intervals, and the tympanum-eradicating tom-tom rendered the early morning exceedingly hideous. Magnificently attired Celestials perambulated the streets, entered the houses of their friends, and after performing the customary saalams, partook of the greasy-looking dainties piled upon the side-boards, and then calling the proprietor aside, inquired whether it would not be convenient for him to settle that little account that had been so long outstanding against him. Having performed this duty, and in most instances having obtained the "little account," more oleaginous viands were partaken of, more salaams perpetrated, and the gaudily attired exiles of Far Cathay majestically strode from within the limits of their hospitable entertainers. A hundred lights flashed from within door ways shielded from the passing gaze by their bright colored curtains, from behind which came the sound of dice clinking in the porcelain or chinaware bowls. The inmates were indulging their passion for gambling to a greater extent than usual, feeling safe from arrest on account of its being "Allee same New Year, you sabe?" And over all, from every hovel and temple, out of the alleys and cul-de-sacs, arose the foul odor of strange and barbarous incense to the various gods, goddesses and josses which the worshipers wished to propitiate during the year.

The festival will last several days, and San Francisco may depend upon experiencing the usual "annual nuisance," although the Police have placed some restrictions upon the firing of bombs and crackers by these din-loving people. The temples and restaurants will present the most curious features to visitors, and those who can should not fail to view them upon at least one day or evening. Lanterns adorn the balconies of these places, and richly hung chandeliers throw a blaze of radiance upon the richly plated gew gaws and fantastically arranged figures, as well as the central figures of interest—the Josses. The only discomfort that will be experienced will be from the heavy fusilades of crackers and bombs that will be discharged in every direction to warn off evil spirits. Those who slept last night in the vicinity of the Chinese Quarter are fully aware that the Chinese New Year has opened, and it only remains to state that the Mongolians believe that they have entered upon the eight thousand six hundred and fifty-first year of the world."

MEETING AT HANOVER, ILLINOIS.

I wish to give you an account of Eld. S. B. Mabey's visit and labors in this place. He came here Jan. 8th, a stranger to us all, except by reputation, and having no personal acquaintance, he knew not that he would find a place to rest his weary head. But he came trusting in the Lord, who opened the heart of James Trousdale, who took him in and said, "Here abide." He did so, and found a pleasant home with him during his stay, which was one month.

There are three church edifices in this small village, a United Presbyterian, New School Presbyterian, and a Methodist. But not one of them would let him in. They would not rent a church to him. And it seems to me that when Jesus comes he will say, Inasmuch as ye refused your synagogue to one of my faithful ones, ye did it unto me. May it be impressed on their hearts before it is too late. Everything was done that could be done by opposition meetings to keep the people from going to hear the truth. Preachers and laymen went from house to house through the day telling the people not to go to the Town Hall, that the preacher was preaching heresy, and they would be poisoned. They advertised him in the County paper as a Universalist, and as preaching Universalism.

His audiences were good, all things considered. The last sermon he preached, the hall was crowded. But amid all oppositions and discouragements, Elder Mabey's faith in God was firm and strong, and the Lord stood by him, and assisted him to proclaim those neglected and unpopular truths of the Bible which every christian should love—the personal and immediate coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the earth to be renewed and inherited by the saints, sanctification through belief of and obedience to the truth, holiness and purity of heart,—ingredients of Christianity here, and essential to eternal salvation hereafter. All who heard him said they never saw Bible truth made so plain. Divine power and much assurance accompanied the Word. Sinners were convicted, saints rejoiced, and backsliders trembled. His work here will be as bread cast upon the waters; it will be gathered after many days. M. D. P.

BRO. J. T. ONGLEY writes:—"We have just closed a meeting of ten days, in Potter Co., Pa., near Bro. A. H. Briggs'. The good Lord blessed the truth. Nine heads of families made a start in the cause of Christ. To God be all the glory. Our work will soon be done; let us work while it is called to-day. Pray for us."

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM J. A. CARGILE.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—I have just returned from another trip to Manchester, Edgefield and Nashville. Had large crowds at Manchester, who listened eagerly to the great subject of the Lord's coming. Met a Bro. Isaac Cath there, a Seventh Day Adventist, the first one I ever saw. He has kept the "First Day" since he came to Tenn. He seemed to enjoy the meetings extremely well, having come on horseback eight miles through a heavy rain to hear the good news, which he said he had not heard from the pulpit before in four years.

I feel that under God I have sown, in much weakness, the seeds of truth in the pleasant village of Manchester, which will tell in eternity. May God give it root in good soil. From Manchester I went to Edgefield, and tried to proclaim the good news to them. Here it seems difficult to get the people to take an interest in the plain Word; but we hope some good impression was made. A very worthy Presbyterian minister heard us on the "gospel hope," who afterward told us he believed, as we had preached, that our views are the only thing that will kill Spiritism, although he said he had never thought of it before. We found Bro. Barr and family well, and seemingly glad to see us. They bade us God-speed. We met two other brethren—J. W. Hooberry and H. Stone, and heard of still another. We hope soon to be able to form a small body here to be ready for Jesus at his coming.

In Nashville we preached in the storeroom of a harness-maker, Bro. J. M. Fraley, a Methodist minister, who, together with his wife, made us feel at home with them. There is in Nashville a church called "The Church of the Advent," "The Advent Brotherhood," etc., which my few brethren there desired me to explain to your readers to be an Episcopal organization, and the name "Advent" is only to signify their church, or house.

Lest I burden your worthy columns, and thus press out something better, I close. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me, that my bodily strength be increased. I feel wearied, and have been trying for several weeks to find a space of time to rest. But how can the watchman sleep when he is expecting the Bridegroom; and at the same time sees the world carelessly rushing on to destruction? I have only to stay with my dear family to-night. To-morrow I start again to Lookout Valley, Chattanooga, Tyner's Station, and Ooltewah, East Tenn. Sometimes I go mourning for my own and the sins of my people, but bless God, ever and anon I get the fullness of the Spirit, and then I feel thankful that I am privileged to live in this grand age of looking and waiting for the husbandman to come. Bless the Lord, O my soul! and all that is within me, praise his holy name for ever! God grant we may meet in the kingdom and rest forever.

BOSTON LETTER.

The Boston Preachers' Meeting, which has long been engaged in debating the question of the final place of the saints, is giving the Millennian question a fresh airing. The debate bagan nearly a year ago, and has been continued at intervals, as other questions of a more immediate and practical nature would allow, till we came, as was supposed, to the final speech which opened out the question on a new side, and spiritedly renewed the debate.

In its previous discussion, the speakers on both sides, had confined themselves to the teaching of Scripture and reason on the subject; but now the debate has taken a historic direction. It was claimed on one side that the doctrine of this personal reign of Christ on earth for a thousand years, was not only the teaching of the Bible, but that such has been the belief of the Church in the present ages and sections, and that the great feats of the gospel have been made by the inspiration of Chiliasm. On the other side this was denied, and testimony was adduced to show that the doctrine had always been a heresy and mischievous in the Church. The Primitive Church held it only in the historical sects like the Ebionites and Montanists, and at the Reformation, it was held only by the Anabaptists, and by the fragments that splintered off from this tumultuous and disorganizing body. The sects that still hold it, are those which most poorly represent the cause of Christ like the Adventists.—Methodist Home Journal.

THE WORLD'S EXPECTATION.—Over fifteen years ago, Mr. David N. Lord, of New York, penned the following language:

"There has been no period for ages, probably, when there was so general an expectation among evangelical christians of all classes, that either the advent of Christ is at hand, or else some great measure of Providence, by which a new era is to be introduced to the church; and what is equally remarkable, no time before in which other men of all creeds and classes—atheists, infidels, apostates, formalists, nothingists, were also looking as they are now, for a regeneration of the world after their several schemes of perfection and blessedness. Among the signals that Christ is at hand, one of the most striking is the skill and success with which Satan is working with all power and signs and lying wonders.—ED.

Correspondence.

From Bro. O. B. Town.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—While I am sitting to-day beside the sick bed of my dear companion, I have been thinking of those who will meet together for prayer and praise. I wish I could meet with some of God's children for his worship, where I could hear the gospel preached in its purity. But I cannot, and it is all right, for God has ordered it otherwise, and he doeth all things well. I will not murmur, for that would be wrong; and I think of others that have been deprived of the same privilege many years, while I have, only a few months.

My wife was taken sick last September at the time of the Vermont Campmeeting at Bethel, and has been confined to her bed ever since. She was taken bleeding at the lungs the day we went to the meeting, but we stayed through, and the good Lord watched over her, and brought her safely home. I praise his name for it. Now she lays here in the last stages of consumption, and suffers greatly; so much so that she longs for the time to come that she may be at rest.

It seems to be God's will that she should sleep a little while; yes, a little while, then Jesus will come to raise the dead, to change the living, and to crown them with everlasting life. Then "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Then you, dear ones, who have been afflicted for many years, will know what it is to be made well, never to suffer any more. Then you that have not taken a step for so long, will have the privilege of walking the streets of the New Jerusalem.

So let us not be weary in looking and waiting for the appearing of our Lord, but keep on repeating that part of the Lord's prayer that says, "Let thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Pray for us that we may have strength to bear our daily cross, go through to the end, and gain everlasting life.

"'O Lord, my God,' I oft have said,
'Had I some other cross instead
Of this I bear from day to day,
'T were easier to go on my way.

I do not murmur at its weight,
That thou hast made proportionate
To my scant strength; but, oh! full sore
It presses where it pressed before.

Change for a space, however brief,
The wonted burden, that relief
May o'er my aching shoulders steal,
And the deep bruise have room to heal.

While thus I sadly sighed to-day,
I heard my gracious Father say,
'Can'st thou not trust my love, my child,
And to my cross be reconciled?

I fashioned it, thy need to meet;
Nor were thy discipline complete
Without that very pain and bruise
Which thy weak heart would fain refuse.'

Ashamed, I answered, 'As thou wilt,
I own my faithlessness and guilt;
Welcome the weary pain shall be,
Since only that is best for me.'"

From Bro. D. Cogswell.

Brethren and sisters in Christ who love the present truth, and feel just like standing up for it, doing that which will meet the approbation of our King, in whose presence we are to stand in a little while,—to you I wish to say a few words. We represent a present, dispensational truth. Has God, in the past, had dispensational truth? and did he require his people to stand up boldly for those truths? If this was true in the past, does he expect us to do the same now? If he does, will we do it? Will we follow Christ as Paul followed him; that is, give up all; use our time, talents, money, and say, Lord, I give myself away; it is all that I can do"? Do we think as much of the cause of Christ as his children in the past have? and do we show our faith by our works? The time is drawing near for our next Quarterly Conference. Do we feel like saying, "I will lay aside everything, and go up to this feast, and do all I possibly can to help the blessed cause of God, that cost the life of Jesus"? Let us all get down before God and see if we are all right in this matter.

Don't forget that some of our brethren worked hard last year with the tent, and that we have not paid them yet. Will every one see that they do their duty in this respect? Let us act as one man in this matter, and not fail to do so at once. I shall expect to see, at our next Conference, representatives from every church. If anything should happen that any of our churches cannot send a delegate, do report by letter, and be sure to enclose in the letter all you can to help clear the Conference from debt, and help the cause. O my God, move upon our hearts and help us to act wisely.

Dansville, N. Y.

From Bro. B. Crabtree.

I want to say a few words for the cause of Christ. I have found Jesus precious to my soul. He is my all—"the one altogether lovely, and the chiefest among ten thousands." I would recommend Jesus to all. I thank God for free salvation. We can have it without money and without price. I am glad that I am trusting in Jesus Christ, and following my Lord and Master. I am not ashamed to own him before all. It is good to be found among the people of God, serving Christ. It will be an honorable position to be in when we see the King in his beauty coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, to crown his waiting saints. There are bright prospects before the christian. There remaineth a rest for the people of God. In the new earth all tears will be wiped away, and trials end forever. We shall sing the song of redemption on the evergreen shore. O, how blessed to have a hope in Jesus Christ! Where a man's treasure is, there his heart will be also. I have started for the kingdom, and am fully determined not to turn back. I will serve God, and let my light shine. By grace I will be a christian, and at last have a home in the kingdom when Jesus comes to gather his jewels.

From J. S. Thorpe.

To the friends scattered abroad:—How cheering to our hearts is the promise of Jesus,—"If I go away I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." O to be with Christ! to dwell in his presence in the jasper walled city of light—how glorious! Brethren, will we be there? all gathered home to the enjoyment of the saints' everlasting rest in the kingdom of God?

Many are the advantages which we, who are waiting for the Lord, enjoy, of which others are deprived. Those things transpiring in the world, causing men's hearts to fail them for fear, are no cause of uneasiness to us; but on the contrary a cause of rejoicing; for we see in them a fulfillment of that which is written concerning the return of Christ to earth, to reign with his saints forever. Each dark cloud which casts its gloom upon the world quickens my hope of speedy redemption, and increases my indifference to the things of this world, which are so soon to give place to the fadeless glory of the world to come. O, happy day! when sin and sorrow shall vanish away, and when Christ shall come and bring peace to this "little flock" now suffering from the perils of these "last days." Only a little while longer shall we have to suffer here. Only a little while will our hearts be made sad by the lukewarmness and indifference of those who profess to love God and serve Jesus, yet are smiting their fellow servants. Only a little while shall scoffers abound, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Only a little while, and he that is to come will come. and will not tarry. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Lake Sibley, Kansas, Feb. 12th, 1874.

From Sr. L. Foote.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ:—I have often thought I would like to address you, as I am, with you, a pilgrim and stranger, having no continuing city, but looking for one that hath foundations. I have been wandering and looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our Savior, for many years. I can say that I am not in the least discouraged or disheartened, for I believe that signs, "there is no mistaking, proclaim Messiah near." His Word is true, and will abide forever. O, I am so glad that Jesus loves even me, and that I ever believed in the coming and kingdom of Christ. Ye dear ones, look up! for your redemption draweth nigh. All tears will be ended, and sorrows all gone. How encouraging to think that we shall soon be free from temptation, sin and sorrow! "Oh the prospect, it is so transporting!" Savior, hasten thy coming I pray! Cheer up, ye dear ones, and hold fast whereunto ye have attained; we shall soon meet with the loved of earth, and never part again. May the Lord help us to obtain eternal life through Jesus Christ our Redeemer is the prayer of your unworty sister.

Salisbury, N. H.

From Bro. J. A. Orchard.

Dear Brethren:—I would like to write a few lines for our paper. I am young in the cause, and inexperienced in the faith, but I have started to live as God commands. I love him with all my heart, which is the first and all-important commandment: the next is like unto it, viz., to love my neighbor as myself. There is no other way given whereby we can be saved, only through the blood of Jesus Christ. Let us read the Scriptures, love God and all men, and by so doing we shall be blest with the privilege of being with Christ when he comes to set up his kingdom on the earth. My object in writing was to let you know that I am trying to serve God faithfully, and meet you in the kingdom. Let us all watch and pray, for the Lord will come suddenly, and we shall be taken in a snare unless prepared to meet him.

Portland, Oregon, Feb. 7th, 1874.

From Bro. David French.

I will pen a few lines of my experience. I have been a slave to tobacco sixty-seven years. Bro. Grant advised me to break off at once. I did so, but found it was too much for me. The first of last year I began to taper off by degrees. When this year came in I shut down, and with the help of the Lord I trust I have gained the victory. Pray for me, brethren. I hope we shall meet in the new earth, where tobacco chewers will not be known.

Obituaries.

RICE. In Lunenburg, Mass., Jan. 30th, 1874, Alfreda R., wife of Bro. Cortis N. Rice, aged thirty years.

Alfreda gave her young heart to Jesus when but a child, and bore the cross continually through life. She loved the social meetings, and contributed much to their interest by her singing, as also by exhortation and prayer. The tender tie that bound her to a kind christian husband and a sweet little girl of two years had to be severed while in the full possession of all her mental faculties; but she had grace and fortitude, for Jesus stood by her to the last. She met death understandingly, knowing that the grave could hold her only till the resurrection morning. It being her dying request, she was brought to Lowell, where her funeral was attended by Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell, with the Second Advent Church with which she retained her membership. May the affliction be blest by our heavenly Father to the spiritual good of the parents, and also the brothers and sisters, is the humble prayer of the writer.

Blessed Jesus, sustain Bro. Rice!

C. P. WHITTEN.

DAVIS. In Abington, Ct., Jan. 3d, 1874, of dropsy, Bro. James Davis, aged seventy four yrs.

Another of the veterans of 1843 has fallen. After months of great suffering he bade good bye to wife and children, admonishing them to meet him in the kingdom. We had the privilege of seeing Bro. Davis several times the last few weeks of his life, and always found his trust in the Life-giver. He realized he must rest in the grave a short time before his hope could be obtained, yet was not afraid to rest in Christ.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the dread of foes.

Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest,
Whose waking is supremely blest;
No fear, no foe shall dim that hour
Which manifests the Savior's power."

Words of comfort by the writer. H. DAVIS.

JOHNSON. In Norwich, Ct., Jan. 24th, 1874, Hattie E. Johnson, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Johnson, of Abington, Ct., aged eighteen years.

At the time of her death she was away from home, seeking health. Her sufferings were great, but borne without murmuring. She said to her weeping mother, "Weep not for me, mother; the will of the Lord be done!" Among the many friends that followed this lovely girl to her resting-place were those who within a few weeks had learned to trust in the Life-giver. They could now say truly, "Good bye, Hattie; we hope to meet you again soon beyond this vale of tears." Words of comfort spoken by the writer.

H. DAVIS.

HAYNES. In Washburn, Me., Jan. 16th, 1874, of consumption, Abbie A. Haynes, aged thirty yrs.

Sr. Haynes was a great sufferer, but she bore all with christian patience and resignation. She was a fond wife and devoted mother. Relations and friends mourn her loss, for she was beloved by all who knew her. She sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

"Sleep, dearest sister, sleep,
Death shall not hold thee long;
And in the morning thou shalt rise,
And join the blood-washed throng."

E. I. CROUSE.

MANSON. Departed this life on the 20th of Dec., 1873, Henry B. Manson, of Kittery, Me., aged seventy-two years.

He was one of our best citizens, and his long exemplary life will be remembered by many friends. It might be truly said of him that he had no enemies. He was just such a christian as the world and church needs to-day—an every day practical christian. His life was worthy of imitation. At home, with his fellow-men, and at church, he was the same. He has left all that is earthly—the old family Bible,—the book of books,—the gospel, closet, family devotion, and the church of which he was a most devoted and worthy member. As a man, he was kind and gentle; as a neighbor, obliging and sympathizing; and as a husband, faithful and affectionate. His last sickness was very distressing. Paralysis did its work in a few days. He knew but could not speak. He wanted but could not be ministered to.

A dutiful and confiding wife watched over him till the last, ready to satisfy every want and relieve every pain till death had done its work, and the spirit had returned "to God who gave it."

JOEL WILSON.

FORD. In Concord, N. H., Feb. 16th, 1874, Bro. Winthrop H. Ford, aged fifty-eight years.

He leaves to mourn his loss a companion, four children, an aged mother, and three brothers.

Again the monster death has invaded the house of God, and stricken down one of our most conscientious men. For many years Bro. Ford has been on the list of waiting ones, and has, by a consistent christian department, won the esteem of those who knew him; and we may safely say those who knew him best loved him most. Words of comfort were spoken at the funeral from John 11: 23.

A. ROSS.

WHITMORE. In Greenwood, Me., Sept. 30th, 1873, Sarah Whitmore, wife of the late Benjamin Whitmore, of Casco, aged seventy-five years.

She leaves a large family of children to mourn her loss, but they know she died with a good hope of a home in the kingdom when the sleeping saints arise to inhabit the earth restored. Funeral attended by Bro. Jesse Gay, who showed that she would rise again and bloom with immortality.

T. J. CARLE.

HUDSON. In Jamestown, Jan. 14th, 1874, of consumption, Bro. John Hudson, aged seventy-eight years.

The hope of the soon coming of Christ to raise the unconscious dead and give unto those who sleep in Jesus eternal life sustained him. A discourse was delivered by Bro. C. W. Low, of Fredonia. MRS. L. VAN VLECK.

FOSS. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Barnstead, N. H., Jan. 1st, 1873, Sister Olive A. Foss, aged twenty-six years.

She was a firm believer in the speedy coming of the Lord, and rejoiced in the hope that she would, at that time, be raised to an eternal life. [No name.

MOSES. Fell asleep in Colebrook, N. H., Dec. 17th, 1873, Eliza, wife of Willard Moses, aged seventy-two years.

Sister Moses formerly belonged to the Methodist church. She leaves a companion seventy-five years old to mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken from 1 Thess. 4: 14. U. G. LADD.

BRALEY. In Danbury, N. H., Feb. 15th, 1874, Walter E., only child of Lemuel P. and Clara J. Braley, aged one year and four months.

Your little one is sleeping
In quiet, dreamless rest;
While you are sadly weeping,
He slumbers with the blest.

With gentle, meek submission,
Still wait till Jesus comes,
Then you will clasp your darling,
Forever safe at home.

MANDANA S. KNOWLTON.

PALMER. In Brook, Newton Co., Ind., Jan. 6th, 1874, of heart disease, Sr. Hannah N. Palmer, wife of Jonathan F. Palmer, aged fifty-nine years.

D. W. DAVIS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Five persons were killed in Havana on the 12th of Feb. by the military during a riot.

Severe fighting has been going on in Biscay for several days. General Dorregary, with 25,000 insurgents, holds the heights above Somonostro. The Republicans have taken the first height. The losses are heavy.

The Carlists have taken the town of Vindrez, in Valencia.

GERMANY.

The Alsatian deputies have withdrawn from the Reichstag and returned to Strasbourg.

GERMANY'S THANKS TO ENGLAND.

The Emperor of Germany has written a letter to the Hon. Odo Russell, in which he thanks the English Government for sympathy manifested towards Germany in its struggle with the papacy, to secure liberty of conscience.

FRANCE.

PARIS, Feb. 24. Ex-President Thiers, in a letter to the Republican candidate for the Assembly in the Department of Vienna, declares that experience has rendered his conviction invincible that the Republic is the only possible Government for France.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 15, via HAVANA, Feb. 24. A terrible affair is reported to have occurred in the State of Vera Cruz. A quarrel between the townsmen of Quimixtlan and Huascaleca resulted in a fight in which seventeen persons were killed. It is reported that the infuriated Huascalecans afterward went to Quimixtlan and began an indiscriminate massacre, killing children and cutting off the breasts of women. The neighboring town of Chalchicomula has sent a detachment of militia to the scene to put a stop to the atrocities.

Buenos Ayres advices report that the Asiatic cholera is raging there, with from forty to fifty deaths per day. Fifty thousand people have fled to the rural districts, including President Sarmient.

END OF THE CHIEF OF THE SWAMP ANGELS.

New York, Feb. 24. The shooting of Steve Lowery, the notorious outlaw, took place in the Scuffletown region, on the plantation of John McNair, who has frequently suffered from the depredations of his gang. Lowery and others were carousing at a whiskey camp, where they were were joined by three farmers, who, after some conversation with the outlaw, during which he bragged of his deeds and prowess, left and returned to obtain a favorable opportunity to shoot him, which soon after occurred. They took his body to Lumbertown and gave it in charge of the Sheriff. There was much rejoicing. The body was placed on a table in the Sheriff's office. Immediately there was a commotion in the town, and the streets were soon filled with an excited crowd, all rejoicing that the last of the outlaws was killed. The body was perfectly riddled with bullets and buckshot. The head was perforated in several places, and there were three large wounds in the heart, any one of which would have proved fatal. The outlaw was armed to the teeth, being found on his person when killed a Henry rifle, three pistols and a knife with a blade about twelve inches in length. He was twenty-eight or twenty-nine years of age. He is said to have been the most cowardly, and at the same time the most treacherous and vindictive of them all.

MATTERS in Lincoln County, New Mexico, are getting to be as bad as they are here in New England. Late despatches state that seven murders have taken place in that single county within ten day's time. Large numbers of farmers and cattle raisers are leaving the section, and according to present prospects there will be a general exodus of the entire agricultural population with the coming on of spring. The desperadoes are well known, and do their work openly. It strikes us that a portion of the force now engaged in raiding the Indians, might be let loose for a time in Lincoln county to advantage.

Louisville, Feb. 23. N. M. Eghart has been arrested for poisoning his wife, and Henry Bohannon for killing James Wright.

Newcastle, Del., Feb. 25. About one o'clock, this morning, Israel Ridings, night warden at the jail in this place, hearing a noise in the yard, opened the door, when he was immediately seized by a gang of a dozen men, who gagged and handcuffed him, tied his feet and threw him into a coal hole. One of the gang threatened the warden's life with a knife, but another man, known as "Big Frank," interfered. The men got over the wall by two short ladders, tied together, which they brought with them. They carried away a prisoner named E. Frazier, who was under a life sentence for the murder of Allison.

CHICAGO has had a terrible experience with mad dogs. Two of these rabid creatures rushed through different parts of the city at about seven o'clock, Friday morning, biting every one that came in their way. No less than seventeen persons and sixty dogs were bitten by these animals, one of them having planted its fangs in the flesh of twelve persons and of nearly forty dogs in the two hours before it was shot by the police, who were in pursuit of it.

ELDER H. K. FLAGG of Savoy, Mass., has accepted a call from the Advent Society in Rutland to become their pastor, and has entered upon his labors. Meetings will be held every Sunday hereafter. The chapel has been repainted and finished inside. All are invited to attend the meetings. Seats free.

At New York. Loss $45,000.

At Stamford, Mass. Loss $10,000.

In Brief.

— One of the street fights formerly so common in California, took place in Watsonville a day or two since. Two men met, fired and both were killed.

— William Pierce, of Claremont, N. H., was killed in a grist mill at that place, Thursday. He was thirty-five years old.

— 600,000 lbs. of horse flesh was consumed last year in Paris.

— The Commissary General of the army asks that tobacco be issued to the soldiers as rations.

— The greatest depth of the Pacific Ocean between California and China is about two and one-half miles.

Notices.

ALTON BAY.—The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet at the Crisis Office, Boston, Mass., Monday, March 30th, 11 o'clock A. M. J. COUCH, Chairman.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.—The Campmeeting at Alton Bay will commence Aug. 22nd, and hold over Sabbath, Aug. 30th. J. COUCH.

MISSION TENT.—There has been a call for subscriptions to furnish a Mission Tent. The old Mission and the Mass. Conference Tent have both been worn out in the service. The time will soon come for Tent meetings, which is one of the best, if not the very best way to reach the people. The cause demands double the sacrifice and effort to enlighten and save that we are making. Shall we want for a Tent? Shall we want means and men to make an onward movement to save men by pulling them out of the fire of the last day? Brethren, help us to a Tent.

L. BOUTELL.

THE YEARLY CONFERENCE.—Where shall it be? It is the Annual Meeting of the Mass. Conference. We desire the largest gathering we have ever had. The times demand it. Our interests call for it. The first week in April is the time for it. Who will make preparation for a large meeting and a great blessing? Who? L. BOUTELL.

THE Western District of the New York A. C. Conference will meet Friday evening, March 6th, with the church in Springwater, and continue over the Sabbath. We hope to see a good delegation from the Dist. Remember the quarterly collections.

W. J. HOBBS, Pres.
A. P. MOORE, Sec.

CONFERENCE.—The Lord willing, there will be a Conference held at Melvin Village, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, March 4th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Elder A. Ross, and others, are expected to preach the Word. A general invitation is extended to all, to come over and help us. Come, Brn. and Srs., in the name of Israel's God. Come with the armor on, to labor for the salvation of the perishing. Rally once more to the "old battle ground" at Melvin. Sinner! the invitation is extended to you. Come and go with us! Come, to Jesus! "Now is the accepted time. Behold now is the day of salvation." T. W. PIPER.

THE next Quarterly Meeting of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York will be held with the church at South Creek, Bradford Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, March 6th, to continue over the following Sunday. Those coming by railroad will leave the cars at Gillett's Station, twelve miles south of Elmira, on the Northern Central Railroad. Trains leave Elmira for the south at 5 40 A. M. and 2.40 P. M. that stop at Gillett's. Trains from the south stop there at 11.15 A. M. and 10 P. M. Brethren and sisters in Christ, come to this meeting with your hearts filled with the love of God, and a willing mind to work for the salvation of the perishing. Friends will meet you at the station.

E. C. COWLES, Pres.
J. W. TAYLOR, Sec.

THE first Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church in Fairfield, Huron Co., Ohio, will commence on Saturday, March 7th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all the lovers of Jesus in the surrounding country to be present and take part in the exercises. Also a special invitation is given to the church in Norwalk, with their pastor, to unite with us on this occasion.

Per order of the church, E. M'CULLOCH, Pastor.

KANSAS CONFERENCE.—The Annual Session of the Advent Christian Conference of Kansas will be held, the Lord willing, at Melvern, Osage Co., Kan., commencing Friday, May 15th, 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the following Lord's day, or as long as the brethren may determine.

Those coming by rail from the North will stop at Arvonia Station, and those from the South at Burlington, where teams will be in readiness to convey them to the ground where the Mission Tent will be pitched, if they write to Eld. J. C. Smith, Arvonia, Osage Co., Kan., in time. Reports from the churches should be made up to and including the 18th of April, 1874 (By-laws, Art. 8, Sec. 1), and forwarded by mail to the Secretary, care of Eld. Smith as above, or sent with the delegates. Let all who "wait for the Lord" and are "looking for that blessed hope" lay aside their secular affairs, and join with the "children of God" in their yearly feast of fat things. By order of the Directors,

AMOS SANFORD, Secretary.

THE next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held in Rome, Town House, commencing Thursday evening, March 19th, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and labor with us for the upbuilding of the church and the salvation of sinners; also it is hoped our preaching brethren will make an effort to be at this meeting. Provision will be made for all, both man and beast. Those coming from abroad will call on David Watson, N. P. Martin, Amaziah Tracy, John Fletcher, and others. For the church,

H. B. SEVEY.
W. A. KNIGHT, Sec.

DEDICATION.—The new Advent Chapel in Mercer, Me., will be dedicated on Sunday, March 15th, 10½ o'clock A. M. Sermon by Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell. Other preaching brethren will be present. Meetings will be continued as long as the Lord may direct. Provision will be made for all who may come to work for the Lord.

In behalf of the brethren, THOMAS RINES.

I EXPECT to visit Rockbridge, Ohio, Hocking Co., if the Lord will, and commence meetings on Wednesday evening, March 25th, and continue one week. FRANK BURR, Pastor.

ELD. S. S. MOONEY is to preach in Kensington, N. H., once in two weeks until further notice, commencing March 8th.

WILL the preaching brethren who are passing through Newark, N. J., give us a call? Please drop a note previous, to prevent any conflict, either to Bro. G. W. Libby, 42 Pennington St., or to me, 120 Bank St. WM. SHEPHERD, Sec.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Wishing to move our office on the first of May next, to less expensive rooms, and having several thousand back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER on hand, which we do not wish to move, we make the following liberal offers:—

We will send one or more copies of back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER in neat wrappers post-paid, to any address for two cents per copy. This is a small part of the cost; for we have to pay postage, find wrappers, and hire them wrapped and mailed; but we believe great good can be done if each of our readers will send us ten to fifty addresses of persons who they think would be benefitted by receiving a copy of the BIBLE BANNER, enclosing two cents for each address. A friend of ours called at this office a few months since, and gave us a score or two of addresses, with two or three cents per copy for postage, etc., and we have been greatly surprised at the result. Unfortunately, however, in a financial point of view, for us, this brother selected a large number of ministers of the gospel, many of whom accepted our "year-free" offer. Hence we ask our readers to send us a large proportion of those who will be likely to subscribe. Reader, if you respond, please do so at once, and address,

THE BIBLE BANNER,

RE-PRINTED
ELDER S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's works, which have been out of print some time, so that we have not been able to fill orders, are now published, and we can supply as follows:—

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun, Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena. Illustrated with cuts. 216 pp. 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

Illustrated with cuts. 25 cts.

THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL.

This is a work of history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts. AG'T.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. AG'T.

A NEW BOOK.
"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul.—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

CONSECRATION.

IDA AMLBOURN.

Unto thee, my Lord and Savior,
  I would consecrate my heart;
Long the world I loved and worshiped,
  Giving thee the smaller part.
I have kept the olden idols
  Seated high upon the throne,
When my heart should be a temple,
  But for thee, my Lord, alone.

I have tried to serve two masters,—
  What a bitter, slavish task!
Henceforth Satan's rule be ended,
  Only thee, my Lord, I ask.
Dead be all sins, old connections,
  Every tie that bindeth me;
Perish all ye dreams of honor,
  Christ, alone, my life can be.

Long the Spirit's voice I slighted,
  Now I listen to the call;
Now I'll follow thee, my Savior,
  Thou wilt be my all in all.
Past is all the wild commotion
  That had reigned within my breast;
Every fear and doubt hath vanished,
  For the Lord hath spoken rest.

Lead me in the path thou choosest;
  Let my will be lost in thine;
Give thou unto me the blessings,
  Rich, unspeakable, divine.
When to gather all thy jewels,
  In thy glory thou dost come,
Ah! then give me in thy presence
  An eternal, happy home.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

W. KELLAWAY.

A MEETING OF SYMPATHY WITH GERMANY.

Yesterday afternoon a large meeting was held in St. James' Hall to express sympathy with Germany against Ultramontane policy. Sir John Murray presided, and was supported by seven lords, two Berlin doctors of divinity, and many clergymen, members of parliament, and laymen. The hall was full. Earl Russell, who was to have taken the chair, was absent through physical indisposition, but wrote a note saying he was in "complete sympathy" with the object of the meeting. The chairman in his speech said the object was two-fold: (1) to express sympathy with Germany in her struggle against Ultramontanism; and (2) to "call upon our beloved country to awake from her lethargic slumbers, and to confront with boldness the subtle policy of Ultramontanism." The Rev. G. R. Badenoch was the next speaker. As Hon. Secretary, he announced that both the Archbishops of York and Canterbury were anti-Ultramontane. Dukes had written their approval of the Protestant meeting of sympathy. Three hundred and thirty-seven letters had been received from members of Parliament, a large number from provincial mayors, and twelve hundred from deans, archdeacons, clergymen, and ministers of various Protestant denominations scattered throughout England. Deputations also were present from many of the large English towns, and visitors from Canada and the United States. So the meeting was a thoroughly national gathering. The Dean of Canterbury then moved the first resolution, as follows: "That this meeting desires to express to his Majesty the German Emperor a deep sense of its admiration for his Majesty's letter to the Pope, bearing date September 3d, 1873." This he followed with appropriate remarks. Sir Thomas Chambers seconded the resolution, and the Rev. Dr. Jobson supported it. The second resolution was put by Mr. Whittle, "an old Catholic":—"That this meeting unreservedly acknowledges it to be the duty and right of nations to uphold civil and religious liberty, and therefore deeply sympathizes with the people of Germany in their determination to resist the policy of the Ultramontane portion of the Church of Rome." Mr. Newdegate, M. P., seconded the resolution. He said he had been in the British Parliament for thirty years, and "he had seen the Jesuit power control and coerce the House of Commons, defy the forms of the House, and insult the speaker." Sir Robert Peel moved the third resolution—"That the Chairman, in the name of the meeting, be requested to communicate these resolutions to His Majesty the German Emperor, and to the German people." Colonel M'Donald seconded the resolution; and after a vote of thanks to the Chairman, the singing of the National Anthem, and the Benediction, the meeting dispersed.

In the evening another meeting was held, in which a similar firm stand was taken against the encroachments of Rome.

During the progress of the meeting telegrams were sent to and fro between Germany and England expressive of the most reciprocal of feelings. The Hall will only hold three thousand people, and some idea of the spirited interest of English Protestants may be learned when it is known that more than ten thousand tickets of admission were applied for by letters.

THE WEEKLY PAPER FOR ENGLAND.

Recurring to the new religious paper for England proposed in my last letter, I would say I am more than ever convinced that the time has arrived for this engine to be used with all the force of truth for the best dear cause. The spirit of inquiry is general. It is widespread as the United Kingdom. And now, while men are inquiring, is the time to present to them the teachings of the Oracles of God. I fear if we do not take advantage of this waking up, many will fall into the usual indifference, and an apathy like to the past; while others will be hooked by the pernicious bait of error and infidelity. Our responsibility is most weighty now. Let all the Advent preachers of the United States send me their names and addresses for a copy free (if published, which I expect will be the case), and get four or five subscribers each at $3.00 per year per copy, post-free, and the paper will be commenced. This will do for an appointment. Now, ministers of the Word, let me hear from you. Address your letters to W. Kellaway, 78 Newgate St., London, England.

SPREAD OF THE TRUTH IN ENGLAND.

The most encouraging accounts are coming to hand from various parts. A few days ago a gentleman called at the Repository. He asked for a copy of Prof. Ives' Bible Doctrine of the Soul. It was fetched and given to him. He said substantially,—"I came across this book a few days ago and read it. I was then an infidel. I could not believe in an everlastingly-torturing God. But when I read this book I saw the Bible did not teach the doctrine. I am now reconciled to the God of the Bible." Prof. Ives has ordered two thousand of his work, and given them away mostly to ministers. A copy was presented by a brother to a Congregational minister of Weymouth, who said, "The man who wrote that book must have been out of his mind." "Yes," said the elder calmly and significantly, "he was out of his mind, and in God's mind." There is a great move on the Continent, in Switzerland and in France, in reformation on these points, and I am promised by a dear friend almost immediately an authentic account of the facts.

A SPLIT AMONG THE CHRISTADELPHIANS.

The Christadelphians, alias Thomasites, well known to you in America by the latter name, have split on the nature of Christ,—the Christadelphian body proper holding that Christ was sinful flesh, and was born subject to the Adamic penalty. The seceders, at whose head is Mr. Edward Turney, of Nottingham, properly oppose, as I think, this horrible doctrine, on the ground that if Christ's life was forfeit to sin and death, then he had no life to give for the redemption of the race. The division has gone so far as to see each holding different meetings and combatting each other's belief. In the come-outers there is a sign of greater liberality on difficult points of faith. They do not consign your correspondent to hell—as did the Christadelphians—for sincere belief in a personal devil, founded as he conceives on divine testimony. The split though in one sense to be deplored, is yet in another a token of good.

THE SECOND DEATH.

G. W. STETSON.

On Rev. 20:14, Dr. Adam Clark says, "The first death consisted in the separation of the soul from the body for a season; the second death in the separation of body and soul from God forever. The first death is that from which there may be a resurrection; the second death is that from which there is no recovery. By the first, the body is destroyed during time; by the second, body and soul are destroyed through eternity."

Now if we take the above comment as the Doctor has worded and italicised it, and apply the same rule of exegesis to the second as to the first member of the sentence, we shall have good sound Bible doctrine and a correct theology. In the first death "the body was destroyed," i. e., the specific thing was completely put out of existence, nothing but the primary elements of which it was composed, and to which it was reduced, and returned; remained. There is no good reason for saying that the same words used in the same way, when applied by the same rule, do not have the same signification, and will to the soul, as to the body, in the second case, produce the same or like results, and there is no valid authority for changing the rule, except the unnatural use of language in order to teach the traditions of men, instead of the commandments of God.

Philosophy has done, and continues to do more in forming theological opinions, and religious sentiments as promulgated in the world, than does the Word of the living God. What a pity! James says, "There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy."

DID CHRIST MAKE THE WORLD?

T. M. PREBLE.

NUMBER FOUR.

"The Four Gospels, Translated from the Greek Text of Tischendorf," by Nathaniel Smith Folsom, renders John 1:1-3:—"In (the) beginning was the Word. This was in (the) beginning with God. All things through it arose into being, and without it arose not even one thing which has arisen. In it is life," etc. Extracts from his "Notes" on this passage read as follows:—

"The WORD: who or what is it? The first impression on most readers of the common version, and indeed of the Greek original, is, that the writer seems to mean a person; and this interpretation has in its favor many and great names, and the almost universal consent of the church, both of men and women, who insist on it as one of the essential truths of Christianity, and to whom the translator has again and again referred. But independently of the vast difficulty of adjusting such an interpretation to the teachings of the Scriptures elsewhere, and even of the reason itself, respecting the divine nature and works, there does not fail to occur, to every one who allows himself to reflect on the subject, a suggestion whether 'the Word' may not be, and is not really, here personified? This suggestion has always become conviction in the experience of the translator, whenever he has thoroughly considered the passage; and he has translated accordingly (p. 405). . . . . We find in the eighth chapter of the Book of Proverbs a passage in which WISDOM is presented very much as John speaks of 'the Word': 'Jehovah possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. . . I was by him as a master-builder [or, foster-child], and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him.' So very striking is the resemblance, that many, interpreting 'the Word' as a person, insist that the same Being is here described under the appellation of WISDOM. But Professor Thaluck, quoting the view to which Lucke assents, which is now most commonly entertained, and is in his own judgment the true one, considers it merely a personification. Any other treatment detaches it arbitrarily from its connection (p. 406). . . . .

"The 'Word' as personification of the creative power of God; of 'the invisible things of Him' which 'became clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and godhead.' Rom. 1:20. The 'eternal power and godhead,' expressed themselves as through the Word or Utterance of God. AND THE WORD WAS WITH GOD: the same sort of personification previously quoted from Proverbs and other writings. AND GOD WAS THE WORD: the Evangelist, having used a poetic figure of speech, etc. (p. 409) . . . . . 'God was the Word' in this expression of himself through the creation,—with no articulate speech indeed, no audible language, except as God was the Voice which the works themselves still echo in the ear of man. 'God was the Word' in that form of manifestation and working in which the world came into being. 'God was the Word' in mode of speech like that adopted by another writer of the N. T., of the same meditative habits with John—'Our God is a consuming fire' (Heb. 12:29); with however no article attached in the Greek to the predicate of this last sentence, because not pointing out a thing before specified, as in John, and with no omission of the article before the subject, as was in John,—an omission which occurs as well in the best classic Greek authors as in the N. T., where no doubt is reasonably left in the mind of the reader whether the object spoken of is definite or indefinite (Winer, p. 119; and comp. John 1:18, where there is no article in Greek before the word God).

"For the purpose, however, of defending the personification of 'the Word,' it makes no difference at all whether 'the Word' or 'God' be made the predicate; whether the emphatic stress be on 'God,' or 'was,' or 'the Word.' If one reads, AND THE WORD WAS GOD, then it is to be said that by 'the Word' thus personified the Evangelist meant God, and no other person, or hypostasis, or distinction. It was God himself. So far as verbal authority may be required for making 'God' the predicate, John 4:24 may be quoted, as it is by Alford. For making 'the Word' the predicate, Heb. 12:29 is sufficient."

EDUCATIONAL PREJUDICE.

D. CAMPBELL.

I was much pleased with the editorial in the Crisis for Jan. 28th, under the head of the "Powers of Prejudice." With your consent, I would like to amplify the subject by applying it to the great parallel between the closing age of the Jewish church and nation, and the closing age of the Gentile church and the nations of earth. Prejudice and preconceived opinions was, and is, indeed a power in the destiny of each.

Prejudice is chiefly a matter of education, more or less honestly acquired; but always a power for good or for evil. In the application of it in the cases I am about to consider, it is an evil power, and only evil. In the closing of the Jewish age and the closing of the present age we find the analogy is perfect.

I will dwell a moment on the great cause, which, when misunderstood gives the power to this prejudice. It is the same in both examples—viz., the aspect of the coming of Christ. To the Jews, the sufferings of Christ were overlooked, and their eye was fixed on his glory to follow. To the Gentiles, the matter of the sufferings of Christ, is alone the object in view, while the glory to follow is ignored entirely, so far as its personal manifestation is concerned.

The Jewish church and nation in their prejudice, fell on that rock and were broken, while on this closing Gentile age, church, and nation, that "rock will fall, and grind them to powder." To judge of the weight of responsibility in these two contrasted cases, we have only to consider all that the prophets wrote concerning Christ; beginning with Moses, the Psalms, and all the prophets. They numbered about forty, all of which wrote of Christ, except Jonah. Only six of them spake of the sufferings of Christ in all their utterances, which was very near one hundred; while all (with the one exception) wrote of the glorious acts and incidents, amounting to one thousand passages.

How easy for the Jews in their blindness and prejudice, to overlook the literal import of one hundred utterances of six of their prophets, as they were indeed the most difficult to be understood in a literal sense; while "all that the prophets wrote concerning Christ," and his work, in one thousand passages were most clearly literal in their application. But for this prejudice, the Jews would have accepted Christ in his humility; like Mary, Simeon, and Anna. Mary was unable to reconcile this humility with the promise of his "coming in great glory," to "sit on the throne of David his father;" so she waited for further explanation, "and pondered" all these seeming contradictions "in her heart."

Now please contrast this with the present age. The fulfillment of the one hundred Scriptures spoken by six of the prophets requires no faith to believe, because the literal facts are all recorded in history; but it does require faith to believe one thousand Scriptures will be as literally fulfilled in the future. If the Jews disbelieve in the literal fulfillment of the one hundred Scriptures, and God cast them off, where will the unbelievers of this day be found, who are tenfold more guilty of distrust in God than were the former?

It is preconceived opinion and prejudice, which lies at the foundation of the infidelity which is now "coming in like a flood." We live in "the last days" foretold, by the apostle—"perilous times"—when men "leave the Word of God, and have turned unto fables." The "lively oracles of God" are treated as of no more worth than the oracles of the heathen, which were couched in such obscure and equivocal language, as to allow any cunning worshipper to accommodate the event to the prediction.

Were I allowed to suggest a rule for the interpretation of unfulfilled prophecy, I would say, that no prophecy has been fulfilled until the fact is as undisputable as history, or so plainly fulfilled that no two unprejudiced minds could hold two different opinions in regard to it. We have what is better than such a rule. We have an infallible key to unlock all the mystery of unfulfilled prophecy. We may each and every one of us come into possession of this key. Find out how each of the hundred Scriptures relating to the first advent of Christ was fulfilled, and then we know (no longer guess) how one thousand will be fulfilled, when Christ returns "with power and great glory."

HAVERHILL, MASS.

It is certainly cheering while amid the darkness and wickedness of the earth, where people are hating and destroying one another, to know that the sweet Spirit of Christ is still dwelling among us.

Times of refreshing, and deep interest are being known in our city. The power of the Holy Ghost is being felt in Haverhill. Although wickedness is abounding in the earth, yet the grace of God appears, and brings salvation to many hearts. Truly, the world is ripening for the great harvest. Saints are preparing themselves for the great and glorious day of translation; while on the other hand many are growing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Yet the Spirit of Jesus is doing a great work on the earth; many are feeling their true condition without Christ, and are realizing the necessity of turning from their sinful paths, and walking in the ways of righteousness and truth. For several weeks Bro. C. J. Fowler has been laboring among the people of this city, aided by ministers of the different churches. They are working together for the salvation of the perishing around them.

When the people of God are united, great good can be accomplished. So we find it here. Many who were once in darkness, walking in paths of sin, away, far away from God, without hope in the world, are now rejoicing in the glorious light of the gospel. They have been brought near to Christ, and are happy in his service.

The good work is still advancing, and we expect many more will be brought into the fold of Jesus. God has been pleased to make known here the power of his Holy Spirit, and we have witnessed wonderful manifestations of it. May this good work spread, and reach to distant places. Oh, may the people of God work with all their might while the day lasts, for the night is coming when no man can work.

> "A soul on life's ocean may perish,
> And sink 'neath the waves, but for you."

While sinners are going down to destruction shall not the people of Christ be in earnest to save them? What is your mission, my brother? O what is your mission, my sister? There are none so small but may do some good. Those who are Christ's should let their light shine; for darkness surrounds, and many a poor soul may stumble and fall if your lamp is not brightly burning.

When Christ was on the earth, he went about from place to place doing good, preaching in their synagogues, among any who would listen to his teachings. And wherever he was, he found those who heard him gladly, and received his words into good and honest hearts. May we imitate the example of our Savior, and though feeble, let us do all we can. We can send earnest prayers to God's throne for those who know not the Lord, if we cannot explain to them the way of God so perfectly as others. Let us all be faithful laborers, and receive at the last the reward.

Haverhill, Mass. MARY V. SALTMARSH.

NEVER.

> "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Our Father said that precious word,
  And I will trust it ever;
"I'll never leave thee nor forsake,"
  No, "never—never—never."

'Twas thrice repeated by our Lord,
  That word so blessed ever;
Oh, I'm so sure it cannot fail,
  That "never—never—never."

Though all my cherished joys depart,
  And from loved ones I sever,
My loving Father will not leave,
  No, "never—never—never."

So strong his love, so rich his grace
  To help each weak endeavor;
And when I fail he does not chide,
  Nor frown on me, no, "never."

My failures and infirmities
  Oft make me weep, but ever
He sweetly whispers, "I forgive,"
  "Fear not, I'll leave thee never."

I've placed my feeble hand in his;
  No power from him can sever
While his strong hand is holding me;
  No, "never—never—never."

MY EXPERIENCE.

T. L. WAUGH.

Thinking it may be for the glory of God and the encouragement of others who are seeking for the fulness it is their privilege to enjoy, I write these few lines. I know where many stand,—wishing to be delivered from inbred sin, desiring to obtain the rest of perfect love which all may possess. But how to obtain it is the question, and yet it seems easy. It is easy to understand when we fully realize it is only through faith we can receive the blessing.

Oh! how long I stumbled through ignorance of the true way; and yet I thought I was going right. I was oppressed with fears and doubts, even though I felt my trust was in God. But I was partly trusting in my good works; I resolved and re-resolved to be and do better; determined to avoid every known sin, expecting that I should thus be accepted of God. I tried hard to believe, expecting if I was strict in the observance of religious duties, my faith and works together would avail to save me. Thus I lived for years, sometimes entertaining hope, then almost discouraged and ready to despair. No sooner had I made a resolution than I was tempted to break it, and I found I was helpless to save myself. I had many precious seasons in my christian experience, but they were not lasting. Often did I sigh for a state where I should be kept in the loving embrace of Jesus. I was conscious there were those who were living in this sweet rest of faith, but it was suggested to me, It is not for you; you are not in a condition to receive such a blessing. Thus I listened to the voice of the tempter who did all in his power to discourage me.

But I have learned an important lesson. I have seen that I must come just as I am by simple faith, and faith alone in the merits of Christ. I have ceased trying to do something to be in a position where I thought God would accept me. I have done making resolutions, as they can accomplish nothing. I said, "Lord take me as I am, I cannot save myself. I give up all into thy hands." When I did this I felt a power within. I saw the treacherous snare I had been in. I praise God with all my heart that he has delivered me through faith and trust in him. What a sweet satisfaction I find in this living by faith and not by feeling. When the heart is pure, the life will be pure. Jesus is precious; yes, "precious name! Oh how sweet; hope of earth, and joy of heaven." I feel his love in my heart while I write. I am wholly his; soul, body, and spirit. His blood I trust cleanses me now from all sin. Glory be to God for his wondrous love to poor unworthy me! I am living a life of faith upon the Son of God. Oh, blessed thought that soon we shall see him again! I long to be where the loving Jesus is. I am indeed a pilgrim and a stranger here, seeking a better country, even a heavenly. When I think the time is so near my heart leaps with joy at the thought. I want to share in those glories that await the faithful. The loved ones that now sleep in Jesus I expect soon to see. The world has no charms for me. I have had a view by faith of that land of pure delight where saints immortal reign. I see by faith those lovely plains of Paradise. I hear those heavenly harpings of the blest where all forever bloom in immortal youth and beauty. Oh, who would not be a christian in view of these things? I can say that "old things have passed away." I am walking "in newness of life."

Dear ones who love Jesus, be faithful. Live above the world while in it,—in the sunshine of heaven. Below, the storms may rage. We may be above them all. Let temptations come, we are safe in Jesus. I find it easy to live for God when all is wholly consecrated. He keeps me from falling while I trust in him. I feel as we sometimes sing,—

> "Take my heart, oh Father take it,
> Make and keep it all thine own;
> Let thy Spirit melt and break it,
> Turn to flesh this heart of stone."

CHURCH REGULATIONS.

EAST BOSTON, MASS., MAY 2ND, A. D. 1871.

We whose names are subjoined unite as a church of Christ, to be called the Second Advent Christian Church, in East Boston, and agree to be governed by the following regulations.

Article 1. That we will advocate and maintain all the doctrine of the Bible that is plainly and positively set forth therein, either in promise or precept, especially that which relates to our present and eternal salvation.

Article 2. That we will not advocate or promulgate or cause to be promulgated, any doctrine that is not plainly and positively set forth in the Word of God, and which has, or shall have, a tendency to separate the flock of Christ.

Article 3. That we will maintain the ordinances of God's house (namely, baptism and the Lord's supper), as often as shall be for the glory of God, and the benefit of the church.

Article 4. That we will hold ourselves liable to be disciplined by the rules and principles of Christ and his apostles as contained in the New Testament.

Article 5. That any person shall be admitted to membership of this church, who loves God and keeps his commandments.

OFFICERS OF THE CHURCH.

Article 1. There shall be one Elder, whose duty it shall be to take the oversight of the flock, to be instant in season, and out of season, to reprove, and rebuke, and exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine.

Article 2. There shall be one or two Deacons, whose duty it shall be to attend to the communion service, make all due preparation in case of baptism, look after the wants of the poor, and any other duties generally imposed on such officers.

Article 3. There shall be three Trustees, whose duty it shall be to take care of all the financial affairs of the church, such as securing a place of worship, taking care of all the property of the church, keeping a strict account of all monies received, and shall disburse the same as shall be for the best good of the church and the cause of Christ, making a correct report of all their doings as connected with the church semi-annually.

Article 4. There shall be a Clerk or Secretary, whose duty it shall be to keep a correct record of all the doings of the church at all their meetings for business, transcribing the same as well as the names of all the members of the church in a book kept for that purpose, and shall make a report of the same to the church, when called upon to do so.

BY LAWS.

Article 1, Meeting for public worship shall be at such times as shall be thought most convenient, and we will endeavor to conduct the exercises of such meetings as shall be for the edification of all present.

Article 2. Meetings for business shall be at such times as shall be thought necessary, and such meetings shall be subject to the call of the Trustees at the request of six members of the church.

Article 3, The officers of the church shall be chosen by ballot, and shall retain their office as long as they maintain a good christian character and violate none of the foregoing regulations.

Article 4. These regulations may be altered or amended at any regular meeting of the church by a two-thirds vote of the church.

[We omit the names.

THE END AT HAND.

WM. D. TUCKER.

> "But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer."—1 Peter 4:7.

What is meant by the end of all things? It is the end of this world or age. It is the end of all unrighteousness and perversity against God's will; the end of pain, death, sickness, sorrow and the grave; the end of all that is corruptible and carnal; the end of everything that is not pleasing in the eyes of the Lord. This thrice glorious "end," the apostle tells us, "is at hand." Christ has given us many signs to mark its advent. Prophets have, for many centuries foretold that it should come; and we live to-day at the time near its fulfillment. Never before, in the annals of this world's history, was there a time so solemn as the present. Truly

> "We are living, we are dwelling
> In a grand and awful time;
> In an age on ages telling—
> To be living is sublime."

And though the Word has been preached to the people again and again, yet they, like the antedeluvians live on unconscious that the time when all things shall pass away and all things become new is at hand. This groaning old earth will roll on but a little longer ere it will be "dissolved with fervent heat; and the works that are therein shall be burned up." "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter 3:10, 13.

O, will it not be a glorious change? A new earth free from all evil! "And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it and his servants shall serve him. And they shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 22:3-6. But we cannot, unless we are true followers of Christ while we live here, dwell with him in the new earth, when he shall set up his everlasting kingdom. There are certain conditions laid down for us in his Word, and if we comply with these, we shall obtain the reward.

Reader, are you ready to welcome Jesus when he comes in "the clouds of heaven with power and great glory?" Are you ready for "the end of all things" to take place? and do you joy in the thought of all things becoming new? If you are not, I admonish you to get ready before that day overtakes you unawares.

THERE is a difference between having truth on our side and being on the side of truth.

TRUTH ALWAYS IN HARMONY.

J. R. CLARK.

Truth is always in harmony, but men's opinions are often discordant. That view of revelation which makes harmony must be the correct one. The revelation that God has given to man is harmonious in all its parts; otherwise all would be attended with mystery and darkness. A wrong interpretation of God's Word will produce discord. How very important then it is that we understand the Word of God correctly. In order to this we must be in possession of the same Spirit that actuated the persons who wrote it; which will enable us to divide the Word of God correctly. It is not right to magnify one part to the neglect, or denial of the other part.

We may contemplate this subject in relation to the prophecies and prophetic periods, about which there is such a diversity of opinions. There is but one correct view to be received, there being but one revealed; and no one should be governed by the various fancies of men. If the Scriptures do not explain the prophecies, you need not expect to arrive at a correct understanding of them. One man's explanation may not be much in any better than another's, and if the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch together.

The first, and most important object is to start right; unless you do, the whole thing will prove a failure, and you will remain in the dark. Daniel does not conflict with John the Revelator, and Jesus Christ is in harmony with the prophets. Seeing that God's Word is harmonious in all its parts, why is it that men differ so widely concerning it? The fault must be in the men, and not in the Word. Take the term Sanctuary as brought to view in the book of Daniel, there are some five different views taken of this term, but there can be but one correct one. Why cannot all arrive at the same conclusion—the correct one? as the book itself explains what the sanctuary is, and where located. (Dan. 9) So of the Daily Sacrifice, brought to view in this same book, and of the host. Every thing should bend to the Bible, and when your theory accords with that unerring Word depend upon it, you are correct. We should not think we now posses all knowledge, and that we understand all that is to be known, and that there is nothing more for us to learn. We have only just begun to learn. The wisest are liable to be mistaken. The Holy Spirit has made the revelations, and reveals the deep things of God.

THE LEGACY.

G. B. MERRILL.

> "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you."

Jesus knows what his people need. His life on earth was a life of trial, trouble, and grief. He was the "man of sorrows!" Yet, in the midst of all he enjoyed peace, and his repose in his Father's love was perfect. When all was confusion and strife without, he had peace within. And when he departed out of this world, to go unto his Father, he left us this legacy,—"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." Our souls may be peaceful, let our outward circumstances be what they may. By the exercise of faith in Jesus, by staying the mind on him, and by acquiescing in his will we shall have peace. So it is written, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee."

My soul, I charge thee to cast every trial, every care on Jesus. Submit to his will, nay, prefer his will to thine own. Let his Word be thy rule and comfort; let the glory of Jesus be thine aim and object; and let the bequest of Jesus be taken to the throne of grace, that it may be paid thee by his heavenly Father. Pray for holy tranquility of mind amid the storms of time, and expect an inward calm of spirit, both in life and at death. Pray in faith and the "peace" will be given thee. The Savior, who left thee this legacy on earth, lives in heaven to see it paid to all applicants. Therefore, present it in confidence, expect to receive it, and you shall enjoy it. "We that believe do enter into rest.

Worcester, Mass.

I HEARD of a sanctimonious professor who went to a horse-race. His minister remonstrated with him, and he said, he only went to see the vanity of it. The good man replied, "the Scripture says, 'turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity.'"—Rowland Hill.

HOME AND HEALTH.

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL.

Now and then one speaks out on the horrid effects of intoxicating liquors upon the human system, but the mass of drinkers think more of gratifying a depraved appetite, than of the enjoyment of good health, comfort, and the pleasures of a happy family, which is now made miserable by the rum demon. Truly, man is his own worst enemy. The following is worthy of consideration by all who use alcoholic drinks:—

M. G.

"Rev. Jabez Walker has recently been lecturing on temperance in Sacramento, Cal., taking the same ground occupied by Dr. A. E. Clarke, of San Jose, that alcohol does not sustain the body, but exhausts it. If it acts as a temporary stimulus, it does so by destroying its power. He said the highest state of health is only to be obtained by total abstinence. Professor Liebig claimed that there is nothing in alcohol capable of forming any part of the body, but that it is respiratory food—that it produced animal heat, and hence we should not entirely discard it. This is a strange conclusion. If we want animal heat it is a very foolish thing to swallow alcohol to create it, as it produces very little heat, and awful ravages on all the organs of the body. You can get double the amount of heat from a small amount of fatty matter that you can from a quart of alcohol, and not be injured bodily.

Eminent Arctic travelers claim that alcoholic liquors are worse than useless in expeditions to the far, cold north, and that a cup of coffee is much more effective for good in producing warmth than alchol. Experiments made by Lallemand, Perrin, and Duroy prove that not a single drop of alcohol is retained in the system, but that it is all thrown out—by the breath, through the skin, or in the urine. Not a drop of it is digested or decomposed, but all that is swallowed is thrown out as pure as it was when it left the bottle. Referring to the idea prevalling that alcohol has medicinal properties, he said it must be beaten out of people's heads. There is no medicinal property in it, and he condemned the doctors who advocated its use as a medicine. The medical profession are in error when they prescribe its use. As they have been in error before, there is no reason why they are not wrong now. He referred to the "bleeding cure" that was so popular twenty years ago, and that must have been wrong, else the doctors would not have abandoned it."

FEMALE DRESS REFORM.—An actual movement has been incorporated in Boston and New York to simplify woman's dress. Of course, the dry goods dealers and modistes have not been consulted in connection with the movement, and they exclaim as with one voice, "What a horrid idea!" It is proposed simply to make woman's dress less extravagant, more artistic and more in conformity with physical laws and needs. The job is really a big one, for, really, what is woman without extravagant dress and the follower of fashions well calculalated to squeeze her into a premature grave. A meeting of one hundred ladies was held in this city last week for the purpose of effecting a radical change in woman's clothes. These women were not mothers who preside exclusively over the household, but they were "literary" women who had just discovered that the ill health of their sex generally is attributable to the style of dress. From the head, with its weight of false hair, to the feet, with narrow-soled, high-heeled French boots, everything, say they, is wrong, and haven't the men been saying so, these many years? The object of this dress reform is to make all women dress physiologically—but they won't—never will one woman adapt her dress to herself, but to others, no matter how much nature may be deformed.—Chicago Journal.

This is a movement in the right direction, and deserves the sanction and encouragement of all good people. The present ladies' fashions are about as far removed from health, economy, modesty, convenience, and good taste, as Satan can get decent people to follow. M. G.

DIETETIC HINTS.—Most chronic diseases, and many acute ones, are produced at the table. As a rule, no fluid of any kind should be taken at the meal, especially if the stomach be weak. The stomach should never be over-loaded; not more than two or three articles should be taken at one meal; no stimulants used before eating; tobacco arrests digestion. Milk is the best diet for infants and children. Tomatoes with cream and sugar are healthy and nutritious. Bread and butter is the staff of life and is easily digested. Too much salt irritates the stomach. Colds are frequently produced by drinking hot tea and exposure afterwards. Late suppers induce heart diseases. Pastry and cakes constipate the bowels. Fresh fish strengthens the nervous system. Boiled potatoes are not as healthy as baked ones. Fruits should be eaten at breakfast and dinner. The stomach requires much rest to be healthy; purgative medicines weaken the bowels. Cheerful conversation promotes digestion, anger prevents it.

FARM NOTES.

— 2,00,000 bushels of peanuts are annually grown in this country.

— Trim orchards during mild weather, this month—the sooner the better.

— California shipped 30,000,000 pounds of wool over the Pacific R. R. during '73.

— If you wish good crops, sow good seed, on good soil, and give good cultivation.

— A stock dealer in Australia recently claimed to have lost $5,250 worth of sheep, from thieves.

— A farmer at Augusta, Ga., lately discovered that his dog was in the habit of milking a fine cow.

— A North Carolina man raised, last year, 722 bushels of sweet potatoes from one acre of land, at a cost of $64.

— Beef cattle should not be kept longer than they are growing. Fatten and kill, or sell, when growth is attained.

— Herkimer, N. Y., ships annually, $4,500,000 worth of butter and cheese, Little Falls as much, and St. Albans $2,250,000 worth.

— Water pails, varnished inside once every six months, with gum shellac, will not soak water, and will last twice as long as without.

— 500,000 acres, one-ninth of the arable land of Scotland, is annually, under turnips. They are staple, there, for fattening stock.

— A New Jersey man claims a clear profit on seventy chickens, and nineteen ducks, last year, of $77. He says it cost him one dollar a year to keep a chicken.

— Paris used for food, during the last five years over 3000 horses, besides about 300 asses and mules, not to speak of frogs. Horse meat is about half the price of beef.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

COME, MASTER, COME!

Come, Master, come!
Come to thy human home;
Redeem this land of thine;
Make earth's remotest soil
Thine own dear Palestine,—
Come, kingly Master, come!

Come, Master, come!
Thou wilt not surely stay;
The hour unknown is nigh;
We read it in thy world;
'Tis written in the sky,—
Come, faithful Master, come!

Come, Master, come!
It is thy Word we plead;
The Spirit and the bride,
And all that hear, say come;
Come with us to abide,—
Jesus, my Master, come!

LETTER FROM J. D. BROWN
TO THE CHURCH IN BROCKPORT, N. Y.

The following is a copy of a letter written by Bro. J D Brown, of Providence, R I., to the church in Brockport, N Y, and sent us by Bro. J. H. Whitmore, of Rochester, N Y.

Beloved Saints in Brockport waiting for the Lord from heaven:—

I have been anxious for you, all the year since I was with you last, and have often been on the point of writing to you to warn you of the dangers of a time movement getting in among you, and I do not know but I have been guilty of neglect in not doing so. If so, I hope you will forgive me, and I will now try and repair the wrong. But let me tell you why I did not write, as it is best, and will help me explain this letter, and prepare you for a due appreciation of what I may be moved to write.

1. I did not write because it is a very heavy burden to me; and to think of writing a letter long enough to show you all mistakes that has been made in the time arrangement, all the wrong views of Scripture meaning on which the arrangement was founded, and how all the bold, sanguine statements "that this is right," "this is the Word of God" (where they were only the statements of men); to show you, I say, how all these statements, which seem so much like arguments to those who have had no experience in such movements, were not worthy of your faith,—all this work seemed so large that I could not think of undertaking it with pen and ink. So I left it, and hoped that your good sense and knowledge of Scripture, and especially the indwelling Spirit of the Lord teaching you to "love one another," and "be pitiful and courteous," all would keep you from being drawn into the spirit that always accompanies a time movement. And now, dear children, the impossibility of doing all this work must explain to you why I do not notice in this letter many things on which you may wish you had my views.

2. I did not write because I feared to. I knew that it was possible to write words that might offend, anger, and alienate you;—words which, if I was there where you could see in my face the tokens of love, and hear it in the tones of my voice, and have proved in all my presence and manner the tender solicitude of my heart for you, as dear ones that I wished to lead safely to glory, I might safely speak, and not fear being misunderstood.

Now, beloved, I have not in my heart to chide, or reproach, or find fault with you, or charge wrong or wicked motives on any one in Brockport, if any of you under the influence of others have been led to separate from brethren, and treat them ill, or in any way be a trial or offense to any of Jesus' little ones. O how I do wish I could come and see you, and speak to you face to face, and comfort and instruct all, and so build you up together in our most holy faith.

No, beloved, I do not blame you for your belief in the time, nor any of its consequences; for I realize all the circumstances of your inexperience, and the urgency, boldness, and persistence with which the time is urged on you, and you are made by specious words to feel that your salvation depends on your believing it. But I pity and grieve for the state of mind that could bring division into a loving church; and if, in the excitement, any who are not in the time have made any remarks, or done anything that has been aught but like the "love and gentleness of Christ," I do hope all such wrongs may be taken out of the way, and you may be able to walk in love, for Jesus says, "All men shall know ye are my disciples when ye love one another." What a pity that any of us should be the means of causing that precious sign to vanish from the sight of men.

But I do blame those persons, who, after making mistakes for years in their calculations and opinions, still go and preach their own word as though they were the words of God, and so deceive and mislead the unwary.

Now some will say, we are told time is in the Bible revealed, and to be understood. What do you think? Well, beloved, a hard question to be answered by pen, but I will tell you what I have believed for years, that is, God has not intended that we should learn from the periods the exact time of the end, but only enough about its nearness, so that we might be watchful and prepared, and not taken unawares. He does not intend that we can learn so much, that when he exhorts us to be "watchful because we know not when the time is," we may be able to say, Lord, you are mistaken, we do know when the time is. And you will all admit that he is too wise to introduce such a contradiction into his Word. In Daniel it is not plain that the periods end at the coming of the Lord and resurrection. I know it is argued, "The question was asked how long to the end of these wonders? and the end was the deliverance of Daniel's people, and the awaking of the sleeping ones; so the period must end at the resurrection." In the argument the statement of the question asked is correct, for it is Biblical; but the human argument which follows, and is intended to show that the period ends at the Second Advent, may not be correct; for the last of the wonders is not the awaking of the sleepers in the dust; but instead, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament (sun), and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Dan. 12:3. That is the end of the wonders, and if it is the same shining Jesus refers to in Matt. 13:43, in explaining the parable of the tares, when he says "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father;" then the end of the wonders is in the kingdom, and of course the end of the period is there, according to the argument, and not at the coming of the Lord. And then, too, Daniel standing in his lot must be at the same time, and the time of Jesus' coming would not be known from the period.

But you will say, We are told that there was a period reaching from a certain time in the past to the birth of Christ or first advent; and the saints expected him at that time, and the Jews were cut off according to Jesus' word because they "knew not the time of their visitation. It is to be inferred from this that there is a time for the second coming, and to be ignorant will involve destruction. I answer, there was a period reaching somewhere,—to his birth, baptism, or his riding into Jerusalem,—but which, no one to-day can certainly tell, though my opinion is his baptism. But if it reaches to his birth, we have indisputable proof that no one has found out the hour, day, month, or year when he should be born, or even when he should be brought to the temple. If they had they could have been present at his birth; for it was well known he would be born in Bethlehem, for thus saith the prophets. Now how was it with those that knew anything about it? First, the shepherds in Bethlehem knew he was born the same day, but not till after he was born; and they did not learn it from Daniel; but angels came from heaven and sang the anthem of his birth in their ears. Second, Simeon when he was brought to the temple eight days after to fulfill the law, found out he had been born and praised God; but he had not learned before, not even the year; for Scripture tells us all he knew was "that he should not die till he had seen the Lord's anointed." This he had not learned from Daniel, but by the Holy Spirit. Anna, who come in next and knew him, did not know even as much as Simeon about the exact time, nor any of the rest who looked for redemption in Jerusalem. Yet all had the book of Daniel. Then lastly, the wise men from the East found out he had been born, not by Daniel's period, but by seeing some wonder in the heavens from which they inferred it. Then perhaps you will say the period in Daniel was a failure. I answer, if intended to teach men the exact year even, of any event connected with the first advent, no person can deny it was a total failure. But, my dear brethren, do not be too fast in reckoning that God's Word has failed. He says "it shall accomplish that whereunto I sent it."

Now look; if God meant it to bring men unto a place where they believed they were in the season or period where Messiah was to come, and so lead them to watch for him, then the period in Dan. 9 was most remarkably effectual, for a company of saints were in just this state, and that this was the amount of knowledge intended, and which all might have, is shown in that Jesus condemns the unbelieving on the ground that they did "not know the season of their visitation." When a period of 460 or 470 or 480 years had passed from the "commandments," men might know they were in the season in which Messiah was to come; and whether they could decide if the period ended at his birth or baptism, they need not mistake him when he came heralded by his mighty forerunner in the wilderness, and approved by his own mighty works, and more mighty word of grace and truth.

We have passed some mighty landmarks of prophecy; some periods are apparently in the past, and we know the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and I esteem it a mercy that we cannot learn the exact year, so our sinful nature cannot say he will not come till then, and I need not watch for awhile, and so Satan come in and deceive and ruin us. In the saying of Jesus, Matt. 24,—"as the days of Noah were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be," he is not teaching us that we shall know the time, even of days beforehand; for in the passage he is not comparing the state of the church, or the knowledge of the church at the two periods; but the state or knowledge of the unbelieving mass of men. You turn and read, and you will see he does not say a word about what Noah knew or did. He does not say as in the days that were before the flood, saints were warned, preached righteousness, lived uprightly in their generation, built an ark to save themselves, wherein eight souls were saved, and knew the time seven days beforehand, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. That would prove that we should build an ark, and only eight be saved. Others had told all these things about them, but he was telling what was done by those that "knew not till the flood came and took them all away," and we have no right to take advantage of the saying in this connection, "So shall the coming of the Son of Man be," to draw the conclusion how it will be with the other class, in any important particular. On that matter, if we are judicious and wise, we shall seek instruction from Scriptures that are written to give light in what the church will know and do; and whatever they say will not mislead and disappoint us. And here let me say, dear children, all our influences from texts, of ideas that they do not plainly speak, are more likely to disappoint us than otherwise. The boldness with which many speak on time is not the result of faith, but of pride and presumption.

Dr. Barker who was here in Providence about the time I got your letter said, "In this time argument we have followed out legitimately the principles of the Protestant churches and Adventists, and of prophecy itself; and if the Lord does not come this year before A. D. 1873, Roman time passes, the whole thing, Protestantism, Adventism, prophecy, the Bible, all proves a failure. Men say every vision faileth; but it does not; it will come." I answered, "If the Lord don't come this year, you will find Protestantism, Christianity, prophecy and the Bible all remain. And I pray God you may not be consistent with your statement; for then you will be an infidel, and yourself one of those who say 'every vision fails.' You have no business to use such expressions." "Why," he said, "my faith makes me say so." I answered, "No, my dear Bro., it is your presumption, and I pray God through Jesus Christ it may be forgiven you.

And here, by the way, came in an argument which I must refer to, for it will be used again, and will deceive many. He said, "there is no chance for another argument, and this must be right." Now, beloved, beware of this. Even if there was no chance to make another theory, yet it would not necessarily prove this one to be right, for may be this ought not to have been made at all. And I think if there is any lesson that ought to be learned from so many failures by those looking for the coming of the Lord, it is that the Lord disapproves of such a course; and when they learn that the principle—"time is revealed, and to be understood and preached by the church"—is not a principle of Adventism or Christianity, they will then be prepared to wait patiently for the Lord, and preach carefully and soberly to men things that they will not have a chance to point at and say was a failure and a lie. But I told Bro. Barker, I cannot prove to you that this is wrong, though I can show you of two or three chances for a time theory. He told me "If it was not true I could show it out of the prophecy, for if there was anything further I could show it there." I said, "According to your own theory this is not so, for these two last time arguments were in the Bible when you was preaching the 1867 time; yet no one could make you see it then."

My dear brethren, I do not believe that either of these time theories is sanctioned by the Word of God, and I think in the three last what has seemed the strongest point has been a fanciful interpretation of Scripture to try and explain past mistakes, and bolster up our conceit with the idea that we had been right all the time; and the last fancy is now unanswerably refuted by the passing of the time, that is, the notion that Christ taught that he would come in one of four watch or time movements. It is true Jesus did not tell what a watch was, and so the whole theory that it was a time movement was a human fancy, as all must see now. And equally it is now plain Jesus did not mean these four time movements, for then so many of his words would be a failure. The fact is, prophecy is not so plain a matter that we can go on and affirm to people just what, and how, and when a thing is coming till God fulfills his Word, and interprets it by events.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

So wrote the poet, and he might have said the same thing truly of blind belief, or that belief that mistakes the word of man for the word of God, and adopts some principle to stick to and try every thing by, and will not listen to the instruction of wisdom.

I have one or two objections to these time theories, which I wish lovingly to ask your attention to.

1. They are injurious to the spiritual state of those who endorse them, in that they excite a feverish state of excitement, which, in proportion as it is not shaken off, leaves them unable to appreciate what is less exciting—truth. And so, like stimulus to the body, makes them feel weak and unable to live and work without it; and so they go seeking it rather than duty and usefulness; and already there are two or three new time theories started for this fall. And again they give faith a habit of being disappointed, so that at each new trial it is taught to expect failure, and each time gives doubt and Satan one more objection to the Word, or makes men feel that perhaps after all implicit confidence is not necessary.

Again, I object to these time movements because experience teaches that they always beget a spirit of spiritual pride and censoriousness, and they cause divisions; and that not between the church and the world, which I do not object to, but I venture to say not a church can be found which has not been divided when time has come into it.

Now if it was some true thing that divided believers, it would be unqualifiedly unscriptural to cause divisions and offences among Christ's "sheep," his "little flock;" and how completely wrong and absurd when it is done by a theory that proves to be untrue, and how humbling should it be to us to look back and think that we despised and rejected brethren and sisters because they did not see as we did, accused them of being in error and rejecting truth, when time has shown that they took much the wiser way. But a trouble is, that we so seldom humble ourselves for our mistakes, though we require this humbling of others. So does sin deceive us. Let us, as Paul says, exhort one another daily, lest its deceitfulness harden us. If any wrong, hard, exacting spirit has been in any of you, oh, let God's pure spirit purge and melt it all away, and make pure love become your bond of perfectness, that can never be broken or unloosed. Oh, be humble enough to do just the right, loving, holy thing that God can approve.

Paul does not say "receive one another" as men teach you, or as Protestantism, or Adventism requires, but "as Christ receives you," and that you know is so merciful as to bear with your crookedness, and even your perversity or faultiness, and he receives you in a love that abides with you forever. And there is nothing plainer than that if we love one another as we love ourselves, for Jesus' sake, no mere difference in judgment about some doctrine need divide; for if we have "obeyed the truth through the Spirit to unfeigned love," it will cause us to "be pitiful and courteous," and no two persons, or more, in that state of mind can be separated.

If I wanted to form a church that would always be united, the precept I would give them would not be "always believe alike," for many do that, and yet hate, and defraud, and slander each other; but it would be Ephesians 4:30, 31, 32; and 5:1, 2; also same Epistle 4:1-3. If men took one half the care and pains "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" that wisdom would enforce, we should never have the church scandalized by sects, which is what divisions come to.

But, beloved, I have written so long a letter, that it may tire you, and I must bring it to a close. Jesus died for you all, and loves you, and will save you I do not for a moment doubt. As your pastor loving you so as to be willing to sacrifice for you, I must close in a few words of Scripture quotation and instruction. Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Son Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like his glorious body. . . . Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and my crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved, and I beseech (any) Euodias, and I beseech (any) Syntyche (that may be among you), that they be of the same mind in the Lord. . . . Rejoice in the Lord alway. . . . Let your moderation be known to all men. The Lord is at hand; be anxious for nothing; but in every thing with prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your heart and mind through Jesus Christ. Finally, whatsoever things are true, or honest, or just, or pure, or lovely, or of good report, if there be any virtue, or any praise, think on these things. Those things that ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen, in me, do; and the God of peace shall be with you.

I begun this letter, as you will see, as soon as I received your letter, but various circumstances have hindered, so it has been written hurriedly—a few lines at a time—at different times. But with all its imperfections it is the expression of my warm love to you all in Christ Jesus. I would he might open my way to come and abide with you a little, to be a helper of your faith. He is my witness how much I long to see you all. Beloved, if there is any question in which you wish my assistance to understand what is truth, be free to write me. And may our dear Savior grant us to be saved together in his kingdom. Amen. Your sincere brother, J. D. BROWN.

Providence, R. I., 44 Peace S., Jan. 18th.

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

C. MENDENHALL.

There are certain principles and truths which are essential to salvation, one of which is true righteousness. We say true righteousness because like all good and genuine graces it has base counterfeits.

There are various kinds of righteousness brought to our view in Scripture. First, we will notice a spurious article known as self-righteousness. The Jews built their hopes upon the law, being strict adherents to its letter in regard to forms, the observance of days, and outward ceremonies. The moralist, or modern Pharisee, is strict in regard to his actions as they are manifest to mankind, but he virtually denies a change of heart; forgetting that it is not by good works which we have done that we are saved, but "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." They each—the Pharisee and moralist—ignore Christ and supplant his righteousness by their own.

Of such Paul says,—"For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." Rom. 10:3. Consequently self constituted righteousness is as "filthy rags," and will not cover them from the wrath and punishment of the last day.

Out of Christ there is no hope held out in the gospel. The carnal mind, though it may be under the subjection of a powerful will and a careful training, is not subject to the law of God, and is at enmity against him. The purifying effects of the Holy Spirit's power, a meek and firm faith in the work completed on Calvary are component parts necessary in constructing true righteousness.

Faith in Christ is the grand foundation, resulting in obedience to all his commands, bringing forth godliness, meekness, charity, truth, and all the beautiful qualities of gratitude, patience and love, through the grace and power of Christ working in us. "Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power."

Solomon has wisely said,—"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." So it is in this matter; though men may hope for salvation through legal righteousness of their own, and this way "seemeth right" unto them, it leads to death, just as certain as that iniquity of any kind results in destruction. "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." John 3:18.

Let us then turn from self to Jesus, from morality to deep, earnest, faithful, practical piety built on the foundation, Jesus Christ, who only is the way, the truth, and the life.

Help us, Father, to continue steadfast and true, serving thee through Christ, in hope of a reward; knowing that his righteousness shall be imputed unto us, enabling us to stand in that great day unabashed, full of trusting confidence "that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life." Titus 3:7.

ZION.

J. B. CLARK.

Perhaps there is no name in human history which awakens so many thrilling associations as that of "Zion." It not only represents the ancient Jewish church, but it is applied to the Christian church. Confined to no particular sect, and to no clime or language, it embraces all who love God and Jesus Christ his Son. There is something sad as well as delightful in the word. Zion has had tears as well as joy. He who has kept a record of her tears knows full well her conflicts and her trials; and from the time of her flight through the wilderness to the land of Canaan till now, she has been a stranger and a pilgrim in a world of sin; and amid her sorrows and disappointments a voice is heard to say, "Zion still is well beloved."

The literal Mount Zion was one of the hills on which Jerusalem was built. It stood near Mount Moriah, where Abraham offered up Isaac to the Lord, and where that triumph of human faith was witnessed. Centuries afterward, when the temple covered the summit of the former, it formed the heart and strength of the city. The Jews when speaking of their city, if her strength was spoken of, the language was, "Walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof, mark well her bulwarks, and consider her palaces." God's affection for his people was expressed by his love for Zion. "He loveth the gates of Zion." "The Lord hath chosen Zion." And his people were called "Daughter of Zion." When occupied by the son of Jesse, it became "the city of David"—the representative of all that was dear in Israel. Hence it was called the "holy hill of Zion, whither the tribes went up, the tribes of the Lord, unto the testimony of Israel." David exclaims concerning this glorious place—"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion." When the Hebrews were captives in Babylon, and this beautiful place lay desolate, its palaces broken down, methinks I see the captive band strolling beside the river of Babylon, and listening to the murmuring stream that swept by. It reminded them of their home—their dear Zion—that beautiful place, never to be seen by them again. As they were filled with these sad remembrances, their neglected harps hanging on the willows, Babylonians passing stopped and asked for a native song. "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land," say they. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." They did not forget her, and the city of David subsequently rose over the hill of Zion, till at last the Romans occupied it, and the eagle of Cæsar took the place of the banner of David. Shiloh at length came, and the rejected Savior, as he overlooked Zion and the holy city, wept over it in view of its approaching ruin, saying, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate." Zion crucified her Savior; then the long-delayed curse fell,—the Roman legions girdled the city, and the words of the prophet of God were fulfilled, "Zion shall be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps." It "shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

Years have passed by, and the plowshare has been driven over the hill of Zion, where once its towers and palaces stood, but now is forsaken of God. But the promise is still sure. Zion is not forgotten. The church of God still lives in more than her ancient beauty. Kingdoms may rise and fall, and the strongest monuments of human skill crumble to dust; yet Zion is still secure. No foe can finally prevail against her. She has brighter palaces than those which adorned Jerusalem, and firmer towers than those built by human hands. Unseen warriors hover around her battlements, and her banner that floats triumphantly amid the confusion of a perishing world is love.

THE PATH OF THE JUST.

J. R. SMITH.

The just are those who are honest and true, upright and sincere in all their actions. We read in the inspired Word that "Noah was a just man, and perfect"; we also read that "Noah walked with God"; he believed his Word, and "when warned of God of things not seen as yet," he "prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith."

True religion will ever appear in its own proper character, in the midst of surrounding darkness. Although dissemblers may put on the mask of religion, and "sound a trumpet before them, as the hypocrites do," yet, "the tree is" ever "known by its fruit." "The hope of the hypocrite shall perish"; but "the path of the just shall be as a shining light, that shineth more and more, even unto the perfect day." The christian is no better by nature than others; he has no righteousness of his own, but Christ is his righteousness. Christ has died to redeem us, and therefore has become "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth"; and "being justified freely by his grace," through faith in his atoning blood, the christian has "peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." He receives "the witness of the Spirit," and becomes sanctified to God "through the belief of the truth," and accepts Christ as "his wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

"The path of the just" is a strait path, and those who walk this way have "passed from death unto life." The world has many paths in which men who are far from God "walk in the ways of their own heart, and in the sight of their own eyes." There is the path of worldly pleasure and vanity, that leads to sorrow, misery and death. The just once walked in this path, as "he was by nature a child of wrath, even as others"; but his feet are now turned in a different direction; he no longer walks in the pathway of vanity and sin, but in the pathway of righteousness, and brings forth fruit unto holiness, and the end will be everlasting life.

The truly justified man is "a new creature," not in name merely, but in reality. He has not only a new name, but a new nature; he has a new heart, new desires, new pursuits, and new pleasures. He now walks in a new path. Before he was justified by faith, he walked in the ways of the ungodly, he congregated with sinners, and sat "in the seat of the scornful"; but the truly justified soul does not walk that way any longer. Jesus has become to him a satisfying portion.

The pathway of the just is a happy and a peaceful way. Great peace have they who are kept by the power of God. Their thoughts are staid upon him, and they have perfect peace. There are lights all along, and they never grow dim. The pathway of the just is a holy path. It is called "the highway of holiness," cast up for the redeemed of the Lord to walk in. All are safe who walk in this way, both in this world and in the world to come.

All who walk in the path of the just follow peace with all men, and holiness. They have laid aside the weights, and the sins, which formerly did so easily beset them, and are looking unto Jesus. They are looking diligently, lest any root of bitterness should spring up in their hearts, and they, thereby, become defiled. Those who walk in this path have no hatred, malice, wrath, nor evil speaking in their hearts; they are now tender-hearted, kind one to another, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven them. The idea of walking in the path of the just, and practising evil speaking and cherishing ill-will and hatred toward our fellow men, is preposterous. To think we can walk in the path of the just, and yet live in any known sin, is a seductive snare of the devil, contrary to plain Scripture.

Christ came into the world to save people from their sins. "He that committeth sin is of the devil. For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Christ never was offered to save any soul in sin; but saves his people from its power and practice. He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Those who have been redeemed have been made partakers of the divine nature. They are not of the world, even as Christ was not of the world. They are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; and they by their good works and consistent lives "show forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of nature's darkness into his marvelous light." These have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of their inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession. These are holding on to the promises of God, and are kept by his power "through faith unto salvation." They are without spot, or blemish, or wrinkle, or any such thing; and will be all ready to be revealed in the day of Christ's appearing.

PSALMS 68: 13.

J. P. MARQUAND.

"Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

This scripture lies hidden away among the Psalms like a vein of gold among ore, or like silver among rubbish. It may have two meanings,—either individual experience or national prosperity. If it is individual experience, how well do we know the change that came over us when lifted out of nature's darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel; out of the power of sin and Satan into the liberty of Christ. It was like taking a person from the flesh-pots of Egypt, into the atmosphere of heaven. It was the calling of God to a higher and better life. This change that was wrought in the soul was by the operation of the Holy Spirit on the heart, accompanied by the preaching of the incorruptible Word which liveth and abideth forever. This work is of divine origin. The soul that God undertakes to save need not fear; not all the powers of death or hell can frustrate the design or purpose of the Almighty. Those who trust in Christ will be brought through all trials, sorrows and difficulties, and be ushered into the presence of God with exceeding joy, through our Lord and Redeemer.

But the above text was partially fulfilled when the Gentiles were made partakers of the gospel. God said he would take out from among them a people for his name; and thus the Gentiles were made fellow heirs with the saints, to an inheritance which is incorruptible and eternal. But for a more complete fulfillment of this scripture we must look to the coming of Christ to judge the nations of the earth. Then all national and political distinctions will be done away in the glorious establishment of God's universal kingdom. They will come up from every nation, kindred, tribe and tongue, "out of much tribulation; having washed their robes and made them white." "They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

May all who read these lines take comfort from the fact that God will perform every word he has uttered. Let us not give way to the sin which so easily besets us (unbelief), but exercise confidence and trust in Jehovah, whose word is immutable. As surely as day follows night, or as sunshine follows rain, so surely will God save and bring his saints to enjoy a kingdom of beauty, honor and glory without end. Amen.

PRESENT TRUTH.

HENRY PRATT.

Permit me through the Crisis to express my heartfelt satisfaction for the article touching the increase of crime by the rejection of present truth; also for the articles from Brn. Boutell, Fassett, and Colegrove, and the one from the Prophetic Times. These truths give me the sweetest comfort in this hour of affliction, save the return of Christ and the resurrection. And even that will be but the consummation of this blessed Advent teaching, that has thrilled our entire being for thirty-one years. Light was the means by which the wise virgins were made ready, and a want of light was the cause of delay and consequently the unreadiness of the other party. The meat that God has provided gives strength and good cheer, and the Bride dons the white robe of beauty and holiness with delight, on the assurance that the Bridegroom is coming.

Let the great head-light of the church—the sure word of prophecy—be brought fairly into position, and the track will be lighted up until day-dawn. The hope of seeing Christ as he is, at his appearing, John says will cause us to purify ourselves "even as he is pure." As ambassadors for Christ, we should not try to improve his instructions by our own wisdom. My brethren, this Advent message is of heaven or of men. If of heaven, then its importance cannot be over-estimated; if of men, abandon it at once. The cheering notes of the soon coming King cause a vibration in my heart, touched by whatever hand. Rome will soon sink like a millstone in the mighty deep and be found no more at all. Then the hallelujahs will arise, for the Bride hath made herself ready. Let the Crisis ever advocate the great truth that God has given for this generation, and soon the approbation will come, "Well done, . . . enter into the joy of thy Lord."

SING AND REJOICE.

S. S. CHAMBERLAIN.

To all those who have been looking and waiting for the coming of the Lord I would say, "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." Zech. 2:10.

This promise has been many times repeated, and all his promises are sure. O let us be wholly prepared for his coming. We must be free from every sin. Let us search to the very bottom of our heart, and see if there is anything lacking, either in our faith or our practice; for we know that none but holy ones can enter through the pure celestial gate. We must have on the spotless robe of Christ's righteousness. If we find that we are not altogether what we should be, let us go to him at once, and ask him to make us free from everything that is not according to his will. Lord, help us to please thee in all things.

When we have the assurance that our ways please the Lord, then we can rejoice at his coming.

"Christian, remember that Christ loves thee still;
Only be faithful in doing his will;
Soon thou wilt stand with him on Zion's hill;
Be of good cheer, of good cheer.

Keep on thy armor, and all thy robes pure!
Faith overcomes, and will make the prize sure;
Be of good cheer; of good cheer."

— We should always keep in God's way, that we may be prepared for God's work.

THE NEW BIRTH.

(Concluded.)

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—John 3 : 3.

Man, by the fall, lost his manhood, his original status as the offspring of God, his gradation on the scale of being, his likeness to God, his divine nature and heirship to a glorious inheritance. It was a great fall, the work of a terrible foe. Without a reinstatement,—a renewal—he must sustain an eternal and infinite loss. It would not only be an eternal loss to man, but it would be a loss to God;—an "out" on the proof-sheet of restitution;—a failure in setting up the original copy of the divine Creator's work;—an eternal blank in the universe. It would be an eternal defeat of Jehovah in fully accomplishing his will and purposes. The integrity, faithfulness, and almighty power of the divine Government is involved in the question of the eradification of evil from the universe, and the restitution of all things to their primitive state.

The magnitude of this work demands instrumentalities and power commensurate with the vastness of the results to be attained. God has clearly manifested this by electing his only begotten Son—the God-Man—the everlasting Father of a regenerated world and race—as the divinely appointed and qualified agent to accomplish it. Christ came down from heaven to the earth as its Regenerator. The work is threefold. 1. Removing sin and evil. 2. Taking away the agencies that produced them. 3. Removing all their results; that is, leaving every thing in the condition that it would have been in if sin and the curse had never existed.

The first part of the work of the regeneration of our world has already commenced with men. To regenerate is "to generate or produce anew;—to form into a new and better state;—to reproduce." Webster. It applies to that which has been marred, or injured, and is restored to its original newness and perfection. It applies to the earth, and all connected with it, restored by Christ.

He said, referring to the renewal of the physical world, "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed, me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19 : 28. Paul, in referring to the regeneration of men morally or spiritually, says, "Not by works of righteousness which we have dŏne, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Tit. 3 : 5. Here, conversion is called "regeneration," or the reproduction of man "in the image of Him that created him" "a new creature." The word regenerate means to generate again; or once more to produce anew. To be regenerated by God is to be produced in his image again, or once more made like him.

Man is represented in the Scriptures as a compound being, composed of soul, body, and spirit. Not three entities, but three elements or parts united, making one personal entity. The soul and spirit, being invisible, are frequently taken together as one part of man distinct from the body. As Paul says, "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." 2 Cor. 4 : 16. The two parts are distinct; for while one is perishing, decaying, the other is being renewed, or increased, in power. He explains how the inner man is strengthened, thus: "To be strengthened with might, by his Spirit, in the inner man." Eph. 3 : 16. The inner man is evidently the moral element—the heart; the word man being used in an accommodated sense, to distinguish an important part of the human entity.

It seems necessary that these two elements of man should be definitely distinguished in describing his regeneration, for both parts are to be renewed, but at different periods, and under very different circumstances. The inner man is regenerated at conversion; the outer man, or body, at the resurrection. When man's redemption is considered in the abstract, the two events are made very distinct; but when it is presented in the concrete, they are blended as one grand change of restoration or regeneration.

As generation is produced by being begotten and born, so regeneration is also represented as being begotten and born. The regeneration of the inner man always precedes that of the outer man; for man's degeneracy commenced in the heart, and physical degeneracy was the result. Moral death results in physical death; and moral life results in physical life. The spiritual status always precedes and determines the physical. In the regeneration the begetting and birth is not represented as separated by a period of time, but as taking place at the same time; for Christ's resurrection is illustrated by being both begotten and born. It was said of Christ,—"And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead." Rev. 1 : 5. Paul said of him,—"Who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." Col. 1 : 15. He immediately explains his meaning of first born thus: "The first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence." Verse 18. Therefore it is plain that Inspiration applies both the figures of begotten and birth to the resurrection of Christ.

Jesus' inner man needed no regeneration, for it was never degenerated; but only his body, which he received from a degenerate parent. But the sinner's outer and inner man are both degenerated, and both must be again begotten and born, to be inhabitants of that world where every part will be renewed, that is, regenerated. The Scriptures represent the conversion of man, or the renewing of his heart, by applying to that experience both the figures of begetting and birth, as in Jesus' resurrection. John says, "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." 1 John 5 : 18. Here both born and begotten are applied to man while exposed to Satan. Some men say that the original of the passage might have been differently translated; to which we would say, we are not responsible for the reading of the Scriptures as they come to us, and shall not take the responsibility of changing them. We think it will be much more safe for us to manifest a confidence in them, as they read, rather than to give the skeptic a foundation for his unbelief by questioning their correctness. We had better be prayerful expositors, than assuming translators.

That we are, spiritually, both begotten and born at conversion, appears still more certain when we reflect that God never represents our christian experience by a child in the embryotic state, but invariably by experiences after birth. The converted man is represented as commencing in infancy, and growing to manhood;—first, eating "milk," afterward "meat." Christian experience is represented by all the occupations and professions of men in this life. We are represented as being members of God's family—having our names recorded—as being Christ's brethren—as loving and being loved—as learning—as being heirs—as enjoying light and liberty;—all of which men enjoy after birth, and never before. It seems to us that God entirely misrepresents himself, in the language used, if he designs to represent the believer as in the embryotic state.

We conclude, therefore, that at conversion we experience a new birth of the inner man, as the first installment of regeneration by Christ; and that the second installment will be received at the resurrection of the just, when our bodies—the outer man—will be renewed like Christ's glorious body. This change is also represented, and by the same rules, as being begotten and born, the same as in Christ's resurrection. Christ, in speaking of the resurrection of his people, says—"And are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke 20 : 36. The expression, "Jesus, who is the first begotten of the dead," implies that others will be begotten of the dead after him; and so also of his being "the first born from the dead." Isaiah represents the earth as being the mother at the resurrection birth, when he says, "The earth shall cast out the dead." Chap. 26 : 19. Again he says, "Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." Chap. 66 : 8.

Here the earth is represented as bringing forth in birth, and so also is Zion. The earth producing the birth of the outer man, and Zion—the church—the inner man; as Paul represented himself as travailing in birth again for the backslidden Gălatians. The summing up of the argument, therefore, produces this thought: that man ruined by sin intellectually, morally and physically, surrounded with a terrible curse, doomed to ignominy and death, can be fully regenerated, soul and body, renewed in the image of God, and stand again in paradise restored, the eternal recipient of God's bounty. He will, by the claims of a new birth in Christ, involving conversion and resurrection, become an heir to the eternal kingdom of God, purchased and redeemed by the atoning blood of Jesus from the curse of sin, stand in peerage with angels, enjoying the eternal benediction of the Creator—the everlasting Benefactor of a new-born race. J. C.

BISMARCK AND PAPACY.—The Germans are taking a bold stand against the Papacy. Bismarck is pressing against it with a firm hand, and with marked success. The Pope feels his power most keenly, but is helpless, because his dominion is taken away. The final wind-up of the whole system at the coming of Christ, we think, cannot be far in the future. Dear Savior, come quickly.
M. G.

RESPONSIBILITY OF CHRIST'S SHEPHERDS.

A shepherd is one who has the care of a flock, and becomes reponsible for its safety and protection. The sheep is an innocent, defenceless animal, and always needs protection from ravenous and destructive beasts. A shepherd's work is to provide the flock with all that is necessary for its safety and protection.

God's people are represented as his flock, and Christ as the Chief Shepherd, and his servants under shepherds, to serve according to his instruction. Christ has provided the food, and has given a variety to meet all their demands, connected with the varying circumstances to the end. He has promised the presence and aid of his Holy Spirit to assist them in giving the household meat in due season, so that they may receive the gracious benediction of "Well done," from his lips, at his appearing. It is not enough to give the prepared meat, but certain portions must be given at appointed times; because there are times when certain portions are especially needed.

Christ's servants are particularly required to guard the flock from danger, so that the beasts of prey do not devour it, or that it eat no poisonous food, and be led to safe shelter when the storm approaches. The instructions given by the Chief Shepherd are, that his flock will be in imminent danger in the last days, and, therefore, that particular responsibility will rest upon his servants to guard it with great carefulness, to give it the nourishing food prepared to strengthen it under the debilitating influences of the season, to warn it against eating poisonous food, which will be temptingly displayed, and appear delicious. They must warn it of the fact that many wolves will mingle with the flock and wear garments of wool, but have ravenous teeth. It will also become their special duty to warn the flock of approaching storm, and lead it by a clearly marked trail to the great Shepherd's prepared fold of safe protection.

We would say to all the servants of Christ, in view of the present dangers, take heed to yourselves, and to the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers;—lead it out from the world to the sides of the mount of God,—the mountain of holiness—for there are fearful convulsions which threaten to engulf it in eternal ruin. Lead it to the apostolic pastures, where gospel food is found in abundance;—food which will cause the church to grow up into Christ, and give her strength to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil.

It is a dark and stormy night. Keep the head-light burning! Let it shine upon the track, for the train is running through a dismal swamp; nearing the Canaan of rest,—the city of the great King. Let the officers of Christ's army exert themselves to have every soldier in position in the ranks; for the morn of inspection is dawning, and the King is coming, with his heavenly staff, for a grand review.

O, ye servants of Christ, these are days of untold responsibility. The church of Christ was never exposed to such dangers before. Apply for more eye salve, that ye may not fail of seeing the snares coiled for her feet! Lead her gently! She is weary and sad with disappointments and sore temptations. Bind up her wounds, for the enemy is showering terrible darts upon her. He has come in great wrath; for he sees his time is short. O, that our Savior and Friend would come speedily, and deliver his espoused Bride from threatening foes and overwhelming sadness. Let every servant of Christ stand ready to give his life for the safety and final salvation of the flock, that they may receive eternal life, and rest in the kingdom of God. J. C.

"HE IS NOT FAR OFF."

The conviction that Christ is soon coming is increasing in the minds of christians in all parts of the world. The Holy Spirit seems to be impressing it upon their minds more deeply every year. The signs of the times are such, and the fulfillment of prophecy is so nearly completed, that there remains no reasonable grounds for doubt that we are very near the end of this dispensation. Men are so fully convinced that these things are so, they often are heard speaking about them, where we should not expect such things, and where they were not heard till recently. The secular and religious papers frequently allude to them. The Church of England is quite awake on the subject, and many of her ministers and writers are speaking out boldly in favor of the belief that our Savior will soon appear. The following is from the Churchman (Epis.), Feb. 14th, 1874: M. G.

"An English correspondent of a religious journal, speaks of some remarks recently made by Bishop Ellicott, expressing 'his conviction that the period of Christ's second advent might be very imminent, and assigning as a reason therefor, the silently increasing number of very often sequestered spirits living in all gentleness and seclusion, who feel that he is not far off.' The correspondent adds: 'I am astonished that Dr. Ellicott should give publicity to such unhealthy views; views calculated to embarrass christian activity, discourage and repress christian enterprise and effort, and favor the adoption of seclusive habits, which seldom if ever produce a vigorous type of christian manhood, or nourish a symmetrical and useful type of christian character. . . .

What he considers a sign of the near approach of Christ's second advent, I look upon simply as an evidence of an ill instructed, irregular, unnatural, and morbidly sentimental type of piety, which it is the duty of the clergy to correct rather than encourage.'

This kind of language is very common, and serves to show how very different is the religious atmosphere in which we live, from that in which the apostles and early disciples lived. Then the hope of the Lord's coming was something very precious; it was continually in their thoughts, inspiring them to do and to suffer, and filling their hearts with serenity and peace. Waiting for him, they were in the world, and yet not of it; diligent, but calm; self-sacrificing, but patient. It was a type of piety that has so far passed away, that its occasional reappearance is only a matter of derision to the busy, bustling, superficial men, who stigmatize meditation as monkish, and can conceive of no christian life which does not take part in their self-devised and generally useless activities. Many men are restless, simply from want of faith; did they believe in the promise of the Lord as to his return, they would wait for him with the patience of hope and the zeal of love."

SAN FRANCISCO.

The meetings now in progress (Feb. 24th) in San Francisco continue to increase in interest. An old christian man, about eighty-two years of age, who has been serving the Lord sixty-five years, said in the meeting last evening, that the spirit of it was the best he had ever enjoyed in his whole life. We have great reason to praise the Lord for what he is doing. Five have been baptized, and others are expected to be buried with Christ in baptism next Sabbath.

Prejudice is giving way, and a goodly number from other churches are becoming much interested in the meetings, and take a part in the exercises. We are giving special prominence to the evidence that shows Christ is soon coming, and the importance of holiness of heart in order to be ready to meet him in peace; also the results of continuing in sin, showing that the "second death" must come upon all the finally impenitent; while the saints—holy ones—will have the kingdom and dominion "under the whole heaven." We find less opposition to these important truths than at any previous visit to this coast. Many who have been quite bitter against them, now begin to see and admire them, and are anxious to hear them preached. The church is much comforted with the present prospect. Pray for us. M. G.

PERSONAL.—We learn from Bro. W. Kelleway, 78 Newgate St., London, Eng., that he thinks of starting a penny weekly paper, for the purpose of scattering the light and truth in England, and other countries in Europe. Bro. K. is devoting his energies heartily to the service of Christ, and richly deserves the sympathy and co-operation of all the friends of Jesus. He has to meet strong opposition from the supporters of popular theology, who do not hesitate to crush out whatever rises up against their creeds, most of which are merely human productions. Bro. K. is anxious to obtain a quantity of tracts relating to the nature of man and the destiny of the wicked, to scatter among the people. We believe this would be a very successful way of reaching them. As Bro. K. has not the means to purchase them, will not some liberal souls send some money to the Crisis office for the purpose of furnishing Bro. Kelleway with a good supply of such tracts as he needs. We think money thus spent would result in great good. Shall Bro. K. be thus encouraged in his earnest struggles to spread the truth in England? Let there be a hearty, and immediate response, in order that the tracts may be sent as soon as possible to commence their important work of leading men from darkness to light on the great truths of the Bible. Let Bro. K. feel that he is not forgotten by his Brn. in America.
M. G.

THE NEXT POPE.

It is a question of much interest, Who will be the next Pope?" It is certain that Pius IX. cannot officiate much longer, as he is now in his eighty-third year. The future success of the Papal power depends much on the next Pope. Of course it is not certain that there will be another, but some change cannot be far in the distance. The following shows the drift of things connected with the Papal power: M. G.

"Prince Bismarck has doubtless his own idea as to who the new Pope is likely to be; and he is apparently fomenting the quarrel with the Catholic Church—which he himself originated—so that he may not be astonished, and that he may even seem to have some show of right on his side, if, on the result of the election, or rather appointment, being made known, Germany refuses to recognize it. Cardinal Lucien Bonaparte, Italian by birth and education, Italian, of course, by race, and entered as 'Italian' in the official list of Cardinals, is believed (as I have already written to you) to be the Cardinal already designated for succession to the Papal throne. This able and energetic prelate is not much heard of; but it appears that last Friday, at Rome, on the anniversary of Napoleon III.'s death, he celebrated five hundred masses for the good of the late Emperor's soul; as he was the hope of Bonapartism in the past, so, in connection with Rome, is he still its hope in the future.

Dates are sometimes very eloquent. Now it is a curious fact that Prince Bismarck has several times declared the end of the year of 1866 to be the particular period at which the Church of Rome, alarmed by the defeat of the great Catholic German power, resolved to do its utmost to break up North Germany and to prevent, at all events, the formation of a German Empire under the leadership of Prussia. Accordingly, at the earliest possible opportunity, in 1868, Monsignor Lucien Bonaparte, then only forty years of age, received a Cardinal's hat, and, if things had gone well with the Emperor Napoleon, then fifty-nine years of age, it might have been reserved for Europe to see the Bonapartist power represented, at the same time, in France by a Bonapartist Emperor; at Rome by a Bonapartist Pope. The war of 1870 seemed to have put an end forever to Bonapartism on the throne of France; but Lucien Bonaparte is still on the list of Cardinals, and with the changes constantly taking place, it is impossible to say in how short a time the reins of the government may not be in the hands of a Napoleon—either of the son, put forward by Bonapartist Ministers and Generals, or of the cousin, putting himself forward as the representative of extreme republicanism and Bonapartism combined.

No one of late has heard anything of Prince Napoleon—'Plon Plon' of other days—but he bides his time, and may be expected to come forward at the proper moment as a candidate for the Presidency of the French Republic, on Radical and Bonapartist principles—every thing to be done through the people by the Bonapartists, with Prince Napoleon at their head. There would not, perhaps, be much danger to Germany in that alone; but the danger would be considerable if, at the same time, a Bonaparte occupied the Papal chair. That is an eventuality against which Prince Bismarck is resolved, no doubt, to guard; but it is one which is possible, which is more than possible, and which has been spoken of in clerical society at Rome as a thing already decided upon. Under present circumstances, it could easily enough be brought about. It is believed to be, or rather to have been, a tradition in the Catholic Church that when a Pope had reigned twenty-five years—a term to which the reign of no Pope has extended since the pretended Papacy of St. Peter—he shall, as a matter of right and duty, do two things: declare himself infallible, and name his successor. Now, Cardinal Mastri-Ferretti ascended the Papal throne in 1846, as Pius IX. Consequently he was entitled and called upon in the year 1871 to perform the two important acts just specified. We know that he has performed the one, and there is good reason for believing that he has performed the other.

Whether the Pope has or has not designated Cardinal Prince Lucien Bonaparte as his successor, can, of course, only be known as a matter of certainty when the good old Pio Fono is no more. But he has, beyond doubt, named some one whom Prince Bismarck thinks he will have good reason for fearing, and some one who will feel himself bound to do all in his power to raise the church from its present depressed position."

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—Sister H. R. Wagg, of Yarmouth, Me., has suffered severely from distressing disease for twelve years, and desires to make an earnest request through the Crisis, that all the faithful in Christ would make her case a special subject of prayer, that God may raise her to health.

May God inspire all his children with a spirit of prayer for the sick and afflicted.

PRAYER TO THE DEVIL.—In our report of the discussion we had with Prof. W. Chaney, in San Jose, Cal., commencing Jan. 29th, 1874, we stated that he prayed to the devil, at the opening of the last evening's debate. We have been able to obtain a copy of the prayer, which was as follows:
M. G.

"O, Lucifer, bearer of Light! O, Belzebub, Lord of Scorpions! O, Belial, Lord of the Opposite! O, Baal Peor, Lord of the Opening! O, Hades, God of Orcus! O, Devil, Prince of Demons in the Christian Hell! O, thou Monarch of the Bottomless Pit! Thou King of Scorpions having stings in their tails, to whom it is given to hurt the earth for five months, I beseech thee to hear my prayer. Thou seest the terrible strait in which I am placed, matched in debate with one of the big guns of Christianity, with every advantage against me save that I have truth on my side. Thou knowest, Old Bull's Head, that, according to all history, thy reign has been most glorious and triumphant. Thou knowest, Old Cloven Foot, that by thy wondrous power thou hast, in all time, possessed the hearts of Christians with a mad fury, so that they have slaughtered more than seventy millions of men, women and children since the dawn of the present era. Remember, O, Prince of Brimstone, that when thou stretchest forth thine arm, the Christian's God cannot stand before thee for a moment. Therefore we beseech thee to stand by us on this occasion. Bless thy servant in his labors before thee. Fill his mouth with words of wisdom. Enable him to defend thee from the false charges about to be made against thy Sulphurous Majesty, and to triumph by truth and logic over his opponent, so that this audience may realize that thou art a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering Devil. Finally, when he has done and suffered thy will on this earth, receive him graciously into thy warm dominions, assign him plenty of brimstone, turn him often with thy fork, and roast him eternally. And thine shall be the kingdom, the power and the glory, worlds without end. Serenely thine,
'THE OLD PROFESSOR.'"

A SPEEDY COMING.

"Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."—HEB. 10 : 37.

"A little while," and the unquiet dream of life will be over, and the "morning without clouds" shall dawn. A few more tossings on life's tempestuous sea, and the peaceful haven shall be entered. A few more night-watches, and the Lord of love shall be seen standing on the heavenly shore, as once he did on the shores of an earthly lake, with an eternal banquet of love prepared for his children.

Yes! "He cometh!" that is the church's "blessed hope." It is the voice and presence of her "Beloved" which will "turn the shadow of death into the morning." The dead—the ransomed dead—shall hear his voice and come forth—those "asleep in Jesus" God is to "bring with him." His final invitation is not, "Go, ye blessed, to some bright paradise of angels prepared elsewhere for you"—but, "Come, share my bliss; be partakers in my crown;" "enter into the joy of thy Lord!" Paul's heaven was described in two words—"with Christ." John's heaven is made up of the two elements—of likeness to Jesus, and fellowship with Jesus. We shall be "like him," "we shall see him as he is." In his sublime apocalyptic visions, when "the door was opened in heaven," the first object which attracts his arrested gaze is "One who sat upon the throne," around whom was a "rainbow, in sight like unto an emerald." Rev. 4 : 2, 3.

Our happiness will not be complete till we are ushered into the full vision and fruition of Jesus. We are nourished in this far-off land from "the King's country;" but we shall not be satisfied until we see the King himself. Jacob received full wagon loads from Joseph but he could not rest till he had seen him with his own eyes. When he did so, the aged man's spirit "revived." We receive manifold pledges of covenant mercy from the true Joseph in this "the house of our pilgrimage;" but we long to "behold his face in righteousness." We shall only be "satisfied when we awake in his likeness."

"Come! Lord Jesus, come quickly." He will not tarry!" Each sun as it sets is bringing us nearer the joyful consummation. Time is hastening with gigantic footsteps to the advent throne. The sackcloth attire of a now burdened creation will soon be exchanged for the full robe of light and beauty which is to deck a "Sabbath world."

Happy day! when "the Bow," in a nobler sense, "shall be seen in the cloud"—not the bow of promise, but He in whom all the promises blend and center. Behold HE cometh with clouds. Seek ever to be in an attitude of watchfulness. Like the mother of Sisera, let faith be straining its ear for the murmur of the chariot wheels, that when the cry shall be heard—"Behold, it is HE!" we may be able joyfully to respond—"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him!" "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching. Verily I say unto you, That he shall gird himself and make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them."—John R. Macduff.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM BRO. T. J. GREEN.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dearly beloved Brethren:—The time has arrived when I should give account of my stewardship. I am sorry I have done no more for the cause, but happy to say I have done all I could. The good Lord has been with me and blessed my feeble efforts beyond my expectation. Although at some places there appears to be but little advancement, yet at others the progress is onward and upward; while the cry is heard from others, "Come over and help us." It really appears my duty to leave some of the places where I have been preaching, to meet the very urgent calls from new fields. They must have this gospel of the kingdom preached to them, and who is to do it? Most gladly I will go, but alas! for the little lambs scattered abroad. Who will give them meat in due season?

O, that the Lord would send more laborers in this southern part of his vineyard! for the harvest is fully ripe. We want men of courage, whose all is on the altar. No hot house plants of divinity, which cannot thrive in the cold atmosphere of the world of crime and wickedness, wanted; but men with the woe upon them. The time has come when men will not endure sound doctrine, and some of the Lord's professed servants appear to shrink back at the bitter scoffs they receive, and do not like to preach a doctrine so much hated, because they cannot obtain rich salaries thereby. But if we were of the world, the world would love its own. Let us arise and buckle on the whole armor, and press onward; the conflict will be severe, but cannot last long; for Jesus, our captain, is soon coming to crown us with victory.

I have baptized a few this quarter, and organized one church at Olustee, with seventeen members, some of whom are the most prominent citizens of the place. They appear determined on success. I have been with them in social meetings, and felt that it was good to be there. We are trying to get up a Sabbath School at Olustee, but suitable books are much needed.

I have been requested, and intend to preach at St. Mary's river, and at Brandy Branch, Nausau Co., next month, the Lord willing. I have also been solicited to go to Gillisonville, S. C., but have not the means to pay my travelling expenses. O, may the good Lord enable me to go and tell those dear people about the kingdom soon to be set up.

I preached in Jacksonville, Fla., last month a few times, to very attentive hearers. The Brn. and Srs. helped me after a godly sort. May the Lord reward them abundantly. I was with them in their social meetings and we felt the blessing of the Lord upon us. May our God abundantly bless you all who have so nobly contributed to the wants of my family. The Lord has given help thus far, and will continue to bestow as our days may demand. May I obtain more and more of his grace to preach the Word, so that when he shall come in his kingdom we may obtain an abundant entrance.

Olustee, Baker Co., Fla.

FROM R. SCARBOROUGH.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—Yesterday was the greatest day we have had since our dear Bro. Bowman left us. Your letter and all the tracts came safe to hand. Mr. Scarborough was at the office when they came; and such a demand was made for them that half were taken before he left. He came home, and oh, the joy I felt at seeing so many. "Why," said he, "I have given half away." I called in four sisters of like precious faith, and by the time we had each selected for ourselves and friends, nearly all were taken. Beside these, I have received a large package from some friend in Carolina. I never knew before the power of tracts. Bro. Bowman has done more good and caused more reading here than all the preaching that has ever been in this place. We had a reading meeting last night, and to-night we are going to carry our tracts to prayer-meeting, and read publicly, so as to get as much good as possible from them. We thank you with all our hearts for them, and hope to thank with our purse ere long. Hope you have received the four dollars I sent three weeks ago for the Crisis.

TRUTH—the open, bold, honest truth—is always the wisest, always the safest for every one, in any and all circumstances.

Correspondence.

From Bro. D. Eastman.

As some of my friends are anxious to know where I am, and what I am doing, I send this letter as an easy way of answering all. I came to Spring Creek about the 29th of Jan. Was not very well for some three weeks, as the climate is so different from that of New Hampshire. I am better now, and have preached most every Sabbath since I came here; also some evenings during the week. The Advent people are laboring under a great disadvantage in Spring Creek. They are building a union house; and if they can dedicate it to God, and keep out the buyers and sellers, they will do well. I preached some three or four times in their old house, and the last evening it was so crowded we came near all going down together. The floor settled some two inches. The Lord blessed the Word, though some thought it a great heresy to preach a literal resurrection, as they supposed they were resurrected at death. I am now waiting for them to finish their church, and then I return to baptize a few who are not disposed to climb up some other way.

Feb. 13th I traveled eighteen or twenty miles to Lincolnville. Found a home with Bro. J. K. Wheeler, who received me courteously. His heart is always open to entertain strangers. May God bless them with a crown of eternal life. Feb. 20th came to Rootville; called at the house of J. T. Ongley, but Bro. O. was gone. We next visited Bro. Buzzell. Found a home indeed. Bro. B. is a faithful laborer. His whole heart is in the work. I preached two evenings in Rootville, and trust it will result in good. They have a live church, and I heard many cheering exhortations. Bro. Buzzell is their pastor. Sabbath morning, 22nd, we started for Athens Corner, four miles away, to preach in a new school-house, and when we arrived they were all seated ready to hear. Some had come some distance, through the mud, to hear the Word of the Lord. To our surprise one of the school directors came and forbade our speaking in the house. Said if we did so we did it at our peril. Bro. B. and myself had seen such attacks before, therefore were not alarmed. We sang a hymn, and Bro. B. led in prayer, after which I spake from 1 Cor. 9 : 16, and felt great liberty. We gave out the appointment for the evening at Bro. Southworth's. Bro. B. preached. We had a good meeting, and held them every evening up to Friday. Three started for the kingdom, and more we trust will start soon. To God be all the glory.

I understood yesterday they were making out the papers to carry us to Meadville jail. I am willing to have the will of the Lord done. I can pray in jail as well as out of it; and if we go it is for some good. I thank God that our weapons are not carnal.

Dear brethren, when it is well with you, in your snug little homes in New Hampshire and Canada, remember me in western Pa., for God sent me here rather than to Canada. My dear family I want to see, but God will take care of them. Pray for me.

Athens, Crawford Co., Pa., Feb. 27th.

From Bro. I. K. Lombard.

I was glad to notice your call in a late number of the Crisis for brethren to report their labors and write short letters on experience. I have often compared my satisfaction in reading a number of such communications in a single copy of the paper to the enjoyment of a good lively prayer-meeting. They give a freshness and spiritual tone to the paper which we do not get from doctrinal articles, whether long or short. Some do not have any meetings but the weekly visits of the Crisis. To such these testimonies will prove a real refreshing; and they will doubtless be useful to all who belong to the household of the waiting ones.

I am glad the evidences are accumulating that the old clock of time will soon strike her last solemn hour. How many hearts will hear it as a glad sound. Long have we watched and yearned for the end of earth's night of weeping; and many are the hearts that will thrill with joy at the sound, "It is done." The buffetings and sorrows of earth have spoiled us for happiness here, except in the hope of an early release from these scenes; and we often sigh, "When will He come?"

I love to dwell upon "the blessed hope," and invite others to come and share it with us. I have lately seen several start in the Lord's service under my labors. I have been in what are called "hard fields" the present and last winters, and sometimes I have felt almost ready to give up; but I now see the bread "cast upon the waters" "come again"; and it is none the less gratifying to behold it, though it be "after many days."

I find a deep interest in several localities to hear the Word, and a disposition to examine it, with a desire to know its teachings. As a class, those who profess religion are the most indifferent, while Universalists and those without a position are the most deeply interested. However, some professors of religion share in the interest, and in the general conviction that "these things are so." The Lord has put his hand to the work, and my heart goes out with unusual ardor in preparing a people for the coming of the Lord. They are taken from among men found in nature's ways, but the Lord knows how to give them a divine polish.

Burke, Vt., March 2nd, 1874.

From Bro. E. A. Boynton.

Dear Readers of the Crisis:—As Bro. Couch requests the brethren and sisters to write short letters for the paper, I thought I would be one to respond. I am also trying to persuade wife and mother to do the same; and although they pleaded want of ability, I guess they will conclude to make the trial before long. I believe there are many who never write for publication, who might add much to the interest of the paper by writing briefly their experience and views. They need not attempt to do something extra, but just write out their thoughts in an easy, natural way, as though they were writing to a friend.

I have been deeply interested for some months past in what has been said through the Crisis on the subject of perfect holiness. I am now convinced that it is a Bible doctrine; and although I have not yet attained to this high and happy state of christian experience, I earnestly desire to do so. I was also very much interested in the account of those union meetings held last summer for the promotion of holiness. I think that Bro. Grant has advanced the idea that perhaps this doctrine of christian perfection, and the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ, will be the means of uniting all God's people before the great day of the Lord shall come. It seems as though the most devoted christians of different denominations were already being drawn together by these doctrines. There are a very few in this place who really love the Lord; and although we differ on some doctrinal points, we love to meet together to talk of heavenly things, and to pray and praise in company.

St. John's, Mich.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Banton writes from Raymond, Iowa: "About the first of this month, Bro. J. W. Burroughs, of New Hartford, came here to hold a series of meetings. The people, being much prejudiced against what is called Second Adventism, were slow to hear, and our first meeting consisted of eight adults and two children. Nearly a week passed before much interest was manifested. After that we had a good congregation and attentive listeners. Bro. Burroughs preached upon such subjects as the following: 'The nature of man,' 'The resurrection,' 'The saints' inheritance,' 'Who shall abide eternal burnings?' and others of the same nature. His zeal was combined with knowledge. The glorious truths of Holy Writ were brought out in such a plain and comprehensive manner that many exclaimed, Why, a child can understand such reasoning as that! Bless God, some that heard listened with open ears and honest hearts, and at the close of the meetings, which lasted about two weeks, a class was formed of forty-one members, a good share of whom once knew the Lord, and had again become entangled in the wiles of Satan. Among them are about a dozen of the most reliable men in this vicinity. They are now all reading and preaching, and wondering that they never saw these truths before.

I hope the good Lord will fill their cups full to overflowing, and keep them in the way of all truth. One of the most prominent ones has been theoretically convinced for several years of these truths, but never felt like taking up the cross until he heard Bro. Burroughs preach. When once he heard, like others, he could not stay away until his burden was cast upon the Lord and he declared himself a free man in Christ Jesus; and now, like Bro. J. Davis of Brockport, he gives to each one of his patrons a little gospel in each bundle of goods.

Pray for the little flock in this place."

Bro. S. Ayers writes from Hardwick, Ms.: "We have just closed our meetings in this place, having held them over three Sundays and evenings. God has been with us. Our meetings have continued with good interest on the part of the few brethren and sisters here, and increased the interest on the part of unbelievers. Last evening the house was completely filled. It was a solemn time. The Spirit of the Lord was with us while we preached Christ and the resurrection. Some rejoiced, and others wept and trembled. Several rose for prayers. Some said there was time enough yet. May God have mercy upon them. Some have been blessed and restored to favor with God. We have scattered tracts and papers freely. To God alone the real good that has been done is known, and to his name be all the glory.

Some of the brethren and sisters from the Methodist praying band of Wales came up, and rendered us efficient help. This company is not prejudiced against us, but are favorable towards the doctrine that we preach. May God bless and prosper them in the mission work.

We had word brought to us yesterday from Enfield that the Town Hall has been freely offered us for meetings, and the people want to hear from the Scriptures of truth. Pray for us, brethren and sisters, that we may not be bound, but that the Word may have free course, God be glorified, souls brought to Christ, backsliders reclaimed, and the hearts of all the good made glad."

Bro. H. S. Mitchell writes:—"Sinners, think for a moment of the horrors of the judgment. What pencil can paint or what pen describe them? O, who can dwell with devouring fire? Death is rapidly approaching. Perhaps this night you will close your eyes to awake to the solemn scenes of the judgment. How many of your companions have suddenly gone down to the grave. My dear friends, the day of the Lord is at hand. Soon the loud trump of the archangel will awaken the sleeping dead, and you, if among them, will come forth to the resurrection of life or the resurrection of damnation. Then the Savior, whom you have loved or despised, will appear in the clouds of heaven to give to every one according as his work shall be. Before him you must stand with assembled millions, while he bids you depart, or welcomes you to his kingdom. Signs show that he is at the door. Sinner, escape for thy life! Call upon him while there is opportunity. May you say with the poet—

'Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee.'

Arise and go to Jesus. Go to him a humble beggar. Go penitent and believing. None such were ever sent away. Delay a little longer and you are lost—lost forever."

C. E. H. writes:—"Sr. L. E. Saulpaugh, by request of the church here (E. Rochester, N. H.), has been laboring with us in a series of evening meetings, which we trust have not been altogether in vain. The word preached has been attended with the power of God. From the opening to the closing of the effort the tide of religious interest, under God, has been constantly increasing. Some have signified their desire and determination to arise and return to Father's house; others seem to express anxiety, and I doubt not that if proper encouragement is given them, they will avail themselves of the opportunity to prepare to meet the Lord when he comes, and reign with him eternally in the kingdom. Pray for us."

A. Beardsley writes:—"I am among the few that are trying to walk in the narrow way to life. I believe I have experienced the gift of the Spirit, and rejoice in prospect of soon seeing Jesus coming personally to reign. When I awake, my first thoughts are of Jesus and his precious Word. I never saw the Bible so interesting, beautiful and glorious as it appears now. I am glad the time is coming when there will be no more death, pain, sorrow, nor crying. I have the Crisis regularly. I think it is one of the best papers I ever read, and expect it will improve. I hope to see more short letters from brethren and sisters. I like to compare my experience with others. I desire to know what the Lord requires of me, and am striving to please him in everything. I like to search the Word of the Lord."

Bro. E. Daggett, Sibley, Iowa, writes:—"I feel my inability to write for our beloved paper, but wish to express my gratitude to my heavenly Father for his mercy and favor bestowed upon me through friends in Bloomfield, Morrow Co., Ohio. Brethren and sisters, let us pray for these kind friends, that they may join that company that shall go out to meet our Savior when he comes, and then we can express our thanks in a better manner. There will be no famine there. Let us all be faithful a little longer, and the struggle will be over. I hope soon to meet my christian friends where tears will be wiped away from all faces."

Obituaries.

Sibley. In Charlestown, Mass., Feb. 4th, 1874, John H., son of Mark N. and Mahitable H. Sibley, of Wakefield, N. H., aged thirty-five years.

He was prostrated with pneumonia for a few days only, and suddenly bade adieu to all things earthly, and fell asleep in death's cold embrace. He leaves a wife, four lovely children, father, mother, brothers, sisters and others, to mourn. May this afflictive dispensation be sanctified to the good of this mourning circle. The funeral services were held in Wakefield, N. H., where he was taken for interment. Eld. Jos. Spinney preached a funeral sermon from Isa. 40: 6-8, to the satisfaction of those who were present. May the God of the widow and fatherless be near the bereaved family.

A. W. Sibley.

Baker. In Sandy Hill, N. Y., Feb. 24th, 1874, Sr. Keziah Baker, aged seventy-four years.

She died as she lived—a christian, expecting her reward at the resurrection. Funeral service was attended by the writer. A. W. Sibley.

Kenny. In Strafford, N. H., Feb. 22d, 1874, Susan Kenny, aged thirty-six years.

Sister Kenny was converted among the Free Will Baptists, but subsequently accepted the Advent faith. She lived a useful life, having taught school about twelve years. Funeral service by the writer, assisted by Eld. J. G. Smith.

John Parsons.

Marden. In Epsom, Jan. 11th, 1874, Lydia H., wife of Jonathan Marden, in the eightieth year of her age.

Sister Marden sought the Lord in early life. She loved prayer meetings, which have been held at their house for twenty years. J. Parsons.

James. In Deerfield, Jan. 15th, 1874, Dorothy W., wife of Timothy B. James, aged sixty five years.

Sister James gave her heart to the Lord at the age of thirteen, and has since lived a christian life.

J. Parsons.

Lee. In Salem, Mass., Jan. 26th, 1874, Thomas A. Lee, aged sixty-five years.

Bro. Lee leaves a wife and children, with other relatives to mourn. But they sorrow not as those that have no hope; for they trust that when the trump of God shall sound, he, with all the sleeping saints, will come forth to die no more.

S. S. Mooney.

Lord. In Rome, Me., Feb. 18th, 1874, Sr. Hannah, wife of Willard Lord, aged thirty-nine years.

Sr. Lord embraced the blessed hope little more than a year ago, and lived a consistent christian. She rests in hope of life at the coming of Jesus. May the husband and children who now mourn her loss, be prepared to meet her where no death will come, or family ties be severed.

H. B. Sevey.

Waterfield. At Raymond, Iowa, Feb. 8th, 1874, H. D. Waterfield, eldest son of Wm. Waterfield, aged twenty-one years.

Sermon by the writer, from Acts 26: 8.

WASHBURN—KINNEY. At Massena, N. Y., Feb. 19th, 1874, by Eld. C. Pike, Mr. George C. Washburn, of Guildhill, Vt., and Miss Arvilla R. Kinney, of Massena, N. Y.

CAMERON—MORSE. At Hatley, P. Q., Feb. 19th, 1874, by Elder C. P. Dow, Daniel H. Cameron, of Norton's Mills, Vt., and Rosa E. Morse, of Hatley.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Feb. 26. The weather is very tempestuous to-day in Great Britain and on the coast. Communication by telegraph between London and various places is interrupted, and much damage has been done to shipping.

March 2. The barque Grace Darling went ashore on the Scottish coast, near Aberdeen, during the late gales and became a wreck. The crew took to the rigging, but fifteen were washed off and drowned before help was sent. Four men belonging to the life saving station also lost their lives by the swamping of their boat.

A despatch from Bayonne, France, says five thousand Republicans, who were encamped near the village of Sommorrestro, fifteen miles northwest of Bilboa, were surprised by the Carlists and a bloody engagement took place, in which one thousand Republicans were killed; the remainder took flight and were closely pursued by the Royalists. All of them were either captured or drowned in an attempt to cross a river in the way of their retreat.

A boiler explosion at Blackburn, Lancashire, instantly killed twenty persons and seriously injured thirty more.

Queen Victoria and her Ministers have sent despatches to General Sir Garnet Wolseley, congratulating him on his success.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are in Berlin. The Duke of Edinburgh and bride have left St. Petersburg for England.

Bayonne, March 2. A dispatch has been received by the Carlist Junta here reporting that Bilboa had surrendered to the Royalists. It is said that one church, several banks and seventeen private houses were destroyed by the bombardment.

Madrid, March 2. General Loma's force will embark at San Sebastian for Santander, where it will be joined with the troops under Moriones.

March 4. The aggressive movements of the Carlists has aroused the people to aid the Government to crush the insurrection.

Contributions of money and clothing are pouring in, and all the theatres in this city are giving performances. Telegrams from the provincial authorities offer material support.

The latest advices from Bilboa report no change. The Carlists keep up the bombardment. About two hundred shells are thrown into the city daily.

Havana, March 4. Several telegrams have been received here by private parties reporting that ex-President Cespedes was killed by the San Quentin battalion and his body brought to Santiago de Cuba, where it was recognized, after which it was burned in that city.

A strong shock of earthquake was felt at Copiapo, Chili, on the 15th ult. The Chilian volcano has opened a crata on its eastern side, and made the winds blowing from that quarter insufferably hot, the thermometer rising as high as twenty-eight degrees centigrade.

It is reported in Hong Kong that the Chinese Government has notified the foreign residents of Pekin that it cannot guarantee the safety of the lives of foreigners residing at Tientsin, and that the naval authorities here have been requested to send war vessels to Tientsin to ensure their protection.

Famine in India.—The brief telegram which announced yesterday that the villagers of Eastern Tirhoot are slowly starving to death, shows that the terrible swoop of famine has at length descended upon Bengal. To realize what famine means in a district like Tirhoot, take the following details about it: It has an area of 6,343 square miles—or about one-fifth less than the State of Massachusetts. It has a population of 4,384,000—or just about equal to the population of this State, and these people cover the soil in the proportion of seven hundred to the square mile. Let famine once get hold of this dense mass of human beings, and it is inevitable that pestilence should come in its train.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, March 3. This forenoon two well-dressed men were walking together on Prince street. One stepped behind and discharged a pistol at the back of his companion, who reeled into the gutter, gave a few convulsions, gasped and expired. A moment afterward the murderer placed the muzzle at his own head and pulled the trigger. He dropped to the sidewalk a corpse. The bodies were taken care of by the police. Their names are yet unknown.

Lewiston, Me., March 3. Tuesday morning Valentine Howard, aged seventy years, who has been suffering for some time from nervous disease, committed suicide by hanging.

Ottawa, Ontario, March 3. Last evening, while Cyrille Bertrand, his wife and daughter, Mrs. Joseph Morrison, were being driven across the river by a carter, the ice gave way, and, with the exception of Mr. Bertrand, all were carried away and drowned. The body of Mrs. Morrison was recovered to-day.

Fires.—Our exchanges for the week give us the account of fires at the following places: Balsto, N. J., loss $80,000. Portsmouth, O., $50,000. East Boston, Mass., $200,000. Jersey City, one man burned to death. Phila., Pa., $25,000; Taunton, Mass., $4,000. Montreal, $81,000; one man burned to death. Valparaiso, Ind., "the loss is heavy." Petersburg, Va., "total loss quite heavy." St. Louis, Mo., loss $117,000. Kansas City, loss $20,000. Warren, Mass. Several fires have occurred in Boston.

The following is an estimate of the loss by fire in New England during February: Massachusetts, $278,320; Rhode Island, $624,400; Connecticut, $79,500; Vermont, $35,000; Maine, $19,800; New Hampshire, $9,030; total, $1,046,050. The loss in Massachusetts alone during the month of January, 1874, was $1,408,425.

In Brief.

— The receipts for fares on the railways in India are falling off this year, and the fact is accounted for by this being a "twelfth year," a year regarded by the Hindoos as unfavorable to marriage. Accordingly there are few if any marriages among the Hindoos, and as they always make a wedding an occasion of great ceremony, necessitating considerable travel, the railways feel it.

— A dispatch from Portland, Oregon, says the horse and cattle disease has broken out in Baker county, Oregon, and is spreading extensively, with very fatal effects.

— A little girl in London, only ten years of age, recently witnessed a young woman's attempt so drown herself in a canal. Procuring a plank, she jumped into a boat, reached the would-be suicide, and, balancing the craft with the plank, held the woman above water by the hair full fifteen minutes, until aid arrived and completed her brave undertaking.

—William Nesbet was killed, his wife struck blind, and his children thrown out of a wagon, at Kokomo, Ind., on Wednesday by a stroke of lightning.

— A lad in Crawfordshire, Indiana, was about to be arrested for theft when his mother, asserting his innocence, begged the officers not to arrest him. They agreed to take him to a man who could identify the culprit, and to return him at once if he proved not to be the boy. Assured of the lad's innocence they took him home again, but the mother had died of excessive grief at her son's supposed disgrace.

— The Charlestown District has been the scene of another shocking tragedy. James Dwight shot William McLaughlin, and afterward attempted to take his own life but failed. At midnight McLaughlin was not expected to live.

— Ex-President Fillmore is dead.

Notices.

Alton Bay.—The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet at the Crisis Office, Boston, Mass., Monday, March 30th, 11 o'clock A. M. J. Couch, Chairman.

Alton Bay Campmeeting.—The Campmeeting at Alton Bay will commence Aug. 22nd, and hold over Sabbath, Aug. 30th. J. Couch.

Mission Tent.—There has been a call for subscriptions to furnish a Mission Tent. The old Mission and the Mass. Conference Tent have both been worn out in the service. The time will soon come for Tent meetings, which is one of the best, if not the very best way to reach the people. The cause demands double the sacrifice and effort to enlighten and save that we are making. Shall we want for a Tent? Shall we want means and men to make an onward movement to save men by pulling them out of the fire of the last day? Brethren, help us to a Tent.

L. Boutell.

The Yearly Conference.—Where shall it be? It is the Annual Meeting of the Mass. Conference. We desire the largest gathering we have ever had. The times demand it. Our interests call for it. The first week in April is the time for it. Who will make preparation for a large meeting and a great blessing? Who? L. Boutell.

Acknowledgment.—For Sr. L. B. Weaver—Sr. S. P. Eldredge, $10.00. John Lyle, $1.00.

Geo. T. Adams.

Conference Notice.—The annual session of the Mass. Advent Christian Conference will be held at Worcester, Mass., with the Advent Christian Church, commencing on Tuesday evening, March 31st, to continue over the following Sunday. The first business session will be held on Wednesday, April 1st. It is desired that our churches throughout the State be as largely represented by delegates as possible.

C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

Lectures in Charlestown, Mass.—By request, the undersigned will deliver a series of lectures at Mystic Hall, on Main street, on the Nature and Destiny of Man, commencing on Tuesday evening, March 10th, and continuing every evening but Saturdays and Mondays until Sunday, March 22d. F. H. Burbank.

Conference.—The Delaware Dist. A. C. Conference is hereby called to meet, and hold its annual session at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, Phil., Pa., commencing Thursday morning, April 9th, at ten o'clock A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. The morning meetings will be for the transaction of business; the afternoon and evening, for preaching and other devotional exercises.

This is our annual meeting to hear the reports of all our preachers, officers, committees, and delegates for the last year;—the progress, spread, and triumph of Bible truth, by the word of mouth, by the aid of religious papers, tracts, and pamphlets, and by every other gospel means; to learn by reports the amount of monies received and paid out, for the purchase and distribution of publications. All the officers for the year ensuing will be chosen at this session.

This Conference embraces the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Penn. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathizing with us will be represented either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this Conference is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the Conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

H. K. Flagg, President.
Edwin King, Secretary.

Conference.—The Third Session of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of North West Kansas will be held with the church of Athens, Jewel Co., commencing Friday evening, March 27th, and continuing over the Sunday following. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to meet with us, and will be heartily welcomed by the friends at Athens.

E. N. Bliss, President.
J. S. Thorp, Secretary.

There will be a series of meetings on Britton Hill, Hebron, Me., commencing Thursday evening, March 26th, and hold over the Sabbath, and as much longer as the Lord may direct. Come, brethren and sisters, to work for the Lord.

In behalf of the church, Thomas Rines.

Kansas Conference.—The Annual Session of the Advent Christian Conference of Kansas will be held, the Lord willing, at Melvern, Osage Co., Kan., commencing Friday, May 15th, 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the following Lord's day, or as long as the brethren may determine.

Those coming by rail from the North will stop at Arvonia Station, and those from the South at Burlington, where teams will be in readiness to convey them to the ground where the Mission Tent will be pitched, if they write to Eld. J. C. Smith, Arvonia, Osage Co., Kan., in time. Reports from the churches should be made up to and including the 18th of April, 1874 (By-laws, Art. 8, Sec. 1), and forwarded by mail to the Secretary, care of Eld. Smith as above, or sent with the delegates. Let all who "wait for the Lord" and are "looking for that blessed hope" lay aside their secular affairs, and join with the "children of God" in their yearly feast of fat things. By order of the Directors,

Amos Sanford, Secretary.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held in Rome, Town House, commencing Thursday evening, March 19th, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and labor with us for the upbuilding of the church and the salvation of sinners; also it is hoped our preaching brethren will make an effort to be at this meeting. Provision will be made for all, both man and beast. Those coming from abroad will call on David Watson, N. P. Martin, Amaziah Tracy, John Fletcher, and others. For the church,

H. B. Sevey.
W. A. Knight, Sec.

Dedication.—The new Advent Chapel in Mercer, Me., will be dedicated on Sunday, March 15th, 10½ o'clock A. M. Sermon by Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell. Other preaching brethren will be present. Meetings will be continued as long as the Lord may direct. Provision will be made for all who may come to work for the Lord.

In behalf of the brethren, Thomas Rines.

The Advent Church in Keene, N. H., having unanimously chosen Elder M. A. Potter Pastor, would give notice that all communications in reference to preaching, and all matters concerning the church, should be addressed to him.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Wishing to move our office on the first of May next, to less expensive rooms, and having several thousand back numbers of the Bible Banner on hand, which we do not wish to move, we make the following liberal offers:—

We will send one or more copies of back numbers of the Bible Banner in neat wrappers post-paid, to any address for two cents per copy. This is a small part of the cost; for we have to pay postage, find wrappers, and hire them wrapped and mailed; but we believe great good can be done if each of our readers will send us ten to fifty addresses of persons who they think would be benefitted by receiving a copy of the Bible Banner, enclosing two cents for each address. A friend of ours called at this office a few months since, and gave us a score or two of addresses, with two or three cents per copy for postage, etc., and we have been greatly surprised at the result. Unfortunately, however, in a financial point of view, for us, this brother selected a large number of ministers of the gospel, many of whom accepted our "year-free" offer. Hence we ask our readers to send us a large proportion of those who will be likely to subscribe. Reader, if you respond, please do so at once, and address,

"THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED:

OR, AN EXPOSITION OF THE

WOMAN AND THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST

In the 17th Chapter of Revelation.

SHOWING WE ARE NEAR THE END OF THE PRESENT DISPENSATION."

BY MILES GRANT.

This valuable and interesting tract is now ready, and for sale at this Office. Price by mail, single copy, 8 cts; four copies for 25 cts.; per dozen, 75 cts. Ag't.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

RE-PRINTED

ELDER S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's pamphlets have had a wide circulation, and have accomplished much good. They were out of print, and yet in constant demand. Bro. B. was too aged and feeble to engage in getting out more. We have undertaken it, and have just re-printed several thousands, and others are in press. There are thousands of readers who will want them when they know what they are.

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun, Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena, illustrated with splendid cuts. 216 pp.; 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

This is the most important work we have ever had on this subject. It is revised and enlarged. In fact, we have no other giving the light needed on those symbols. The leopard beast, the seven heads, the two-horned beast, are illustrated with excellent cuts. Price 25 cts.

"The History of an Immortal Soul."

This is a work of the history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts.

"The Seven Seals"

is also a very important work for all Bible readers. 15 cts.

"Slaying of the Witnesses"

I regard worth a dollar to a Bible student. 10 cts.

Sold at the Crisis Office. I. C. Wellcome.

We give a few testimonials:—

"Bro. Brewer's Works.—I regard the 'Last Day Tokens,' the 'Exposition of Rev. 13th,' and the 'Slaying of the two Witnesses,' as great helps to the Bible student, as also instructive and enlightening to all new beginners, and I recommend them to all lovers of prophetical subjects. The 'History of an Immortal Soul' is an excellent work for all. I am glad to learn the new editions of these excellent works are issued."—C. W. Sargent.

Another says: "I am glad indeed that Bro. Brewer's expository works on the 'Signs of the Times,' and on Rev. 6th—'The Seals,' 8th and 9th—the 'Woe Trumpets,' the 11th on the 'Two Witnesses,' and the 13th on the 'Beasts,' are now being republished. These pamphlets contain more real historic facts and Bible ideas than any other works ever circulated among Adventists on Revelation."—W. M. P.

From Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell.—"Bro. Brewer's works I think valuable. The work on 'Papal Rome' I have not yet examined, but from what I have seen of the MS. I think it will be instructive and profitable. You can see by what I have written that I think highly of his other works already published."—Wm. H. Mitchell, Kennebunk, Me.

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.,

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul.—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

LET ME GO.

DON CARLOS.

Let me go where saints are going,
To the mansions of the blest;
Let me go where my Redeemer
Has prepared a heavenly rest.
I would gain the realms of glory,
Where they go out never more;
Let me join the friends that wait me
Over on the other shore.

Let me go, why should I tarry?
What has earth to bind me here?
What but care and toil and sorrow?
What but pain and death and fear?
Let me go, for hopes most cherished,
Blasted, round me often lie;
O I've gathered brightest flowers,
But to see them fade and die.

Let me go where tears and sighing
Are forevermore unknown;
Where the angels' harps of glory
Call me to a happier home.
Let me go, for bliss eternal
Lures my soul away, away,
And the victor's song triumphant,
Thrills my heart,—I cannot stay.

Let me go, there is a glory
That my soul doth long to know;
I am thirsting for the waters
That from crystal fountains flow.
There is where the angels tarry,
Where the saved forever throng;
There the brightness wearies never,
There I'll sing redemption's song.

Let me go, O speed my journey,
Saints and seraphs lure away;
O I almost feel the rapture
That makes up their endless day.
Oft methinks I hear the singing
That is only heard above;
Let me go, O speed my going!
Let me go where all is love.

"THE JUDGMENT SHALL SIT."

Dan. 7: 26.

J. S. WHITE.

Is there more than one judgment brought to view in this chapter? Daniel, in his vision, said—"I beheld till . . . the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Ver. 10. "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Ver. 22.

The horn power was to make war on the saints until the judgment shall sit, and the books shall be opened, and until judgment shall be given to the saints, and the time come that they take the kingdom. Daniel saw the horn prevailing until the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. It is evident that the judgment in both places of which Daniel spake is the same, or at the same time; or, in other words, he saw but one judgment. The angel, while showing Daniel the meaning of the vision, said, "He [the horn] shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High. . . . But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

Are we to suppose that the angel meant one thing, and Daniel another? If he did not mean by the judgment what Daniel saw in his vision, how did he explain it to him? It seems to me impossible that the angel could refer to any other judgment than that which Daniel saw in the vision. It is the judgment in the vision, and the judgment in the explanation. "The judgment shall sit, and they [the saints] shall take away his dominion." The saints are to possess the kingdom. The kingdom and dominion are to be given to the saints. They will take it when the judgment sits. The horn will make war on them until the time come that they take the kingdom. Then judgment will be given to the saints, and the judgment executed on the horn.

Papacy had power and dominion long before it had civil power. It had no civil power till A. D. 754. The Popes have held this power from that time down to 1870. Papacy still lives, and will live until the judgment sits, and Christ gives the whole dominion of that power to the saints, and until the saints take the kingdom.

We have been told recently that there is no antecedent in the book of Daniel for the word they in verse 26; and that we are to go to the last book of the Bible to find the antecedent. If this be true, how did the angel make Daniel understand the vision which he was told to do? The angel used the word they, but he did not refer to anything in Daniel's prophecy, but to something that John would speak of five hundred years afterwards. If this be true, we have a new feature in the use of words. I have supposed that an antecedent was something that went before the word that referred to it. In some cases, it is true that the pronoun is placed before the noun to which it refers; as, "you Jews," "I Paul." But in all such cases the name which is the antecedent of the pronoun immediately follows in such a way as to leave no chance to mistake its meaning. This is a change in the order of the words, without changing their meaning. Are we to suppose that God ordered the entire book of Daniel to be written out in full, all that should be said in it, and ordered the angel to make the prophet understand his vision; in doing which the angel used the pronoun they, and at the same time there is no word in the entire book to which the word refers? Suppose a teacher in grammar should give to his class the seventh of Daniel for a lesson, and when they came to the word they, in the 26th verse, he should tell them that the word had no antecedent in the entire book, but they would find it in the revelations of John, in a book written several hundred years later.

The antecedent of this word could not have been more plainly stated than it is in this prophecy. The saints are to take the kingdom and possess the kingdom. "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints." This includes the dominion of the little horn. The horn power is to make war with the saints until the time comes for them to take the kingdom. At that time the judgment will sit, and Christ the Judge will give the dominion to the saints, and they will take it. Thus the dominion of the power that has made war upon the saints is to be taken away by the saints. Nothing in the prophecy is more plainly stated than this. The angel was capable of making the subject plain, and was told to make Daniel understand it. But if that which is to take away the dominion of the horn is not referred to by the angel, or, if the antecedent of the word they is not in the book of Daniel, the angel left this part of the subject in entire darkness to the prophet, and to everybody else. It is not so. The antecedent is plainly stated. The horn will continue to make war with the saints until the time comes for the saints to take the kingdom and dominion. At that time the Lord, the Judge, will come, and give the dominion of the horn to the saints, and they will take it away. Then follows the consumption, destruction and end of the saints' persecutors.

ARE HOLY ANGELS A PART OF THE CHURCH?

E. MUNGER.

But few of us realize that this higher order of beings are servants of God and his church on earth, until we search the Scriptures on this point. We find them represented as being numerous, and all interested in the redemption of fallen man and the earth. It seems their offices differ. Some for instructing God's people, others to execute God's judgments on the wicked. They act as express messengers from the throne of a holy God to mortal man. Their first act of mercy was in the garden—keeping man from getting eternal life while in sin. They instructed and led God's people through the Red Sea, and through the wilderness. They accompanied Moses at the burning bush, on the mount, and in Egypt. They were with Abraham, telling him not to kill Isaac; and Daniel also got his instructions from the angels, and they were with him in the den of lions; they were with Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego in the fiery furnace; and many other times helped the prophets, being servants to the church.

The advent of John and Christ was announced by an angel. They told Mary to flee into Egypt with her child Jesus, and when to return. They rolled the great stone away from the door of the sepulchre, and smote the soldiers with blindness. They helped Peter out of prison, and took Paul in hand and taught him the great lesson all should learn, viz., God's work is not dependent on education or the arm of the law. One of them came on board a wrecked vessel, and told Paul what to do. An angel told John, on Patmos, of great things soon to come to pass, and the great work yet to be performed by them. When we can believe God is so good as to create such officers, and set them to work for us, to help us, we must feel under deep obligation to him.

I believe, since searching the Scriptures on the subject of the administration of angels, that each christian has an angel to assist and protect him, and when the great day comes they will take the saints away from the fiery world.

Bro. Wm. Shepherd's tract on the Administration of Angels, is an excellent work on this subject.

THE SIAMESE TWINS.

G. W. STETSON.

The New York Tribune says:—"Everybody shuddered at the horrid possibility that one of these poor creatures should die, and the other, still living, be hampered by a corpse. It was of this horror, some reports state, the survivor died. But did we ever consider the spectacle of a woman carrying through life the drunken, bloated carcass of a husband or a son, out of whom the soul has died long ago, and left only the brutalized mass of matter, incapable of feeling for her, or of any feeling of life but the mechanical appetite of a beast? With what zeal, what tenderness, she drudges for the body of this death! tends it, battles for it, totters under it down to the grave. What binds her to it? Here is a mystery before which Chang and Eng's band of union may well pass out of sight and be forgotten."

How true to every-day scenes of life the above pen picture is drawn, all close observers in our cities and large villages have had too frequent opportunities to witness; nor are our rural districts entirely destitute of such sad results of gratifying sinful and vitiated propensities and appetites. But aside from the horrid fact, there is given in that brief item one of the best definitions of the Bible phrase, "dead in trespasses and sins," that we have ever seen. "Out of whom the soul has died long ago," etc. What a comment, what keen, cutting irony, satire and sarcasm are undesignedly crowded into that short sentence, on the assumed theory of the soul's immortality. Immortal, and yet dead. Dead, but alive. "Dead long ago," but to live forever. "The brutalized mass of matter only left, . . . incapable of any feeling of life but the mechanical appetite of a beast," and yet having the image of his Maker, and in the likeness of God! Paul says of such characters in Rom. 8: 13, "Ye shall die"; in Gal. 6: 8, they "shall reap corruption"; and in 2 Pet. 2: 12, "These, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption."

How much more honoring to God is the view of immortality in righteousness and eternal life in Christ only. But of the poor, patient, toiling, stricken ones, we can but say, "May the Lord pity them," and put into our hearts to commiserate and help them not only in word, but in deed also, according to our several ability.

Edinboro, Pa.

"THE WORD."

E. S. WILLARD.

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God: praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."

"Wherefore, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocricies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious. Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

Haddonfield, N. J.

GOD IN PROPHECY.

It is impossible to avoid seeing that nothing but the mind of God could have dictated the prophecies written in Scripture. The gradual unfolding of them, their harmonious agreement, their complete freedom from anything self-contradictory, their grandeur, simplicity, and even variety, all combine to stamp them with the undeniable characteristic of divine origin, and to demonstrate them as being the revelation of the mind of God. In successive eras, time after time, age after age, step by step, the same mind is found revealing itself in prophetic Scripture, as his people were able to bear it; and not the least discordance or discrepancy is discoverable between prophecies delivered at the most distant intervals; as for instance those of David, Isaiah, Daniel, Zechariah, our blessed Lord, and St. John.

No mere human scheme or fabrication could thus have been kept up age after age, or put forward by a succession of minds throughout such wide intervals in the history of the world. The conception, the continuation, and the progressive accomplishment of these prophecies is as far above the power of man to originate, as it is beyond his ability to carry out. The mind of God alone is in the Book of prophecy, and he has communicated it to us that with deep reverence, earnestness and gratitude, we may ponder its teachings and watch its fulfillment, remembering the promise given in the Apocalypse, "Behold I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." (Rev. 22: 7.)—Rev. E. Holland, M. A.

REPORT OF LABOR.

A. DAMON.

Nearly four months ago I went into Vermont to labor for and with the Lord. I have with others, held four protracted meetings, and preached in quite a number of other places beside, and have received many blessings from the Master. I have seen some fifty converted to God, including those reclaimed; and have baptized fourteen. Our protracted meetings were held at Stockbridge with the Methodists and Adventists. Bro. Rass the pastor of the Methodist church was with us, and we had sweet communion together. Some started and were baptized at this meeting, and Bro. Rass concluded that he should have to be buried with Christ by baptism, when circumstances favored. May the Lord help him to follow Christ in all things.

Our next meeting was held in Bridgewater, succeeding the Conference, which was held in Deleware. At this place the people have enjoyed a fresh shower of rich grace. Quite a number were converted, and others reclaimed, and they find the Lord as good as his word, for he says, "Return unto me and I will return unto you." Next I went to Pomfret. Had good meetings. Some started to serve the Lord. There was a great deal of prejudice against the truth, but it gave away much, and we had blessed seasons. I hear that the work is still going on and sinners are being converted.

Next to East Roxbury. Here we found Bro. Ashley at work, and quite a number had started before I got there. I found them rejoicing in hope. Finding plenty of help there, I only tarried over one Sabbath, then returned to Bridgewater, where I have been longer than at any other place, and where I have concluded to labor for the coming year. I have been feeling for some time in the past that I ought to go where help was not so plenty as it is in this region. There is yet room for others in Vermont. My home and address will hereafter be at Bridgewater Village, Vermont. Brethren, pray for us.

THE WORLD'S BOOK.

The literature of that little Judean band, done up in so small a compass often that your vest-pocket can carry the whole of it, has a wider, deeper, more helpful influence on the world than all literature besides. It does more to elevate, to cheer, to bless. Think of the countless persons who daily read it, and with a prayerful reverence that lays them open to its rich impressions. The sick call for it. The dying cling to it as to an anchor. Sorrow communes with it, and finds a consoling light shining to illumine its tears. The pilgrim in the wilderness and desert wipes the dust from its pages and refreshes himself from the fountain of its grace. The sailor carries it to sea, the soldier into battle, the explorer to the virgin soil he discovers; and each deems it a link that, amid the perils of time, securely ties the soul to things eternal. The sun, in all its fair circuit, sets not from its gleaming page.

Half of Christendom are named with its cherished names—Jacob, Joseph, David and John, Elizabeth and Mary—and show forth that they have also been invested with its spirit. Its terms are used to bless the new-born babe, its precepts and spirit to train the growing child; the mother puts it into the hand of the young man as he goes out from the old home, who lives by its spirit, walks by its counsels, resists temptation by its power, gets a good name and fame by being its true disciple, grows old in the joy of its hope, and dies easy and content in the triumph of its faith; whilst a tombstone bearing some significant text, tells where his ashes repose. To the poor it is riches, and to the rich it is superior wealth. It tells of God, and is full of fore-gleams of a better country. If to a single soul, then to millions, it has been and is all this, and time but develops the stores of its higher wisdom and purer influence.—Ex.

THE TRUE RICHES.

F. M. CHAMBERLAIN.

What do we need? What are the chief things, the first things, the essential things needed by all who are not yet in possession of them? We can mention some of them. We need righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. We want to be filled with all the fruits of the Spirit, and with all the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. To be made perfect in love, perfect in obedience, perfect in holiness. Whoever has all this is truly rich, whatever his outward circumstances. There is one word that expresses it all, and that one word is the blessed word of Jesus. If we have him, we are sure of all the rest.

— When a man is in a wise state, he is always in a calm state.

Charity is a sentiment or pervading tendency of the character, rather than a particular affection. It is the constant temper of the heart, not the warmth of individual attachments. It acts universally and before personal affections have time or opportunity to be formed. It does not depend on association, or local connections, or the relations of mutual interest, which create so many of the strongest and most faithful bonds of earthly fellowship. It exists independently within the heart, and is not excited into life, as the passions are, by the attractions and solicitations of its objects. It acts at all times, and amid the most novel or the most revolting circumstances, as truly as amid scenes most familiar, and with beings most endeared. It is the sympathy of the spirit with God, with humanity, with nature. It is the quick and living sentiment to which the divine in life is never long obscured. It is a spirit which, when not a natural gift from God, is the last and most perfect result of the discipline of life, and of the religious care of the character to frame within the heart.—J. H. Thorne.

HIDDEN TREASURE.—Matt. 13: 44.

LOIS LAURIE.

The night winds sob
Among the barren, tempest-blasted trees;
Thistles and thorns and briers bow
Their sad-eyed faces underneath the breeze;
Wild beasts have trampled down the fair hedge rows,
And in the shiny pools dragons and owls repose.

The trailing vines
No longer grow up fresh and fair,
But the sour clusters all defiled,
Lie hidden in the weeds and sharp stones there;
Even the soil lies parched and ashy dun,
And barren salt where flowing streams should run.

Ah! who would think
That in so desolate and wild a field
Silver and gold and precious stones
Found there a home, hidden, and deep concealed?
None but the Holy One would set his face
Seeking for treasure in such unpropitious place.

Yet he did find,
And burying deeply in the earth,
In joyous, glad rejoicing joyousness,
As he had found such pearls of priceless worth,
That no unholy hand might find them there concealed,
He sold all he possessed and bought the field!

Ah! sing for joy,
For he will surely come one day
To his secured inheritance, and find again
The treasures buried far away;
And every diamond, however small it be,
Aye, or how hidden, he will surely see.

And his own hand
Will brush the dust long gathering there,
And shape, and smooth, and polish it,
Until its sparkling hues all bright and fair,
In his own diadem will find a royal place,
Reflecting evermore the glory of his face.

Lie calmly still,
Each buried particle of yellow gold!
For when his hand has found you and refined,
You will shine with a brightness, aye untold!
A brightness brighter than the sun's best light,
A pillar in God's temple ever fair and bright.

Lie calmly still!
For soon in joyous glad surprise,
The fetters of your prison all unbound,
You will reflect the rapture of his eyes;
For he will sing for joy to see again
The treasure he redeemed with so much pain.

TOBACCO.

C. S. BRANCH.

A great deal has been said in the Crisis about tobacco, and I have been waiting for an opportunity to add my experience with others, hoping it may be the means of doing some good. I abandoned the use of tobacco early in November last, and have not used any since. For about ten years previous, I had been a constant user of it until the habit had become stronger than myself. I had left it off for a few weeks, at different times, but the tempter would again and again, against my judgment, drag me into his service. I cannot tell what I suffered for the want of tobacco at these times,—such a hankering, such a longing, as I cannot describe. I resolved in my own strength to quit its company; but habit was too much for poor, weak man.

I saw an article in the Crisis from Bro. Grant. In it he said Christ would take the appetite away if we would give it up now and forever; or something to that effect. That was just what I wanted. If the appetite was gone, I could get along. I had just bought a new pipe and a quantity of tobacco, and what was I to do? throw it away? The tempter said, Not by any means; it would be a great waste; smoke it up, and then abandon its use. But I was strongly impressed to quit then; so I did, throwing my pipe and tobacco over a stone wall, calling upon God to help in the work. But the tempter was on hand again, and suggested that I climb over the wall and see where they dropped, for fear I could not hold out. How kind (?) I said, Get thee behind me, Satan"; and I have kept him behind me ever since.

Now, dear brethren, I am a free man, and if Jesus should come to-day or to-morrow, he would not find C. S. Branch with a pipe in his mouth. I have no appetite for it in the least, but for a few days after I quit I realized what Christ meant when he said, "My grace is sufficient."

Come, brethren, throw away your pipes and tobacco, and ask Christ to give you victory over it; believe his Word and obey it, and it will be done; it will not fail. Do your part, and all will be well.

EXPERIENCE.

O. W. H.

While visiting a friend not long ago, I was referred to a piece in the Crisis, of a recent date, under the heading of "Providence," speaking of the meetings that had just been held there. What attracted my attention more than anything else, was where it spoke of a young man that arose for prayers. I am the one, and I thank God I took that step when I did.

My eye was recently attracted by a piece in the Crisis entitled, "Justification and Sanctification." I could see myself portrayed there. Many times have I sinned against the One that "Gave his only begotten Son" to die for me. Many times had I started to serve the Master, and as many times fell back. Somehow it seemed as though I could not hold out any length of time; but there was a hungering and thirsting after righteousness that would not be satisfied with anything but favor in the sight of the Lord. Again I would start, and for awhile everything would go along all right. I would think how easy it was to be a christian; but when temptations and trials came I would lose ground.

At the time of the meetings in Providence I thought I was enjoying religious liberty; but after attending one Sabbath, came to see my condition. I was under deep conviction, for one who professed to follow Jesus. In the evening I made up my mind I would start anew in the service of Christ. I was under deeper conviction than during the day. I was almost sick; but when Bro. Phetteplace gave out an invitation to sinners to seek the Lord and give their hearts to him, I arose, and immediately I felt free. That conviction for sin was gone. I did not have much feeling at that time, but I was not looking for that; I was looking for peace through forgiveness of Christ.

Soon after I attended a meeting, at the close of which all were invited to arise who did not enjoy perfect peace, and wanted to have it. I arose and went forward, and several others came forward also. We had a little season of prayer and then separated. At last I determined to give myself entirely to the Lord—to make an unconditional surrender, and find rest in believing. It was the hardest work for me to make up my mind to give all to him; but when I did, I found the rest easy, and felt better satisfied to let Jesus work than to undertake to go on alone. I am trusting in him. He is my Savior. Praise his name. I want to be ready when Jesus comes. I want to be found waiting for him. He is precious to me. I can sing now with a full heart, that "I am trusting, Lord, in thee." Pray for me, that I may hold out in the good way that I have chosen.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

The war-cloud still hovers over the eastern horizon. Although peace has been formally declared between the two contending nations, France and Germany, another outbreak is imminent, and may at any time come. The nations are jealous and angry. The Chicago Daily Tribune of Feb. 14, 1874, is responsible for the following:

"It is just possible that there may be a second Franco-Prussian war. It would seem indeed that Bismarck, if not Germany, desires it, and is bent on forcing it if he can. He is evidently looking for a pretext to begin hostilities against the neighboring country; and so fertile is he in pretexts and other resources that we can see no reason why he should not succeed. France, spite of the drain of five milliards and the reverses of the war, is recuperating. She is growing stronger every day, and her continuous growth is an ever-increasing menace to Germany. Better strike France down now, thinks Bismarck, than to wait till she has grown again to be the peer of Germany as a military power. So too, seems to think the Nordeutsche Allegemeine Zeitung, Bismarck's reputed organ, although it does not say it in so many words. It has discovered a reason for interfering with France. The Catholic press and the Catholic clergy of France have decried Bismarck's course toward their fellow Catholics in Germany; and this is the casus belli. With the French Government as a Government, they—Bismarck and his organs—say they have nothing to do; no reason to complain of it. But with the French Government as the satellite or ally of Rome, Germany has every thing to do. Germany is at present the avowed enemy of the Roman Catholic church. Therefore, the friends of Rome are its enemies, and in declaring war against Rome it must declare war against them.

While endeavoring, however, to bring on a war with France, Germany professes to be most anxious for peace. She professes to object to the course of the French clergy and French Catholics only on the ground that their course has a tendency to disturb the present comparative cordial relations between the two countries, and precipitate a conflict. To prevent such an event, Germany thinks she had better begin a war herself, and put France, while yet in a state of convalescence, in a position where she will not be able to take the offensive; in other words, that to discourage so ungodly a thing as a war, it had better commence one now. If France would only tell her bishops to hold their tongues, and not to whine in so unearthly a fashion over Bismarck's treatment of their brother bishops in Germany, he avers he would have no fault to find with her; that he would allow her to recover from defeat, put her army on any footing she wished, and restore her war material to a better condition than before 1870. If, however, she is not willing to bridle the tongues of these apostles of dissension, he must, in the interests of civilization and humanity, interfere. Such is Bismarck's present attitude toward France. The recent elections have demonstrated that his power is not so great as it was, while that of the Catholic party in the empire and in France is on the increase. He knows, too, that a breach must occur sometime; and it is not at all improbable that he prefers that it should occur now, ere his own influence grows less or that of Rome greater."—J. W. B.

Gems.

— We cannot have the remotest idea of what heaven is, unless we know and feel what heavenly-mindedness is.

— The only way to avoid evil, it to fill up every passing hour to God.

— Prayer without heart is like a lamp unlighted.

— It is a blessed thing to stoop, when we do it to gather up spiritual manna for our souls.

— It is a sure sign that we pray aright, if we are enabled to desire nothing but what God has declared he delights in giving.

While o'er life's wide, darkling plain,
Unheeding as we roam,
Through many a path of joy and pain
God leads his children home;
And though sometimes in prospect viewed,
The winding way seems dark and rude,
Ah! who the backward scene hath scanned,
But blessed his Father's guiding hand?

— We cannot have fertilizing showers on the earth without a clouded heaven above. It is thus with our trials.

— It has been well said that when the sails of our hearts are filled with happiest winds, we most need some heaviness to ballast them.

— There are many that cannot understand the Scriptures, because they will not take them for their guide.

— It will avail nothing that we pass well among men on earth; holiness alone can fit us for heaven.

— A natural man desires carnal things as he does food. Thus we may tell what we are by what we desire.

— Real independence consists in being dependent altogether upon God, and therefore to be virtually independent of all else.

Do we not need, in such a world as this, faith in God which, whatever is doubtful and whatever is dark, leaves it not doubtful that "in him is no darkness at all." Do we not need a hope for man that has its root deeper than any man, or in any history, even in Him who loving most, has suffered most, who "underwent and overcame," whose life was serving, whose victory was in being vanquished, whose reigning is serving, whose reward for the service of his own is to serve better, whose work in the midst of the throne is the old familiar shepherd's work of "leading" and feeding, whose triumph in the day of his joy will be to gird himself, and come forth and serve.—Banner of Holiness.

Nothing leaves us as it found us.—If a sheet of paper on which a key has been laid exposed for some minutes to the sunshine, be then instantly viewed in the dark, the key being removed, a fading spectre of the key will be visible. Let this paper be put aside for many months, where nothing can disturb it, and then in darkness be laid on a plate of hot metal, the spectre will again appear.

This is equally true of our minds. Every man we meet, every book we read, every picture or landscape we see, every word or tone we hear, leaves an image upon the brain. These traces, which under ordinary circumstances are invisible, never fade, but in the intense light of cerebral excitement start into prominence, just as the spectre image of the key started into sight on the application of heat. It is thus with all the influences to which we are subjected.—Sel.

DRESS IN CHURCH.

It was noticed that when the queen of England, a few weeks ago, attended at a Presbyterian church in Scotland, she was dressed without jewelry, or any of the symbols of fashion. The Evangelist, referring to this, says:

This example of the highest lady of the realm might be imitated not only in Great Britain, but in our own country; for nowhere, we are ashamed to say, is the bad taste of ostentation in dress more conspicuous than here. It seems as if, with many, the Sabbath were the grand occasion for display, and the church the place for self-exhibition. In no other country have we seen so much show and tinselry in the churches as in some of our own cities. In Europe—not only in England, but on the continent—such display is rigidly forbidden, not by law, but by the recognized canons of good taste. Nothing is considered more vulgar—a more certain mark of low breeding—than this kind of ostentation in a place of worship. It is only the "new rich,"—what we would call the "shoddy" people—that try to exhibit themselves in the house of God. But as this class is larger in this country than anywhere else, we have more of these exhibitions. We trust our ladies in America will not be above taking a lesson from the queen of England.—Banner of Holiness.

What causes Hard Times.—Too many spend money, and too few earn it.

Too much money is spent wastefully and uselessly, and too little saved and made productive and accumulative.

We buy too much that we dont pay for cash down—too much of what we buy being what we do not actually need.

We are too wasteful, know too little how to economize, and have too little disposition to do so.

We are too speculative, unscrupulous and actually dishonest in our efforts to make money.

Too many of us prefer idleness to industry, and too few of us know how to work and derive pleasure and profit from our labor.

We spend too much time learning what is not useful, and too little informing ourselves upon the methods of promoting our material prosperity.—Carleton Sentinel.

HOME AND HEALTH.

STRIKING FACTS AGAINST ALCOHOLIC DRINKS.

In a discourse, recently delivered in Boston, one of a series, the Rev. Joshua McGill made the following striking statements, his text being derived from Exodus 21st, verses 28th and 29th, relative to the treatment of the ox, which was wont to "push with his horn in time past."

Dr. Bowditch, the wise man of Boston, advises the planting of vineyards and the sale of mild ales, beer and light wines as a temperance measure, and even the Rev. Mr. Murray thinks sweet cider a delicious and harmless drink. On the other hand reliable witnesses say that this ox is an old offender, and that one hundred thousand annually, both men and women, in this country alone, are sacrificed to his appetite for human wretchedness. A writer in the New York Medical Journal states that in the last ten years the use of spirits has imposed upon the nation a direct expense of $600,000,000; caused an indirect expense of $700,000,000; destroyed 300,000 lives; sent 100,000 children to the poor-house; committed at least 150,000 people to prisons and work-houses; caused the loss by fire or violence of at least $10,000,000 of property; made 200,000 widows and 1,000,000 orphans, besides the deep sea of agony beneath the surface whose area can never be computed.

According to the report of the Special Revenue Commissioner to Congress the sales of retail liquor dealers over the counter in 1867 amounted to almost one thousand five hundred million dollars, more than half the national debt and the annual interest on the whole debt. The witnesses who make these statements are not thieves, idlers, burglars, topers, toddy sellers, gamblers or politicians, and not always the rich and fashionable, the office holder or the covetous man. These generally overlook those evils in order that their trades may flourish and their wicked ends be secured. Those who testify of the evil are the chemists who affirm that alcohol, which is only another name for the ox, is a dangerous poison, having a special affinity for the brain, and Judge Pitman has also shown that alcohol is also a soul poison. In this it has a peculiarity not shared by any other agent. It stimulates the lower propensities and weakens the higher faculties, and its influence is thrown entirely in the scale of the animal impulses against the reason, judgment and conscience. Chemists also affirm that alcohol is no more fit to be taken ordinarily than opium, prussic acid, or nux vomica.

Physicians agree with these statements, and as professional men, unless they are moved by unworthy motives, tell the same story. The old idea that alcohol is food has been utterly exploded, and the British Medical Journal says that it is simply eliminated as alcohol from the body, and retards the process of digestion. Political economists declare against the monster alcohol, and aver that instead of increasing the national wealth, it sinks it by the million every year. The penal, reformatory and charitable institutions of the country are filled with the victims of the drinking custom, and honest men pay the taxes.

The cost of liquors in the United Kingdom in 1871 was $541,000,000, and the liquors drank there in six years, from 1865 to 1870 inclusive, would build 22,000 miles of railroad, 7,000 more than they now have. The quantity of grain used for the six years' drink would make 6,000,000 four pound loaves of bread; sufficient to support the whole population of the United Kingdom for two years, and the amount spent would build a fine house for every family of five persons. In New York city three glasses of liquor are drank for every loaf of bread eaten, the liquor costing thirty cents and the bread ten. It the waste occasioned by drink could be stayed, a national debt would be unknown and taxes would be trifling; if it continues without abatement there is danger that the debt will increase beyond the ability to even meet the interest. —Carleton Sentinel.

Sunshine and Digestion.—Very intimate relations exist between the sun and digestion. Digestion and assimilation become weak and imperfect if the man or animal is not daily exposed to the direct rays of the sun.

HOW TO TREAT THE SICK.

PURE AIR.

People are apt to be greatly alarmed about "catching cold," and if the weather is not of the mildest possible kind, are fearful of venturing out. Says an eminent physician, giving advice to consumptives, "Whenever in doubt about going out, always go out. If a violent storm is raging, then keep within doors, but when it ceases, seize the occasion for out-door exercise." Pure air to a consumptive, is the greatest blessing. The oxygen which it contains is necessary to the purity of his blood. Without oxygen there is no life; and the consumptive, of all persons, needs this life-giving element. The air that he breathes should, therefore, be of the purest quality. Not only should it be air free from the odors of decaying vegetable and animal matter, steaming up from filthy back-yards and streets, from slaughter houses, and oil refineries, and bone boiling factories; but it should also be air rich in oxygen. The air we inhale loses its oxygen, which is replaced by carbonic acid, a poisonous gas. Consequently, we should not breathe the same twice. Without the oxygen, health and life soon vanish; let a poison like carbonic acid take its place, and the fatal end is the sooner hastened. See, then, how essential it is for the child, tainted with consumption, to have pure air, not only out-doors but in-doors as well.

SUNLIGHT.

Plants deprived of light, if they succeed in living at all, are thin, white, unhealthy. So children, as well as adults, living in rooms where little light enters, grow pallid, emaciated, sick. The researches of science point out the sun as the centre of force and life to all organized living beings, whether vegetable or animal. The rooms occupied by a consumptive should then be free to the light of the sun, with not the thinnest vail to shut out his rays.

NOURISHING FOOD.

Enough to eat, but simple in quality. From the food the blood is formed, and if the one be deficient in quantity or quality, so will the other. A person may have plenty to eat, but if it be of poor quality, he will suffer more than if he had but a small quantity of the proper kind. A man may die of thirst on the ocean with "water everywhere, but not a drop to drink." So he may starve when surrounded by an abundance, if it is unfit for nourishment. Avoid stimulants and condiments, pastries and candies. They not only fail to nourish, but when given to a child spoils its appetite for wholesome food. . . . But it is not so much any special article as the general rule of simplicity in the character of the food.—Herald of Health.

OUT-DOOR EXERCISE FOR LADIES.

"I think there are many of us who do not rightly appreciate the advantages to be derived from passing a portion of every day out of doors. While, regardless of health, we sit quietly within doors, doing some little fancy work, reading the last new book, or engaged in some ordinary routine of household duties, we feel little or no inclination to diversify our occupation by invigorating exercises in the open air. This, in time, becomes habitual; and then we suffer the enslaving thraldom of enervating habits, resulting in mental, as well as physical debility, accompanied by the usual train of ailments and complaints, too often ending in general ill health.

But when our mental and physical energies fail us, and hope flies away into the dim, distant future—when present existence becomes wearisome, and life a burden—then, reclining upon our sick bed, watching, with feeble eye, the kind ministrations of friends, or listlessly tracing, over and over again, the dimly seen forms on the wall paper, or in a suspended painting or engraving, yet all the while keenly alive to every harsh sound, and wishing for nothing so much as for former health, how fondly, how wistfully, do we travel in thought, out of doors, into heaven's sunshine, and long for one cheering look at the blue canopy above, one walk upon the green carpet below, with fragrant flowers above us, and happy birds trilling their joyous notes! Yes, then we perceive the value of these blessings, when too late." —Frank Leslie's Almanac.

Overwork.—Overwork of brain very seldom exists. Overtaxation of stomach is very common with our thinking men. As brain and stomach are organically very intimate, and so are functionally sympathetic, overtaxing the latter debilitates the former. Almost all disorders of the brain are the consequence or result of derangements of some other organ or organs; of none so frequently as the stomach. Never has a man died of apoplexy who kept his stomach healthy. Never one of paralysis, unless by injuries caused by casualty. The stomach kept healthy, all the organs in the body will remain healthy. Food healthfully digested makes good blood; this makes life-force, and with plenty of this on hand, and realized, health is sure. With health, one is independent. I would rather have it than garnered gold. Pearls in a desert are not half as good to a thirsty man as cold water. Stocks and bonds are not of par value to a nervous dyspeptic. Existence ought to be sweet, and life that is cultured should be very precious to him that holds it as his own. Whoever will eat to live instead of living to eat, will find himself able to work hard, stand the rack of thought, and live to old age to enjoy the fruit of his hands.—Laws of Life.

THE FARTHER SHORE.

The night is long and lonely, and we wait
With silent watchfulness, with sleepless fears,
For One who shall unlock the shining gate,
And end the darkness of this night of tears.

Before us, through the gloom, a river runs
With silent tide, forever dark and still;
Reflecting no white moons nor golden suns,
Tossed by no waves—so ghastly—calm and still.

Close at our feet may be these waters wide—
So we grope darkly, and one footfall more
May be a leap into the swelling tide,
Where countless thousands have gone down before.

A chilling plunge—an end of life's swift dream—
And the still river shall flow calmly on,
As silent as before. O ruthless stream!
So cold and pitilessly thy waters run!

Yet this dark river has another shore,
And yonder, yonder is the golden gate!
A flood of light shall break these waters o'er,
When He unlocks it—he for whom we wait.

Then shall the sleepers wake. The hungry tide
His dead shall gather to its arms no more;
The glad and glorious throng, cleansed, purified,
Shall stand in white upon the farther shore.

SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

REV. HORATIUS BONAR.

The night cometh! Nor does it seem far off. It never appeared so nigh. The shadows are lengthening out, and falling with ominous gloom upon the valleys of earth. The dimness of twilight is beginning to make itself felt. It is settling down drearily upon our cities, and on our solitudes; upon the towers of our strength, and the palaces of our pomp; nor can the noisy rush of eager multitudes, hurrying to and fro for gain or pleasure, wholly stifle the utterance of fear and awe. Men cannot help foreboding evil, for who can tell them what may be in the womb of darkness? The night-birds are already on the wing, flitting around us, and reminding us of the descending night.

Yet it is written also, "The day is at hand!" The night, though dark, will be brief, and will be soon succeeded by a glorious day. But still of that day the night will be the forerunner. And this world's night is surely near.

The signs of Christ's Second Advent that have been given us both by the Lord and his apostles are both notable and numerous. And it is very evident that those have been selected which were the most expressive and least ambiguous. They are chosen as being the most prominent and explicit that could be given. It cannot be thought that the least striking have been announced and the most striking concealed. If so, then is it not very remarkable that the Millennium of a thousand years (Revelations 20) is never mentioned as a sign at all? Had this been to take place before the Second Advent, how has it never been alluded to as one of the signs? It would have been by far the most distinct and visible. No one could overlook or mistake it. Yet nowhere, by prophets or apostles, or by the Lord himself, is it noted as a sign. How can this be accounted for save upon the ground that it was to take place after not before the Advent? If this be omitted, all is plain; if it be denied, then let those who deny it account for the fact, that among the many signs of the Advent, the Millennium is never mentioned as one. How the most palpable of them all could be omitted, seems to me to require an explanation. On the post-millennial system, the omission seems to me inexplicable. For thus our Lord would be made to profess to tell us the signs of his appearing, and yet to conceal the most notable of them all.

But this is not all. The signs which are given are inconsistent with the idea of a Millennium before the Second Advent. Who that reads the Lord's prophecy in Matt. 24, which begins with the destruction of Jerusalem and ends with his second appearing in the clouds of heaven, does not feel that the whole drift of it was to show the church that they were to expect sorrow, not joy, tribulation, not triumph, up to the time when he should return. These signs were the successive crests of the billows on which she was to be tossed, till he, with his own voice and presence, should rebuke and calm the ocean. The simple omission, then, of the Millennium as a sign, is a fact on which we ought to lay much stress; but the omission of it in circumstances which preclude the possibility of its being a thing, reserved or merely unspoken, furnishes a strong argument in proof of a pre-millennial Advent.

Let me now note some of the signs which in the present day seem most remarkable as forerunners of the Lord's appearing. And though of some of these it might be said that they have been found in former days, yet others of them, as we shall see, are peculiar to our own.

1. Wars and rumours of wars, earthquakes, pestilences, and famines in divers places. Matt. 24: 6, 7. I need not enter minutely into the proof of the existence of these. The public journals bear witness to it. For a while, it seemed almost as if the world were at rest, as if its storms had spent themselves. But now all seems changed. Every day brings new indications of disquietude and convulsion. Few nations seem willing to draw the sword, yet every nation has her hand upon the hilt; with some it is already gleaming in the air, and with others it is reddened with blood. Over the whole earth is heard "the long, low, distant murmur of dread sound." And is this not the prelude to the last universal war? Ezek. 38: Zech. 14; Dan. 11: 40–45, 12, 1: Rev. 13: 7, 16; 12–16, 17; 8–14, 19: 11–14. Is it not a sign of the near approach of Him, who, when earth's madness and ambition are at their height—when the summoned nations are gathered at Armageddon, girt for battle and slaughter—Himself appears for their discomfiture and ruin? Then, but not till then, wars shall cease and the weapons of war perish. Then the true Solomon shall begin his reign, hushing the tumults of the nations and introducing the long-expected Sabbath of this weary "work-day world." Rev. 19: 20.

2. The restlessness of the world. This sign is in part connected with the preceding, yet may be viewed separately. The state of the world is at present very ominous. "Distress of nations with perplexity—men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth," "and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud" (Luke 21: 25–27), is God's picture of the state of men as the final crisis draws on. This certainly seems our attitude at this moment. The earth and the things that are coming on it, attract the attention of all serious thinkers. There is something in the state of the world so unsettled, so pregnant with uncertain evil, that every eye is moving to and fro in expectation of strange issues, and as if to catch the first sign of their approach. The form and color of the clouds forebode speedy change and threaten tempest to the nations. The time for listlessness and apathy is gone. Some thirty years ago, when the skies were bright, and men could promise themselves days of sunshine, it was safe enough to fold the hands and take our ease. But all this is over. No doubt, after the excitement of recent wars and revolutions, men would prefer repose. But the onward swell of the waters stays not for an hour. There is among the nations a spirit of restlessness, anarchy, and insubordination; a passionate love of change, a headlong rush to overturn every established system, too furious and united to be ultimately withstood. Many call it but a passing tumult, the frenzy of an hour; but they who understand it know how deep is the spring out of which it flows. The storm, long gathering, but resisted and repressed by the barriers which ancient wisdom had erected for the stability of kingdoms, is concentrating and condensing its strength in these venerable recesses, which may for awhile refuse to yield to the explosive force, but which, overstrained at length, give way to the accumulated pressure; then will the kingdoms of the earth be shivered; throne and temple overturned; wall and fortress laid in ruins. Such is the night which is to precede the long-looked-for day—when not only Israel but the whole earth shall arise and put on the garments of beauty, fit and meet for the personal presence of their glorious King.

3. Home and Foreign Missionary Exertions.—No age since that of the apostles has witnessed such wide-spread exertions in behalf of the Jewish and Gentile nations as our own. This certainly is a sign peculiar to the present century. I do not speak of Missionary and Bible Societies as if they were to convert the world; but still I would point to the fact of hundreds of missionaries going forth to every region of our globe, millions of Bibles circulated—almost every nation having the Scriptures in their own language—and pointing to these simple but magnificent facts, I ask, Is there not in these a most palpable fulfillment of the words of the Lord, "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached to all nations for a witness, and then shall the end come." Matt. 24: 14. In our day we have the preaching of the Gospel, and its witness-bearing most manifest. The result is not the conversion of the world, but the gathering out of the election. Acts 15: 14. And then the end comes! It is not said, And then the Millennium comes. But the end—the end of this present age, and the coming of the Son of Man. This sign seems also referred to in Revelation (14: 6), "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel, to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." This sign will, I doubt not, become more and more visible—but still there it is already before us—a sign which foretells a coming Lord, and most distinctly intimates the impossibility of a Millennium before his advent.

4. Disbelief of the approaching Advent of Christ, even in the Church.—It is no marvel that the world should either deride or deny that event. And it is of the world's mocking that Peter speaks when he says, "There shall come in the last days scoffers, saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" But the Church also loses sight of that day; nay, refuses to credit the news of its approach. She says, "My Lord delayeth his coming." She slumbers and sleeps. And it is just when she is speaking thus, and thus slumbering; it is an hour when she thinks not, that he arrives. It is often said, Surely, if the time were just at hand, more of God's people would believe it. But it is when many of them are not believing it, and counting on delay, that the Bridegroom comes. While then we mourn that so many of the saints should disbelieve the nearness of that day, let us also lift up our heads, for by this sign we know that our redemption draweth nigh. 2 Pet. 3: 3, 4; Matt. 24: 48.

5. Human efforts at self-regeneration.—I do not say this of the church, though there are some tokens of it even in her. But I speak of the world. Man seems now to be putting forth every effort to regenerate himself without God. Amid all the modern achievements of science and of art, he has lost sight of his own helplessness and dependence on him who created him. He thinks to be a God to himself. It is as if before God's glorious purpose of restitution is brought to pass, man is to be allowed to do his utmost for the renewal of himself and of the world. He is to be put to the proof. He is to be permitted to boast himself for a little, and congratulate himself upon the triumph berore him. Hence the vain-glorious speeches we so often hear, of man's powers and man's prospects. Political reforms are spoken of as the regeneration of the world. One party most loudly maintains that the separation of Church and State is to usner in the Millennium; another as boldly affirms that it is the union of Church and State that is to accomplish this.

Education, science, literature, philosophy, are called the world's regenerators, and no limits are assigned to the blessings which these are to confer upon the world. It is curious, also, to observe, for some years past, how eagerly science has been putting forth all its energies in pursuit of discoveries that shall restore fruitfulness to the soil. Agricultural chemistry has shot up into a separate study. As if unconsciously prescient of the earth's deliverance from the curse of barrenness, men are laboring to do all that science can, to hasten on that day of restitution. These efforts at self-regeneration must prove abortive; for man cannot undo either his sin or its consequences. They may succeed to a certain extent, but only to prove how little they can effect. These are, however, signs of a coming deliverance. For when man's endeavors shall prove fruitless, both in reference to himself and society, and the soil which he tills, God shall at length interpose and accomplish the work of renovation by the word of his power.—Signs of our Times.

TIME SINCE THE CHRISTIAN ERA.

S. HALL.

The question proposed by Bro. Leslie as to there having been just 1873 years since our era began, so that we can with confidence add this number to any other number before the birth of Christ, and thereby determine when the six thousand years will end, or the coming of Christ take place; though it does not seem to have ever been doubted, is proper enough to raise, especially since it is well known that the year of the birth of Christ was not made an epoch from which to reckon time by any nation for upwards of five centuries. It was then proposed by Dyonisius, a monk in Italy, in 516, and adopted by that nation, it is said, in 532, and afterward by other nations. The question would be, how could it then be known that there had been just 532 years since the birth of Christ? It is not material here, that this period did not extend back to the exact time of his birth, which it did not, by more than four years; but, was this the length of time that had elapsed from the point where his birth was placed?

When a people are reckoning from some particular epoch, there is no possible chance of mistake in their noting or recording time; but how was it during those five centuries? It may be said in reply, that there were eras by which time was computed. The Christians, it is well known, kept a record from the crucifixion for some centuries. The Roman annals were also used, at least until 476, which was within forty years of the time the new era was proposed; and there were other eras by which time was computed, and one especially by which it is proved that the number of years from the time where our era was made to begin, to the time it was adopted, was correctly given; viz., the Spanish.

Here then, we find that one of the old European nations—mentioned in the New Testament, and probably where St. Paul preached the gospel—steadily reckoned for more than thirteen centuries from an era, but a little older than ours, and began in the reign of the same Emperor. Julius Cesar was assassinated in the year of Rome 710, and was succeeded by Augustus, and in his fifth year, 715 of Rome, Censorius and Salinus being consuls, Augustus Cesar entirely subdued Spain and made it tributary to Rome. And from this they began their era, which as Collier (1688) says, is "a word which Spanish authors introduced into chronology, to express some extraordinary change, as of Reigns, &c. It comes from Aera, a tribute imposed by the emperor Augustus." This was thirty eight full years before the vulgar era began, which was in the forty third of Augustus (not his emperorship, but his principality), and in the year of Rome 753.

Now, how is it to be conceived that a large and civilized nation could fail of accurately keeping the time, when its millions of people were registering each year as they lived through it, and all their records found precisely alike? The Spanish era was followed, at least until A. D. 1351, and as there was always intercourse between Spain and Italy, and all other nations of Europe, their era must have been well known, and Dyonisius, even if he had no other means of computation could have employed this era to learn the exact period from his time back to the 753 of Rome, and forty third of Augustus, which he fixed upon as the year of the nativity of Christ.

ONE SHALL BE TAKEN AND THE OTHER LEFT.—MATT. 24: 40.

L. ROBBINS.

As He who uttered this solemn declaration will soon sit in judgment upon the human race, what is more important than that each individual propound to himself the question of the prophet, "Who may abide the day of his coming? or who shall stand when he appeareth?" A question plainly answered in God's holy Word, but we fear it is little understood, or realized, in its practical bearing, by the great mass of professing christians. Many in that day will plead their own wonderful works. Many will say, Our lamps have gone out. Many will say, "We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets;" or we have sat under the sound of thy gospel, and partaken of the Sacrament. But he will say, "I never knew you."

Upon what principle will the dividing line be drawn? The apostle saith, "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." If then we have his Spirit dwelling in us, we shall be attracted to Christ, who is the great magnet; but surely the magnet will not attract that which is not of its own nature. Let us each examine our own hearts, whether we are partakers of the divine nature. Does he abide in us from day to day? Are we now attracted to him and his holy Word? Do we love to obey his commands? Do we love to deny self to honor him? Do we feel that we are one with him, with no separate interests? Can we say with all the heart, thy will be done in all things? Has the world lost its attractions to us? If it be not so, how can we expect the attractions heavenward, when he shall appear, will be of sufficient strength to draw us from its cruel grasp. Remember Lot's wife! We must be free from all its contaminating influences. "Whosoever loveth the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Hence the admonition,—"Take heed lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Does the house of prayer so attract us that we are always at our post? or are we forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, when we see the day approaching? If we are, have we not reason to fear we are already overcharged.

We can thus see how every one will be tried as by fire, for the day shall declare it. There must be a genuine work in the heart, or there will be no attraction heavenward in that day. Enoch, the prototype of those who will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, had this testimony that he pleased God, before his translation; so must we, if we would experience the happy change. This blessed testimony we may all have moment by moment, by full consecration and faith that takes God at his word. Glory be to God! He will soon come. Who will abide the day of his coming.

COMFORT.

A. J. STONE.

St. Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, a servant of God, chosen to be an apostle to the Gentiles; a Hebrew by birth, and a descendant from the tribe of Benjamin, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, learned in the law and skilled in all the wisdom of the Jewish Sanhedrim,—while writing to the church at Thessalonica, addressed them thus: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

The word wherefore signifies for which reason. Then it would read, for which reason comfort one another with these words. The comfort and consolation expressed in the words of the apostle has special reference to the coming of Jesus Christ. For he tells us in the first chapter, that "they themselves," that is the Macedonians and Achaians, "show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which hath delivered us from the wrath to come." In the second chapter he says, "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Then in view of this fact says the apostle, "Wherefore, comfort one another with these words. In the third chapter the same subject is brought under consideration. For he says, "To the end he may stablish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." Blessed assurance! and well may the apostle say, Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

In the fourth chapter the apostle gives us the connection in the following words, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, (that is, in like manner), them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord." Well knowing that many would doubt these words in the last days, the apostle seems to have doubly confirmed it by saying, "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord," which is as much as to say, For we can say by no greater, that "we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (go before) them which are asleep." Why Paul? "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Mark the expression. Not those who have gone to heaven, "but the dead in Christ shall rise first." Then we which are alive (living when the Lord comes) and remain, shall be caught up together with them (the dead in Christ) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so (in this way) shall we ever be with the Lord. "Wherefore, comfort and console one another, and keep in remembrance these words.

In this last chapter he reasons on this wise: "But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you." He would have the church understand that he knew they were too well instructed for him to write unto them concerning the times and seasons; for he says,—"Yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night; for when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape." The great apostle, after telling the church that they were not in darkness, closes up his inspired epistle by saying, "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

THE MEASUREMENT OF THE NEW JERUSALEM.

WM. HOBBS.

"And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal."—Rev. 21: 15–16.

Twelve thousand furlongs divided by eight, the number of furlongs in a mile, make fifteen hundred miles. And some, taking this for one of its diameters, together with the statement that "the length is as large as the breadth," conclude that the city is fifteen hundred miles square; which amounts to two million two hundred and fifty thousand square miles. The extreme vastness of this, perhaps, makes the inference upon which the estimated measure is founded easy of acceptance.

That the measurement given in the text is that of its circumference is evident, I think; first, because that would be its measure, while its diameter would not. And, second, the circumference is the scriptural form when giving the dimensions of a city. For instance: it is said in the book of Jonah that "Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days journey"; and history gives its circumference as sixty miles, which makes the three days journey of twenty miles a day. Notice, the text says that the angel "measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs." Had it said he measured the length, or the breadth, there would be authority for the idea of its being fifteen hundred miles square; but as it says he measured the city, the measure given must be that of its circumference; that is, three hundred and seventy-five miles square; more than twice the size of the six New England States. This is sufficiently large to justify the words of the poet, "There is room enough in Paradise, for all a home in glory."

Having ascertained the measure of the city, as to its area, we would next inquire as to its height. We are told in the text that its length and breadth and height are equal. If this meant that they were equal to each other, it would give it the form of a cube; in that case, its wall of "a hundred and forty-four cubits" would be of an insignificant height compared with a height of three hundred and seventy-five miles. But as it is said to have "a wall great and high," we may conclude that the wall represents not only the circumference, but also the height of the city. Some cities vary in their diameter, being greater or less, according as they are measured in different places. But the length, breadth and height being equal everywhere, the length would be alike everywhere, and also the breadth; and the height also equal to itself, but not equal to the length nor breadth.

But the most important matter, after all, is to have an inheritance in the kingdom of God, and to have a right to enter in through the gates into the city. "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." Rev. 22: 15.

THE SOLACE.

God is whatever his people need; and whatever he is, he is to them. Are they in danger? he is their refuge. Here they are safe from the avenger of blood, the justice of God, and the threatenings of a violated law. Are they weak? he is their strength. He will strengthen them for conflict with the foe, strengthen them while in the engagement, and bring them off more than conquerors. Are they in trouble? he is a help, a very present help in trouble. He will help them to bear trouble. He will help them to improve trouble. He will deliver them in six troubles, and in seven shall no evil touch them.

Christian! in every danger run to thy God. His arms are open to receive thee. His heart is a refuge for thee. He will screen thee. He will shelter thee. He will defend thee. He will be thy protector in adversity, in life and in death. In all thy weakness go to him for strength; in all thy infirmities repair to him for grace. He is the strength of the poor, and the strength of the needy in his distress. He has strengthened thousands of poor feeble ones, and he will strengthen thee. In all thy troubles go to him for solace and succor. He will help thee. Hear his own precious words, addressed to his people when in deep trouble and distress,—"Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." He is thy shield in danger, and thy very present help in trouble. He is always at hand, always ready to help, always willing to bless thee.—Selected by G. E. Merrill.

JOHN 17: 2, 3.

B. KNEPPER.

"As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

In the words before us Christ speaks of eternal life, which a specified class of people shall enjoy. This life shall be given, as the text says: "That he should give eternal life to as many," hence not all, but "to as many as thou hast given him," that is, Christ. Now those given by the Father, the Son said were given because "they believed that thou [the Father] didst send me." v. 8.

The life spoken of above, we further see, is the result of power given by the Father to the Son over all flesh. Here clearly follows that the Son has power enough from the Father to give eternal life to all; but as faith is the unalterable condition of eternal life, therefore it is declared that "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life. Now he sums up the whole and says: "This is life eternal (1.) That they might know thee, the only true God." But how may we feel assured that we know the true God? If we have that Spirit which gives witness that we are the children of God. And this witness we receive by keeping his word. v. 6. Do the wicked know the only true God as their Father? Christ said to some, "Ye are of your father, the devil. Such do not know the true God by faith, and will not have eternal life, neither in joy nor in torment. They "abide in death." (2.) Life eternal is also to "know Jesus Christ, whom God has sent." Here again faith comes in, a necessary means of eternal life; as it is said, "God so loved the world," etc. Do the wicked know Christ by faith which has the promise of salvation? Surely not; especially those who are termed unbelievers. Hence there is no eternal life for the wicked after their final doom, but death from which there is no redemption.

We have the final state of the wicked declared by Jehovah himself, saying: "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. 26: 14. Christ gives eternal life, but only to believers. Unbelievers shall not see life. John 3: 36.

SANCTIFICATION.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

Much has been said and written upon this very important, and deeply interesting subject, of late. It should claim the attention of all Bible students, who look for redemption through Jesus Christ. Of all that I have read relating to this subject, nothing impresses me so potently as the article in the Crisis for Feb. 11, from Bro. O. R. Fassett. I am satisfied that the position he occupies is true, and strictly according to the record that God has given us. Those who are looking for, and loving the appearing of Jesus, should thoroughly weigh every idea that that article contains.

I have been exceedingly skeptical as regards this second sanctification as published by the Methodists. I know their claim, and I know they ignore the gospel of the kingdom of God; for they do not believe nor preach it. Jesus says,—"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." John, Christ, the twelve apostles, and the seventy proclaimed this gospel of the kingdom, and so do those who are now looking for the Savior from heaven. But the creeds of the day publish altogether "another gospel," which is going to heaven at death—into an upper and better kingdom. "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached, let him be accursed" said Paul. It was very interesting until he came to ask the question—Do the sects preach the gospel of the kingdom of God? We believe they do not.

I once listened to a very interesting and truthful discourse from a Methodist minister on the subject of the first advent of Christ into this world. He seemed to bring out the whole truth on the question. What did Christ come into this world for? The answer he gave was, He came to seek and save immortal souls; and remarked that already he had saved millions of them, and millions more were on their way. All that we, as a people, look for soon to take place was not even hinted at, viz., the second coming of Christ, resurrection, the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom, time of reward, descent of the New Jerusalem, and the glorification of God's people in the new earth. At the conclusion of his discourse I asked myself the question—Is it possible for any intelligent man to learn all the truth touching the first advent of Jesus Christ, and at the same time learn nothing about his second advent? I concluded it was impossible. If men professing godliness and sanctification could handle the Word of God deceitfully in Paul's day, may not men do the same thing now, while making the same pretensions?

Christ says, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Paul could say —"I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." "I have kept back nothing that was profitable unto you." Is it not a most lamentable fact and almost a universal one, that the professedly religious world are following in the footsteps of the Jewish Church, wilfully withholding the most potent and glorious truths of God's Word?

I would ask in all honesty, Is there any other way to be sanctified only through the truth? Our heavenly Father has revealed to man a system—a plan—an arrangement of duties and obligations, which if we fully receive and walk therein, with all honesty and steadfastness, we become sanctified, soul, body, and spirit. "Elect, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ; grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied." Grace and peace are multiplied to those who are sanctified by obedience to the truth—the whole truth—touching the salvation of man. Obedience always brings a blessing. The government of God now rests upon the shoulders of Jesus Christ; consequently, all must bow to his instruction or be destroyed from among the people. We cannot ignore or set aside intentionally, any part of his instruction, and expect at the same time salvation at his hands. Says Christ, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels."

Sanctification is, without question, a progressive work. We are to grow in grace, and in addition, all knowledge of the truth. The finishing touch to this glorious doctrine is an interest in, and longing for, Christ's appearing.

THE GENTLENESS OF CHRIST.

What an expression! The gentleness of Christ! How much is there in that short sentence! How much to admire; how much to imitate! Christ performed great deeds—such as no other one ever did; but not that we should imitate them. He spake to the tempest, and stilled the rolling billows—but not that we should lift up our voices when the wind blows, and the thunders roll, and the waves are piled mountain high, and attempt to hush them to peace. He stood by the grave and spake, and the dead man left his tomb, and came forth to life—but not that we should place ourselves by the graves of the dead and attempt to restore them to life. He opened the eyes of the blind, and taught the lame man to leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb to sing—but not that we should imitate him in this, or attempt by miracle to give vigor to the feeble, or health to the diseased. But Christ was meek and gentle, that we might be so too.

Christ was benignant and kind, that we might be so. Christ patiently bore reviling that we might do it also; he was not irritable, and uncharitable, and fretful, and envious, and revengeful—and in all these we may imitate him. His was a life of benevolence, diffusive like the light of a morning without clouds; a life undisturbed by conflicting emotions; unbroken by a harsh and dissatisfied temper; kind when others were unkind; gentle when the storms of furious passion raged in their bosoms; and tranquil and serene while all around him were distracted by anger, and ambition, and envy, and revenge. To us may the same spirit be given; and while the world around us is agitated with passion, and pride, and wrath, in our hearts may there reign evermore "the gentleness of Christ."—Albert Barnes.

TWO WAYS OF LOOKING AT THINGS.

R. A. BOYNTON.

Professors of religion sometimes reason like this:—"I wonder if it can be wrong for me to indulge in a little levity and merriment occasionally; to go to this or that place of amusement; to dress in such and such a style; or to do this, that, or the other thing just this once? I am sure I cannot see what harm there is in it. I do not believe the Lord intends to have his people deny themselves every kind of pleasure." It cannot be that such people have ever tasted the fulness of joy and peace which it is their privilege to experience in the service of God; else they would have no desire to turn back again to the pleasures of earth. They would reason more in this way, "I do not wish to engage in anything, unless I think I can do or get some good by it; otherwise I could not feel free to ask God's blessing to attend me.

Some things appear, at first sight, to be perfectly harmless; but upon a little reflection I am convinced that I could not get any good in them; and I doubt if I could do others any good by engaging in them; consequently, whether or not it be wrong for me to take part in these things, I am sure it would not be wrong for me to let them entirely alone. This will I do, and thus be on the safe side."

Then again, in regard to doing for Christ. If we are only lukewarm in his service, we will say, "I wonder if it can be my duty to do this, or if I ought to do that;" being all the time anxious to do as little as possible, and keep tolerably clear from a feeling of condemnation. But if we love the Lord with all our hearts, we will ever study to see how much we can do; feeling satisfied that we can never do or sacrifice too much in the cause of him who gave his life for us.

THE FOUR ANGELS.

"And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree." Rev. 7: 1. This passage is evidently a portion of consecutive symbolic prophecy; that is, it was given to foretell events, presenting them in their chronological order, and describing them by signs or symbols. Where does it locate the events; In the sixth period of the gospel age. The gospel age is divided, in this prophecy, into seven periods, represented by the opening of seven seals.

The events presented by the text are located under the opening of the sixth seal, consequently must happen during that period. The seventh period is occupied by the events of the last judgment. Therefore, the symbolism of the text must have its application to events which will transpire before, and running to the judgment scenes. The expression, "After these things," does not represent the order in which the events will take place, but the order of the prophets seeing them.

Angels, used symbolically, represent agencies employed by God to accomplish his purposes. The nature of the agency can be determined by the nature of the work to be performed. Political work is done by men of the State; ecclesiastical work by men of the church. The work of the angels is holding the winds; therefore, to determine the nature of their work, so as to know what agencies to look for to accomplish it, we must learn what the winds are, and what it is to hold them. The winds in the text are evidently symbolic; God representing by them something powerful to destroy.

We find in the Old Testament that God used winds as a symbol of war. As wind produces waves on the sea, which in their movements are destructive to property and life, so war produces armies, which in their movements destroy cities and people. Daniel saw "the four winds" striving (warring), upon "the great sea" (the human family), and four great kingdoms arose and fell as the result. War is declared and controlled by political rulers, so that we may expect to find somebody among that class as the symbolized agents.

Four winds gives us the idea of general war, that is, war extending to the four quarters of the nations involved in the prediction. As the four prophetic empires were represented as rising and falling by the power of the four winds, or war (see Dan. 7: 2, 3), and as Rome is the last of the four, and continues until the destruction of all Gentile governments; it follows that a general war must be experienced at the end of this age, by which the Roman governments must be destroyed. The prophecy shows that the war spirit will arise, and break out and threaten the Roman nations, and that that war will be restrained from demolishing the old forms of government by the four angels.

The angels naturally and evidently symbolize the rulers of four governments.

The important question now arises, Have we come to the sixth period? and have such events, or any part of them taken place, as are foreshadowed by the predictions? We believe we have, and that this prophecy is now being fulfilled. Has a war existed in these latter days of the gospel as illustrated, threatening the overthrow of the Roman kingdoms? The wars of Napoleon answers the description, as to time, extent, and location. They seriously threatened the existence of all the governments on the Roman territory. Those wars were characterized by terrible upheavings of the foundation of human governments. Atheism, Communism, Catholicism, Protestantism, Republicanism, secret societies, and old established dynasties convulsed, rising and falling, reeling and stumbling, as if all human associations were in death spasms.

The winds howled and swept over the Roman sea, until the old ships of State dashed one against another, strewing the coast with stranded wrecks. Amid the din of these devastating wars, the great powers saw that alliances and united efforts alone could save them from universal destruction. The kings joined their strong hands so as to withstand the fury of the blast, but the surging waves of intriguing diplomacy, and the rattling hail of bloody battles would as often part them in almost hopeless despair. But if this is the great war foreshadowed by the winds, God will superintend the matter, so that when it has shaken and scattered human associations and proved itself to be the predicted war, then he will draw the hands and efforts of four kings or nations together, represented by the angels, who will take hold of the leading "Agitator of the world"—Bonaparte or France—and the various combined classes antagonistic to the old established monarchical governments, and "hold" them from overthrowing these for a time.

The text also shows that the four governments will not only succeed in holding the war, but that they will continue their efforts to restrain the threatening elements until the end of the sixth period; when these kings will be able to hold them no longer, and the last terrible struggle for supremacy will come. That war of Napoleon was brought to a final and sudden close by the combined efforts of England, Prussia, Austria, and Russia. These four kings did do just what the four angels seem to represent as being done in their first movement.

But where are those kings, parties, and revolutionizing principles to-day? Have they all passed away and forever? Are there not antagonisms threatening the overthrow and destruction of the old dynasties now? In other words are there no winds to be held, and are there no kings confederated to hold them? If not, then we have misinterpreted the prophecy, or misapplied it. But is it not a fact patent to all that the spirit of revolution, unrest, and dissatisfaction with the old principles of government and human society is rapidly increasing, threatening the existence of monarchy and all aristocratic rule? Republicanism is creeping through every part of the Old World, coiling its snares more and more fatally around the ancient thrones. The coils have already been drawn on the kings of France and Spain, and the victims are struggling terribly for life. The Communists and their coadjutors are increasing by millions, and threaten to be immediately avenged by the sword and fire, on the governments who have persistently refused to yield to their demands. Catholicism is crying piteously to be avenged on those who have seized its ancient sceptre and broken it on the seven hills, and is carefully watching the excited pulse of three hundred millions, to learn when they beat in harmony for revenge upon opposing kings. Spiritualism is sounding its note of dissent to all the established orders of associations, State, Church, and everything, excepting its newly revealed standard. France is laying one hand on the sword, and raising the other to heaven, swearing that she will exhaust her treasures and spill her blood to be avenged on her adversary.

The Mohammedans are struggling hard to breast the storm a little longer, and every nerve is strained, and every means employed to survive the terrible tempest. Armies are everywhere increasing, navies are being strengthened and multiplied, fortifications are being rebuilt, and more powerful guns mounted. All feel a premonition of a speedily coming conflict. Surely there are fearful winds to be holden.

The world never witnessed such antagonisms, so deeply rooted and so determined for victory and revenge as now. The baser passions of the human heart are rising to the surface. The estimated value of human life is rapidly diminishing. All the world seems to be drifting to confusion, anarchy and bloodshed. Surely these warring elements seem to demand more than at any time before, the union and controlling efforts of the four angels.

Have we any evidence that those same kings, who united in 1814 to stop the great war, are now united to prevent another general war? It is a remarkable fact that the same powers have recently renewed their agreement, in view of the present existing emergencies, to operate together to keep the peace of the world. It is also remarkable that Alexander I. of Russia made the original proposition for the quadruple alliance, and first promulgated it at his capital, and that Alexander II. did the same thing in renewing it the present year.

The following item of news gives the present position of the four original kingdoms as expressed by their sovereign representatives, re-affirming their former alliance, stating the same design to keep the peace of the world by "holding" or preventing war:—

"ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 16th, 1874.—A grand dinner was given last evening by the Czar to his imperial and royal visitors. In his speech his Majesty said that the emperor of Germany, the queen of England, the emperor of Austria, and himself, would preserve the peace of the world.

The Prince of Wales, as the representative of the Queen, bowed his thanks, and the Emperor Francis Joseph responded, reiterating the sentiments of the Czar."

These ominous facts appear still more wonderful when we consider the remarkable predictions of Daniel in describing the position of the last kings of divided Rome. He shows that there would be antagonism between these "kings," but that they would make an effort to overcome the opposing elements to union by mingling "themselves with the seed of men"; that is, these royal families will labor to overcome this want of natural adhesive power which will be wanting between them, as between "iron and clay," by the intermarriage of the royal heirs to their thrones. That these governments depend much upon these mingling marriages to produce and sustain their controlling alliances is apparent to all.

It was at one of the festive scenes following the last royal marriage connecting two of these families, and in view of the union produced by it, that the Emperor Alexander expressed the confidence that the four kings would be able to keep the peace of the world. The sister of the Emperor William of Germany married Nicholas I. of Russia; making William the uncle of Alexander, the present Emperor of Russia. William's eldest son, the heir to his throne, married Queen Victoria's eldest daughter; thus mingling the families of England and Germany. The Prince of Wales, heir to the English throne, married a German princess, connected back with the imperial dynasty of Austria; thus connecting England and Austria. The eldest son of Alexander, heir to the Russian throne, is espoused to a sister of the wife of the Prince of Wales; thus mingling England, Austria and Russia. Victoria's second son, the Duke of Edinburgh, was recently married to Alexander's only daughter; thus again mingling England and Russia.

It seems to us that divine predictions were never more signally and wonderfully fulfilled than have been these, thus far. These four powers are the strongest military governments of the world, representing in their union the supreme arbitrating political power of the world, and sustaining every characteristic feature of Rome in its last stage of existence. These kings are in just such a condition as Daniel represented the Roman kings, partly united and partly divided, thrown together by the union of the nations through the marriages of royalty; but not cleaving together any more than iron and clay; for they are still antagonistic in religion and in the leading government policies.

All understand that it is the settled policy of Russia to occupy Constantinople, and become a great marine power on the high seas; but it is the established policy of England to prevent this. Austria and Germany have deep-rooted jealousies growing out of territorial questions, which produce strong alienations. Therefore there is that which prevents a real blending of those nations; while other circumstances compel them to associate without any real union. How perfectly this was illustrated by the association of "iron and clay," which could not be made to weld together; and also by the angels, who for a time were the united instruments to hold the winds; but in the end became the agents to make them blow.

If this is the correct interpretation of these prophecies, then the history of this world is nearly written, and the last Gentile kingdoms are filling their measure and will soon be dashed in pieces by the wonderful "stone" which will grind these wicked governments to powder.

Then let the winds roar, and make the world tremble with fear. The invisible angels which superintend the mighty work will hold in subjection a little longer the combining masses, who are surging and howling for vengeance, victory and revolution.

In view of these dark and troublous scenes, the true lovers of our world cry in the bitterness of their spirit to God, to send the Great Immanuel, and with a strong arm sweep away the enemies of righteousness and truth, and plant the standard of peace, and give this world redeemed and renewed to a holy nation, and hush the thundering roar of destroying winds into the sweet melodies of Eden's endless zephyrs. SAN FRANCISCO.

The meetings in San Francisco continue to increase in interest and power. New ones are daily becoming interested, and the Spirit of the Lord is impressing the word of truth upon the minds of the people, causing prejudice to give way like dew before the morning sun. The prospect is very encouraging. The prayer and conference meetings are seasons of special refreshing. A Jewish lady has been converted the past week, and intends to be baptized next Sabbath, March 8th. In consequence of embracing the Christian religion, her friends mourn for her as dead, and she is shut out from their society. She has made up her mind to bear it all for Jesus.

Last Sabbath (March 1st) a popular young Baptist minister was with us. He is on this coast for his health. He has been examining the reasons of our hope, and has become satisfied that our belief in relation to the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, the coming of Christ, the saints' inheritance upon the new earth, etc., is in harmony with the Bible. After an interesting conversation with him for some hours, he said he had fully decided to preach these things because they are true. He must and would be an honest man, and let the Lord take care of the consequences. In thus stepping forth to declare these unpopular truths, he is making no small sacrifice, but we trust his gain will be a hundred fold beyond the seeming sacrifice. But few young men had a more flattering prospect before them in the ministry than he had in the Baptist denomination; but he is willing, like Paul, to count it all loss and dross for the excellency of this "blessed hope." He has gained a rare eminence for his years (32), as a minister and lecturer, but his motto is now, "Buy the truth and sell it not." Thank the Lord that he is raising up strong men in these last days, who are willing to declare the whole truth, regardless of the frowns of cold-hearted professors, and a wicked world. For proper reasons we withhold the Bro's name from our readers for the present. They may expect to learn more about him soon, and read from his own pen. Pray for him, that the Lord may soon restore him to perfect health. His disease is nervous prostration, caused by too intense study, in connection with his earnest ministerial labor. M. G.

OUR WORK.

The work of the Church of Christ is to obey him in all things. His instructions are communicated through his Word, Spirit and providences. It becomes our first duty then, as christians, to learn his will as to our work. All the general instruction is given in his Word, and the minutia by his Spirit. Providential circumstances confirm the Word and Spirit. We know that the Word is true, by events controlled by God which harmonize with its requirements. We may know the Spirit that controls us is of God, when it agrees with his providence and revelation.

We know by the Scriptures that it is God's will that somebody should preach the gospel; but the individuals are not specified, and they can only learn their divine call by the Master's Spirit and providential openings. God revealed the fact that somebody would be called to lead his people out of Egypt at a certain time, but he did not say that his name should be Moses, born of certain parents, and found in a river; but he did send his Spirit upon him, and threw around him events which caused him to do just what was predicted of that leader, which proved him to be the divinely selected man. So it was with John, the forerunner of Christ. His work and position, when compared with the Word of God, proved him to be the "Elias." By the same rule Jesus is proved to be the Messiah. His parentage, birth-place, miracles, death and resurrection, correspond to the divine Record, and prove him to be the Savior. So it is with God's servants; when their work and experience agree with the revealed pattern given, they may know their work is approved of the Master. Some parts of the pattern were given for all time, and all generations; while other parts are specific, and correspond to specific circumstances.

There never was but one time when the work of the church was to warn the world of a coming flood, and build an ark. None but Lot, Abraham, Joseph, Moses, and Joshua, were ever called to do the work assigned them individually. None but Simeon, Anna, and their cotemporaries, were ever required to look for and proclaim the first advent of Christ in their day. None but the apostolic church were ever called to proclaim a personally present Jesus. So it was with the church at the destruction of Jerusalem, and Luther and his coadjutors at the Reformation. All these were required to do specific work, which God directed them to do through his revelations, and those requirements grew out of particular events connected with them. In every case God justified all who willingly did the special work, and condemned those who through opposing influences refused to do it.

These principles have certainly been operative in the divine government through the ages of the past, and we believe are as immutable as their Author.

Is there any specialty connected with the work of the church during the present period? If so, what is that work? and what are God's revelations concerning it? We believe there is, and that it is the warning of the world of speedily coming judgment. It is the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom, witnessing to all nations that the limitation of their rule is ending, and that they are required to voluntarily yield their sceptres to Christ. It is carefully noting the signs of the present times, and proclaiming them as the sure precursors of Christ's speedy return. It is leading the church to a holy waiting position to receive her Bridegroom at his appearing. This specialty in the divine requirements eclipses all others in the magnitude of the events involved, and the eternity of its results.

As a people we have accepted this grand proposition as a part of the divine economy with men. We believe that we moved in harmony with God's Word and Spirit when we accepted it as such, and that he has blessed us in proportion to our faithfulness to these great principles. If God has called us to take this position, we should defend it firmly and faithfully to the end. If he has not, then we should manfully and honestly confess our mistake. Let the Word of God decide this question. If this specialty in our faith and work is just what the Bible points out as truth and duty at this time, then let us boldly defend it if the world scoff, friends desert, and the heavens fall. Do not fear divisions and world-wide opposition; for God has notified us that these would lie directly in the path of his last-day servants.

Brethren, receive our exhortation to maintain this grand and responsible position, to which we believe God has called us, and be not flattered, persuaded or driven to desert it. Do not become dogmatical or foolish sectarians, but honor the position Christ has called you to occupy. Do not let Satan deceive you in thinking that this faith is of no special importance, so that you can make it prominent or not just according to your taste and surroundings. If God has made this work important, we take a fearful responsibility when we teach directly or indirectly that it is of little consequence. What if it had been taught in Noah's day that his message was of little importance; would it not have made that message a dead letter to all who accepted this teaching? It would; and so such teaching will nullify every special or present truth.

It is not our prerogative to judge men,—to say who will be saved or lost; but it is our duty to present to them the gospel standard as God has given it to us. This is the only way by which we can save ourselves and those for whom we labor. Then let us be faithful in doing our appointed work, for our day is ending, and the reward for faithfulness will be glorious. J. C.

"WITHIN THE VEIL."

We have been desired to write our views as to the time when Christ went within the veil."

It has been claimed by some who pretend to keep Saturday for the Sabbath, that Christ did not go into the holy of holies till the 10th day of the seventh month, in 1844. The only evidence for this, so far as we know, depends upon the visions of Ellen White. In addition, an attempt has been made to show that the expression, "within the veil" may not necessarily mean in the holy of holies; but we think the proof of such a position is entirely wanting in the Scriptures. In Heb. 6: 18–20, Paul speaks of those "who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec."

This passage positively affirms that Christ had entered "within the veil" in Paul's day. He says: "Whither [that is, within the veil] the forerunner is for us entered." There is no room for doubt but this inspired apostle declared that when he wrote Jesus was at that time "within the veil." The hope of the christian reaches to the same place, because it is centered in Christ.

Let us now look carefully at the Bible teaching as to the meaning of the expression, "within the veil." We would state here, that we believe it always means in "the most holy place," or holy of holies. In Exodus we read:

"And thou shalt hang up the veil under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil the ark of the testimony; and the veil shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place. And thou shalt set the table without the veil, and the candlestick. Ex. 26: 33–35." Here we learn that "the ark of the testimony" was "within the veil," which was "the most holy place."

There is no ground for controversy on this point. The Scripture is positive and plain. The high priest went "alone once every year," "within the veil." Heb. 9: 7. But "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. 9: 24. Is not God in the holy of holies? Most certainly. As Paul said: "Christ is . . . now within the veil" when the apostle wrote. He goes on to say: "After he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever," he "sat down on the right hand of God." Heb 10: 12. Where did he sit down? "On the right hand of God," "in the presence of God," "within the veil." Hence any "vision" that contradicts these plain Scriptures cannot be from God, or the Holy Spirit; and all such visions should be rejected by those who believe the Bible. In Lev. 16: 2, and 21: 1–3, we read:—

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the veil before the mercy seat, which is upon the ark. "And the Lord said unto Moses, saying, Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee pure oil olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamps to burn continually without the veil of the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation."

We would say again, that the expression "within the veil," always means in the Bible, "the most holy place;" therefore, as Christ had entered "within the veil" in Paul's day, he did not wait till the 10th day of the seventh month, in 1844, before he entered into "the most holy place," as declared in "the visions," to which we have referred. M. G.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

The new temperance movement, conducted largely by the women, is one of peculiar interest, and bids fair to be crowned with remarkable success. The amount of intoxicating liquors used at the present day is truly alarming. When we look at its terrible results in the ruin of once happy families, it is a wonder that drunkards' wives, mothers and daughters have borne the shocking consequences so long and patiently; for they have been great sufferers in thousands upon thousands of cases; but when, in addition to all this, we turn to the Scriptures and read that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God, then it is that every lover of humanity should feel called upon to do all in his power to persuade men not to sell or drink that which ruins man for both worlds.

The temperance wave has struck the Pacific coast, and there is no place where its blessed effects are more needed. We clip the following from the Morning Call of today (March 3), showing the platform adopted by the women in San Francisco:—

"First—We will abstain from the use of all intoxicating beverages ourselves, and will not offer them to others in our homes or elsewhere.

Second—We will use our best endeavors to induce our fathers, husbands, sons and daughters, and all others within our influence, to take the pledge of total abstinence.

Third—We will take steps to have the pledge presented to every person in San Francisco, with an earnest request that they sign the same.

Fourth—We will endeavor to procure the passage of laws by the Legislature prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors and wines to minors under eighteen years of age, or in places where women are employed, or in houses of bad repute, and laws holding the rum-seller responsible for all damage or injury resulting from intoxication caused by liquor sold by him; and to close the dram shops on the Sabbath.

Fifth—We will urge the Board of Supervisors to fix the rate of liquor license so high that the "corner groceries" will be forced to give up the business of selling liquor; and we will not patronize any grocery store where liquors are sold. We will try to get a law passed directing that the money received in the City Treasury for liquor licenses shall be distributed among the various charitable institutions of this city.

Sixth—We will endeavor to create a public sentiment which will compel all rumsellers—whether by the wholesale or by the glass—if they desire to retain a respectable position in society, to abandon the business. We will specially watch over our young men, and strive to keep them away from the places where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Seventh—We recommend the women in all the churches to form temperance associations, and that they all combine in a grand Temperance League for the effective work. We will co-operate with all temperance organizations for that purpose."

In connection with the foregoing, we would say there is clear evidence that the moral tone of society is rapidly improving in San Francisco, and other cities in California.
M. G.

A CALIFORNIA PLOUGH.—California is justly noted for producing great things, especially fruits and vegetables. Our eastern friends would hardly credit some of the facts connected with these things. But we took our pen now to speak of a new plough, constructed by Henry Souther, of San Felip, who intends to plant some two thousand acres of cotton this year. The following description of the plough is from the Gilroy Advocate: M. G.

"Its beam is in the shape of an ordinary plough beam, fourteen feet long, by eighteen feet deep in the centre, and six inches thick. The standard is five feet high, made of two bars of iron one by three inches in thickness, welded together in the centre, and spread two feet apart at the bottom. The land side is ten feet long, made of one by five inch iron. The cutter is made of cast steel, one by three inches thick, and five feet high. The mould board is made of three-eighth inch boiler iron, ten feet long and three feet high. The handles are made of ordinary spring wagon poles, bent in the shape of plough-handles. Everything about the machine is made in the most substantial manner and of the best materials, thoroughly braced and strengthened throughout, to bear the heavy strain it must be subjected to. The plough, with its gearing, it is estimated will exceed five thousand pounds in weight, and will require seventy-five to one hundred horses to draw it when down to its greatest working capacity. It is claimed that this machine will throw out a ditch four feet deep by five feet wide. The result of this experiment will be looked for with interest, for should it prove practicable, it will be invaluable as a ditcher for irrigation or drainage purposes."

SENATOR SUMNER.—The death of Massachusetts' great Senator has draped the nation in mourning. He was a great statesman, and had an independent mind which could not be controlled by majorities or wealth, but by what he understood to be right. He had a great heart, full of sympathy for the oppressed, and smote as with a sledge hammer the shackles of slavery. Millions have wept at the news of his sudden death, who have sung the song of liberty through the instrumentality of his masterly eloquence and untiring efforts to give equal rights to all. It would have given us pleasure to have seen it reported that in his last hours he expressed a hope in Christ of a glorious future. J. C.

NEW CITY HALL.—The new city hall now in process of building in San Francisco, is an enormous building. It is estimated to cost, when completed, about six millions. This is the largest sum that any city in the United States has expended for such a building. The foundation is said to be more massive and costly than that of the Capitol at Washington. The Californians are noted for doing things on a grand scale. They do not like to follow, but prefer to lead. M. G.

WE give below a brief extract from a letter from a Bro. of the A. C. Church, San Francisco. J. C.

"We have just completed a good chapel, convenient, and capable of seating three to three hundred and fifty persons. It is centrally located in this city. Our church is an united body of believers in Christ. There is not a single element of discord or division amongst us. Bro. Grant is now here, and holding meetings, and our prospects for the future never looked so bright and promising as now. Several have been converted since our meetings began."

PRAYERS are requested in behalf of Bro. Kimball, of Cabot, Vt., who is in a very critical condition. E. N. M.

STATE CONFERENCE.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Our annual meeting has received an invitation from the Second Advent church in Worcester, Mass., under the care of Bro. S. G. Mathewson, to hold its next session in their chapel. It is to commence Tuesday evening, March 31st, and continue over the following Sunday. It is desired that as many of the preaching brethren as possible, and all others, may be there early and stay through the meeting.

It is an all-important time in our history. The enemy of all righteousness is doing his best to distract, divide, scatter, paralyze and destroy the cause of truth. It is a fearful time in many respects for the cause of Christ. Let us, as Second Advent believers, come from all parts of the State, and confer together as to future meetings, whether by tent or otherwise, and show our integrity and determination to stand up for Jesus, and proclaim the signs of his speedy coming. Let us together bear reproach and stem the current, and still herald this separating truth of Christ's second advent. Now, dear brethren, who have no desire, nor dare to lower this standard, come up to this feast filled with the spirit of love and overcoming faith. L. BOUTELL.

JOHN WESLEY, having to travel some distance in a stage coach, fell in with a pleasant tempered, well-informed officer. His conversation was sprightly and entertaining, but frequently mingled with oaths. When they were about to take the next stage, Mr. Wesley took the officer aside, and after expressing the pleasure he had enjoyed in his company, told him he was thereby encouraged to ask of him a very great favor. "I would take a pleasure in obliging you," said the officer, "and I am sure you will not make an unreasonable request." "Then," said Mr. Wesley, "as we have to travel together some time, I beg that if I should so far forget myself as to swear, you will kindly reprove me." The officer immediately saw the motive and felt the force of his request, and smiling, said, "None but Mr. Wesley could have conceived a reproof in such a manner.—Selected.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 27th, 1873, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM SR. C. TULLER.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I feel moved to again address you through our paper. I would be glad to answer every individual letter that comes to me, laden with sweet words of cheer; but time and strength forbid. I was very sick in Nov., and did not get strength easily, so that it has been hard to keep up during the winter, and Satan has tried his best to trouble me. But God has been very good in giving me slowly returning health, and in various ways shown me tokens of his love and care; so that my heart exclaims, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." I can, with confidence, earnestly exhort the tried and tempted ones to go to Jesus with every sorrow, whether arising from an unsanctified nature, or outward ills. He is sufficient for all things, and honor and praise be his evermore.

I feel it a great privilege that I have been able to keep up my school nearly a term; for I have a very interesting class of young people. Several are striving to fit themselves for teachers. Four young men I especially covet for Christ and his cause. They are noble boys, exemplary in morals, but lack a heart consecration to their Maker. With that, they have ability and every trait to make them of great use, and I ask earnest prayers for them, as well as for all my pupils. I do not think this work will pay, unless while giving them a knowledge of letters, sacred influences shall affect their hearts, producing change of character. Apparently, good has come to this people through missionary and school effort. Not enough, to be sure, to satisfy one who longs for the accomplishment of great good; but as much, perhaps, as results from the same amount and quality of labor and expenditure in any place.

Four schools have grown out of the little nucleus at West Point, and teachers for them been raised up. A goodly number have learned, and others are still learning to read the Word of God, and the beautiful leaflets, tracts and papers that find their way among these hills and valleys. Many an old slave parent is jubilant over the achievements of his children, who are as dear to him as though they belonged to the more favored race.

The Legislature of the State has just passed a law providing for three months free school for colored children. Some of its features are humiliating to the race, and a disgrace to a civilized people; but as it shows an improvement in public sentiment, it is accepted with gratitude and hope for something better. Under the law, teachers will be required to pass an examination before the county Sup't. Six, at least, of my pupils, could they have a spring term, would be capable of getting a certificate in autumn. They are anxious to stay with me, but I have not food for them; nor have they; nor is it from laziness or waste. P. H. Jackman is an efficient helper, and has done nobly in the school at the Point. But his tuition fees have not averaged $4 per week; with himself, wife and child to board. Another term of study would enable him to obtain a certificate. He is already lecturing to his people, and will, I hope, be led to the ministry. He needs more mental cultivation, but cannot devote the time unless helped. Another, a youth of eighteen years of age, almost white, uncommonly bright and studious, and has been very useful to me through the winter, just entreats to stay with me another term. He is a good worker, but his surplus wages have helped his mother and two young brothers.

Now, christian friends, for myself I do not ask your charities. You have seen by the Crisis the amount of gifts received this winter. I could not have kept up expenses, but in the fall had application to board a man and his wife, and having one vacant room kept them several weeks; and then a single gentleman a few weeks longer; and thus have found food and paid expenses. Nine and ten have been sheltered and warmed under the same roof with me. Three and four have sat at the same table with me. The tuition paid has not averaged one dollar per week. I feel it duty to rest a little after another week. I cannot do as I have done without assistance. Still I have laid the matter before the Lord, and now lay it before the household, believing that the good Spirit will direct; and if there are any who have means to spare, and should feel drawn to this matter, I shall take it as an indication that God would have me continue; and after a little rest will open my humble doors again, and seeking strength from above, will do all I can to teach and encourage these youths to devote their time and energies to the elevation of their race. Some come three and four miles, and now all feel greatly encouraged. If schools are of value to us, they are more so to these, whose minds have so long been dormant. Something has been done for them, but much more remains to be done. They are poor. If you could see them struggling to get a little spot to call home, and often share their pittance with poorer relatives, and even old fellow servants thrown upon a cold world, you would not wonder that they can do no more for schools. Then what is a three months school which the State proposes to give?

Our dear Editors say, Condense your letters; but, really, I have not the genius to do so, and will not often trespass upon your time. So please excuse.

I just want to say that my heart is full of love to God's people, and though so far away, and alone as it were, the reading of the Crisis, Banner, Christian, and precious tracts sent here, brings me very near to them, and causes me to anticipate the time when, with them, and the pure and good of all ages, I may triumph over sin, death and the grave, and forever extol the grace that saves.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—A Steward, $2.00, by G. T. Adams. A Friend, New Britain, $1.00. A large package of tracts from I. C. Wellcome. A box of reading matter from Sister Treadwell. From J. B. Cook, $5.00, instead of $2.00, as seen by my last.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Geo. E. Lee.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—As the Crisis is open for correspondence upon experience, from those who love our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, I feel impressed to write a few words. My present experience is that of love, joy, and peace, and a heart of thanksgiving that the Lord is so good." He is truly "the One altogether lovely," and there is none like him. To him be all the glory, for in him is a never failing fountain, of which, if we daily partake, it will be in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life. This is his promise, and it is our privilege to claim it; for he has said, "Whosoever shall drink of the water that I shall give, shall never thirst." Thus will it ever prove true, that as long as we have access to the Fountain, we have no reason to be thirsty. The water is always free, and like the manna in the wilderness, we can get a fresh draught every day, or just when it is needed, and not be under the necessity of obtaining a surplus quantity for days in the future, and then be in anxiety lest when it should fail we could not at once obtain more. The Lord has promised to care for his children as the shepherd careth for the sheep; and so long as they have an active, living faith that takes God to mean just what he says, just so long will he "withhold no good thing," and the christian heart will desire nought but good at any time.

I love the life of faith. Are we not in this present life to "walk by faith, and not by sight?" "For what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" We hope the day of redemption is about to dawn, and we have faith that our Savior will come the second time, in like manner as he went away. This, at least, is my hope and faith, and I can say, "Jesus saves me, saves me now." I know that my trust is in him alone, and the Psalmist saith, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever."

Then here is the secret of a holy life, or fitness for the kingdom. It is implicitly trusting in the Lord as a helpless child trusts its parents. It is not a selfish boast for us to claim a present salvation. And when all who love the highway of holiness attain this blessed position, the Spirit and grace of God will "be the tie that binds," despite all minor differences of opinion, and we shall realize "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

Springfield, Mass., March 1st.

From D. D. Reed.

To the dear friends of the Crisis:—May the grace, mercy, and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. We are exceedingly glad, on this coast, that our beloved Bro. Grant has come back again this winter. The Lord is with us. I wish there were more such men. We would send them to Oregon. The Lord is blessing his labors in San Francisco. The house is well filled, night after night. Sinners are being converted, and all the church is being stirred up to put away all sin, and live godly in Christ Jesus.

I understand there has not been a jarring note in the church since last spring. I was with Bro. Grant last spring at Vallejo, and his labors were signally blest of the Lord. Nearly the whole church received a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit, and are rejoicing in God, with a blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. There are many on this coast who will praise God in his kingdom that Bro. Grant ever came here to bring them the glad tidings of full salvation from all sin, and the kingdom of God at hand. He is one of the closest preachers that I ever heard. He is a faithful worker, and has more calls than he can fill. The prospect is that great good will be done this winter. Let us all pray that this may be the case. Jesus is soon coming. Let us all be found watching.

Santa Clara, Cal.

From Bro. D. C. Thomas.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Jesus:—I do not desire notoriety, but will state a little of my experience. I was awakened about one year ago, but strove with the Spirit until the fifth of Oct. last, when I laid all at the feet of Jesus, and, glory to his name, he spoke peace to the troubled soul, and I was happy. But I was cherishing an idol in the form of tobacco, which the Lord took from me on the 17th of December, and to-day I am a free man, and God grant that I may "be kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." While I am laboring for holiness, the Lord is rolling on me the worth of lost sinners. And oh, that my eyes were a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the perishing. But I am weaker than a bruised reed, and can only trust in Jesus, and feel how blessed it is to have such a friend. Brethren and sisters, all who read these lines, remember poor, unworthy Bro. Thomas in your prayers, and ask God to give sustaining grace, that I may work as God directs.

Obituaries.

HOPKINS. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Cabot, Vt., Feb. 16th, 1874, Bro. Isaac R. Hopkins, aged thirty-eight years.

His faith in the sleep of the dead, and of receiving immortality at the resurrection of the just, grew stronger until the last. Although he viewed death as an enemy, yet he felt that his sleep would be short, for he was looking for the speedy return of the Nobleman, to raise the dead, and to reward every one according as his deeds have been. Bro. Hopkins leaves a dear companion, aged parents, brothers and sisters, who deeply mourn. The church of which he was a member feel that they have met with an irreparable loss, yet they look for a reunion in the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Leonard Wheeler.

E. N. MORSE.

WHITE. Sweetly feel asleep in Jesus, at her brother's residence in Camden, N. J., Feb. 14th, 1874, Sister Sarah D. White, in the thirty-sixth year of her age.

Several years ago our sister gave her heart to the Lord, and united herself with the M. E. church, where she lived a consistent christian for some time. Nearly four years ago, herself, mother, and only brother became interested in the blessed hope of the Lord's soon coming, and were baptized by Elder F. H. Burbank. Her sufferings were borne with christian patience and meekness. When asked how she was, she always answered, "Happy in the Lord." She died rejoicing in the full assurance of faith, and with the hope of a glorious resurrection. Her funeral was attended by a large company of friends. A very able sermon was preached by Elder George A. Brown, from words of her own choice, Luke 20: 36.

H. T. TAYLOR.

WHITCOMB. In Hatley, P. Q., Canada, Feb. 15th, 1874, of congestion of the lungs, Mr. Cyrus Whitcomb, aged fifty-two years.

Being of a kindly and benevolent disposition, he had many warm friends, and but few, if any, foes. In his death the cause of truth has sustained a loss. The heralds of the cross found the comforts of home at his fireside, and he gave his money cheerfully for their support. Several of our ministers well remember his kindness, and will shed tears of sympathy with his deeply bereaved family. He leaves a wife, a son, and two daughters to mourn his loss with bleeding hearts, that will not soon forget him. May these, and all his friends, be prompted by his death to live for the life hereafter. Funeral service by the writer. Text, Job 13: 15.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, Feb. 28. A special dispatch to the Daily Telegraph, from Central Asia, says that the Zameed Turcomans recently made an attack on the Russian fortifications. They were defeated and while crossing a frozen river during their retreat, the ice broke and a large number were drowned. Gen. Kauffmann is to return to Khiva in April.

March 5. The correspondent of the Daily News at St. Petersburg writes, under date of the 28th ult., that serious rioting has occurred in Eastern Poland in consequence of the closing of the churches by order of the Government. At one place the disorder was so great that the military was called out and fired on the rioters, killing and wounding seventy persons.

March 6. Reports continue of wrecks, accompanied with loss of life. Steamship Seda, from New Castle for Port Said, is lost. Thirty people were drowned.

March 9. The Count De Chambord has had a slight attack of apoplexy.

March 10. A jute spinning mill at Dundee was burned last night. The glare of the conflagration alarmed the whole city, and 20,000 people surrounded the burning edifice. Loss $100,000. Seven hundred hands are thrown out of employment.

LISBON, March 6. It is rumored here that certain inhabitants of Fayal have addressed a petition to President Grant, praying for the establishment of a protectorate by the United States over the Azores, and that the President replied that the era of the popular will has replaced the era of conquest.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 6. There has been an extensive conflagration in Salonik. An immense amount of property was destroyed, and eleven persons were burned to death.

CALCUTTA, March 6. Accounts from Tirboot show that the distress from famine is increasing.

A Madrid special says that President Serrano will lead 35,000 men to relieve Bilbao.

A dispatch from Berlin states that the condition of the Emperor William causes disquietude.

Chilian advices mention an earthquake at Copiapo, Feb. 15, but although somewhat severe not much damage was done. The Chilian volcanoes have resumed eruptions, and a new crater has broken out on one side, and the river Nube shows that the lava is flowing into its head waters.

The provisional President Arias of Honduras, who was besieged at Camayague, has capitulated to Gen. Leiva, who is now in full possession of the government. It is reported that there was considerable bloodshed during the troubles.

THE BENGAL FAMINE.—The last accounts of this visitation give an enhanced idea of its gravity. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal informs the Home Government that upward of a million of persons, even now, are starving to death, and that all the poor classes—which means millions more—are beginning to feel the want of food. It must not be forgotten that the famine extends more or less severely over the greater part of Bengal, whose area is 239,591 square miles, with a population—reckoning in the native States subject to its government—of over 38,000,000; that is to say, the rice crop of 1873, throughout nearly the whole of this region, was short of the average, and in some sections failed entirely. The want of food, however, is most felt in the districts of Behar and Patna, on the Ganges, about three hundred miles north by west of Calcutta. It is estimated that the number of people who must be fed, and for whom supplies must be imported if they are to be saved from starvation, will reach eleven, if not twelve millions. The time for which aid must be extended in most cases, will be about nine months, as the same condition of drouth which cut off last year's harvest prevented the autumn-sown rice from growing. The amount of rice supplies required is put at 1,400,000 tons, at £14 per ton, which would make £19,000,000, or $95,000,000, in all.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 1, via Havana. Ten bandits attacked a stage near Gaudalajara. The passengers resisted. Reinforcements of thirty bandits arrived, when eight gendarmes, escorting the the stage, fled. The passengers continued to defend the stage. The bandits killed Willian Westfall, a German physician, formerly residing in Havana, and Bartholy, a German merchant, and wounded two Mexicans. They also maltreated Bartholy's wife, and the rest of the passengers, and chopped off the heads of the two dead Germans. The Governor of Tepic has sent out men to search for the bandits.

In Brief.

— The Turkish Government has ordered a new iron-clad in England, to cost £120,000. She will carry a powerful ram.

— Over sixteen thousand Hindoos have petitioned the English Viceroy to prohibit the liquor traffic.

— Omaha, Nebraska, despatches say that the Indians are incensed on account of the ill treatment they are receiving, and contemplate a general rising in the spring, and are now on the prairies prepared for war.

— During a hurricane at sea on the 27th, ult., the steamer Pennsylvania, from Liverpool for Philadelphia, was injured and five lives lost, including the captain, first and second mate.

— The body of Miss Jennie Russell of Lancaster, Mass., was found in the Nashua river, Sunday. There is no doubt that she committed suicide.

— The Ashantees have by treaty agreed to pay the British 50,000 ounces of gold and relinquish to them a large amount of territory.

— The autopsy of the Siamese Twins is said to show that they could not have been separated without destroying their lives.

— It is said that two hundred and fifty persons have been adjudged insane by the Courts in Illinois, who were made so by the Chicago fire.

— An enormous amount of snow has fallen in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in California. Passenger trains cannot move, and freight trains have been abandoned for the present.

— A boy of fourteen is a leader of a great religious revival in DeKalb county, Illinois. He is a fluent exhorter, and his efforts are very successful in winning converts.

Fires.

— A fire in the town of Clinton, N. Y., destroyed Edward H. Marshall's outbuildings, filled with grain and hay; also three horses, three cows, a calf, forty-four sheep, and several wagons and sets of harness. The loss is about $6,000, partially insured.

— An incendiary fire in Middletown, Conn., destroyed the Farmers' and Mechanics' Hotel; loss, $19,000.

— The loss by the burning of D. A. Drury & Co.'s boot factory in Spencer, Mass., is $20,000.

— A terrible conflagration occurred in Panama on the 26th inst., whereby the largest of the business part of the town was destroyed. The losses are estimated at over $1,000,000, which are mostly insured in London.

— There has been a $50,000 fire at Fairhaven, Conn.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.—The annual session of the Mass. Advent Christian Conference will be held at Worcester, Mass., with the Advent Christian Church, commencing on Tuesday evening, March 31st, to continue over the following Sunday. The first business session will be held on Wednesday, April 1st. It is desired that our churches throughout the State be as largely represented by delegates as possible.

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

☞ On the Boston and Albany R. R. fare is reduced to two cents per mile. Tickets to be had at the following stations: Boston, Natick, Framingham, Cordaville, Westboro, Charlton, Warren, Palmer, Springfield, Westfield, Adams, Hinsdale. Call for "Advent Conference" tickets. Good March 31st to April 7th. G. T. A.

ANNUAL STATE CONFERENCE.—To the saints scattered abroad:—As our next Annual State Conference is appointed in Worcester, we therefore give you a cordial invitation to come and labor with us for the salvation of our fellow beings. Soon it will be too late. Come, filled with faith and the Holy Spirit. Come, baptized with the spirit of work. To this end pray much, that it may be the best Conference we have ever held. We shall do the best we can to entertain all who come to this feast.

S. G. MATHEWSON, in behalf of the church.

IT is expected Bro. Stockman will hold a protracted meeting in Worcester, commencing March 24th, and continue over Sunday.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

ALTON BAY.—The Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet at the Crisis Office, Boston, Mass., Monday, March 30th, 11 o'clock A. M. J. COUCH, Chairman.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.—The Campmeeting at Alton Bay will commence Aug. 22nd, and hold over Sabbath, Aug. 30th. J. COUCH.

MISSION TENT.—There has been a call for subscriptions to furnish a Mission Tent. The old Mission and the Mass. Conference Tent have both been worn out in the service. The time will soon come for Tent meetings, which is one of the best, if not the very best way to reach the people. The cause demands double the sacrifice and effort to enlighten and save that we are making. Shall we want for a Tent? Shall we want means and men to make an onward movement to save men by pulling them out of the fire of the last day? Brethren, help us to a Tent.

L. BOUTELL.

LECTURES IN CHARLESTOWN, MASS.—By request, the undersigned will deliver a series of lectures at Mystic Hall, on Main street, on the Nature and Destiny of Man, commencing on Tuesday evening, March 10th, and continuing every evening but Saturdays and Mondays until Sunday, March 22d.

F. H. BURBANK.

ADVENT CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF CHICAGO.—After prayerful consideration, we have felt it duty to again reorganize a church in this city, and fling the Advent banner to the breeze. This was effected Jan. 29th, 1874. We mean to keep the fact before the people that Christ's coming is near, which to his waiting ones will be hailed with rejoicing. We have a nice Hall, No. 213 West Madison Street, plainly yet neatly fitted up, where we expect to be supplied with God's messengers of truth, to make glad the hearts of his people, and to give to all meat in due season. May the Spirit of the Lord keep us in lively exercise, and sanctify us wholly, that we may be read and known of all men, and adorn our profession.

A. P. WRIGHT, } Elders.
R. P. PRICE, }

THE fourth Quarterly Meeting for the Eastern Dist. of Wisconsin will be held with the church at Prairie Du Sac, commencing Friday evening, April 24th, and hold over Lord's day. Let us come up to this meeting filled with the Spirit of the Master. Let every church in the Dist. report by delegate or by letter. We expect a number of brethren present to assist in preaching the Word.

F P GRAVES.

CONFERENCE.—The Delaware Dist. A. C. Conference is hereby called to meet, and hold its annual session at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, Phil., Pa., commencing Thursday morning, April 9th, at ten o'clock A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. The morning meetings will be for the transaction of business; the afternoon and evening, for preaching and other devotional exercises.

This is our annual meeting to hear the reports of all our preachers, officers, committees, and delegates for the last year;—the progress, spread, and triumph of Bible truth, by the word of mouth, by the aid of religious papers, tracts, and pamphlets, and by every other gospel means; to learn by reports the amount of monies received and paid out, for the purchase and distribution of publications. All the officers for the year ensuing will be chosen at this session.

This Conference embraces the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Penn. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathising with us will be represented either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this Conference is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the Conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphis, Pa.

H. K. FLAGG, President.
EDWIN KING, Secretary.

CONFERENCE.—The Third Session of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of North West Kansas will be held with the church of Athens, Jewel Co., commencing Friday evening, March 27th, and continuing over the Sunday following. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to meet with us, and will be heartily welcomed by the friends at Athens.

E. N. BLISS, President.
J. S. THORP, Secretary.

THERE will be a series of meetings on Britton Hill, Hebron, Me., commencing Thursday evening, March 26th, and hold over the Sabbath, and as much longer as the Lord may direct. Come, brethren and sisters, to work for the Lord.

In behalf of the church, THOMAS RINES.

KANSAS CONFERENCE.—The Annual Session of the Advent Christian Conference of Kansas will be held, the Lord willing, at Melvern, Osage Co., Kan., commencing Friday, May 15th, 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the following Lord's day, or as long as the brethren may determine.

Those coming by rail from the North will stop at Arvonia Station, and those from the South at Burlington, where teams will be in readiness to convey them to the ground where the Mission Tent will be pitched, if they write to Eld. J. C. Smith, Arvonia, Osage Co., Kan., in time. Reports from the churches should be made up to and including the 18th of April, 1874 (By-laws, Art. 8, Sec. 1), and forwarded by mail to the Secretary, care of Eld. Smith as above, or sent with the delegates. Let all who "wait for the Lord" and are "looking for that blessed hope" lay aside their secular affairs, and join with the "children of God" in their yearly feast of fat things. By order of the Directors,

AMOS SANFORD, Secretary.

THE next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held in Rome, Town House, commencing Thursday evening, March 19th, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and labor with us for the upbuilding of the church and the salvation of sinners; also it is hoped our preaching brethren will make an effort to be at this meeting. Provision will be made for all, both man and beast. Those coming from abroad will call on David Watson, N. P. Martin, Amaziah Tracy, John Fletcher, and others. For the church,

H. B. SEVEY.
W. A. KNIGHT, Sec.

ADVENT meetings have been started in Hinsdale, N. H., in American Hall. Will the preaching brethren who are passing this way give us a call? Please drop a note previous, to prevent any conflict, to DUSTIN L. PERHAM.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Wishing to move our office on the first of May next, to less expensive rooms, and having several thousand back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER on hand, which we do not wish to move, we make the following liberal offers:—

We will send one or more copies of back numbers of the BIBLE BANNER in neat wrappers post-paid, to any address for two cents per copy. This is a small part of the cost; for we have to pay postage, find wrappers, and hire them wrapped and mailed; but we believe great good can be done if each of our readers will send us ten to fifty addresses of persons who they think would be benefitted by receiving a copy of the BIBLE BANNER, enclosing two cents for each address. A friend of ours called at this office a few months since, and gave us a score or two of addresses, with two or three cents per copy for postage, etc., and we have been greatly surprised at the result. Unfortunately, however, in a financial point of view, for us, this brother selected a large number of ministers of the gospel, many of whom accepted our "year-free" offer. Hence we ask our readers to send us a large proportion of those who will be likely to subscribe. Reader, if you respond, please do so at once, and address,

THE BIBLE BANNER,
14 Murray St., N. Y. City.

"THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED:

OR, AN EXPOSITION OF THE

WOMAN AND THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST

In the 17th Chapter of Revelation.

SHOWING WE ARE NEAR THE END OF THE PRESENT DISPENSATION."

BY MILES GRANT.

This valuable and interesting tract is now ready, and for sale at this Office. Price by mail, single copy, 8 cts; four copies for 25 cts.; per dozen, 75 cts. AG'T.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

AG'T.

RE-PRINTED

ELDER S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's pamphlets have had a wide circulation, and have accomplished much good. They were out of print, and yet in constant demand. Bro. B. was too aged and feeble to engage in getting out more. We have undertaken it, and have just re-printed several thousands, and others are in press. There are thousands of readers who will want them when they know what they are.

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun, Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena, illustrated with splendid cuts. 216 pp.; 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

This is the most important work we have ever had on this subject. It is revised and enlarged. In fact, we have no other giving the light needed on those symbols. The leopard beast, the seven heads, the two-horned beast, are illustrated with excellent cuts. Price 25 cts.

"The History of an Immortal Soul."

This is a work of the history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts.

"The Seven Seals"

is also a very important work for all Bible readers. 15 cts.

"Slaying of the Witnesses"

I regard worth a dollar to a Bible student. 10 cts.

Sold at the Crisis Office. I. C. WELLCOME.

We give a few testimonials:—

"BRO. BREWER'S WORKS.—I regard the 'Last Day Tokens,' the 'Exposition of Rev. 13th,' and the 'Slaying of the two Witnesses,' as great helps to the Bible student, as also instructive and enlightening to all new beginners, and I recommend them to all lovers of prophetical subjects. The 'History of an Immortal Soul' is an excellent work for all. I am glad to learn the new editions of these excellent works are issued."—C. W. Sargent.

Another says: "I am glad indeed that Bro. Brewer's expository works on the 'Signs of the Times,' and on Rev. 6th—'The Seals,' 8th and 9th—the 'Woe Trumpets,' the 11th on the 'Two Witnesses,' and the 13th on the 'Beasts,' are now being republished. These pamphlets contain more real historic facts and Bible ideas than any other works ever circulated among Adventists on Revelation."—N. M. P.

From Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell.—"Bro. Brewer's works I think valuable. The work on 'Papal Rome' I have not yet examined, but from what I have seen of the MS. I think it will be instructive and profitable. You can see by what I have written that I think highly of his other works already published."—Wm. H. Mitchell, Kennebunk, Me.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

THE SONG OF A TIRED SERVANT.

One more day's work for Jesus—
One less of life for me!
But heaven is nearer,
And Christ is dearer
Than yesterday, to me.
His love and light
Fill all my soul to-night.

One more day's work for Jesus:
How glorious is my King!
'Tis joy, not duty,
To speak his beauty;
My soul mounts on the wing
At the mere thought
How Christ her life hath bought.

One more day's work for Jesus;
Sweet, sweet the work has been
To tell his story,
To show the glory
Where Christ's flock enter in.
How it did shine
In this poor heart of mine.

One more day's work for Jesus;
In hope, in faith, in prayer,
His word I've spoken,
His bread I've broken
To souls faint with despair;
And bade them flee
To him who hath saved me.

One more day's work for Jesus,
Yes, and a weary day.
But heaven shines clearer,
And rest comes nearer,
At each step of the way;
And Christ is all;
Before his face I fall.

O blessed work for Jesus!
O rest at Jesus' feet!
There toil seems pleasure,
My wants are treasure,
And pain for him looks sweet.
Lord, if I may,
I'll serve thee more another day!—Ex.

"JUDGE NOT."

J. M. WHITMORE.

The errors of our fellow men do not in most cases call for the unmeasured denunciation and relentless severity that we are quite too apt to inflict upon the men who have committed them. An error, whether intentional or otherwise, is always a mistake. What can be plainer than the fact that a perfect man in every respect is incapable of making mistakes? But we all make mistakes; therefore we are all imperfect. Again, what can be plainer than that a perfect judgment requires on the part of the judge not only a perfect knowledge of what exact justice in each case demands, but also a thorough acquaintance of the motives, history and character of the person judged, together with a complete understanding of all his surroundings? But these requirements none of us possess; therefore we can never give a perfect judgment of men.

All human judgments therefore being necessarily imperfect, it is certain that every time we judge a man we are unjust to him, and an injustice to him is also an injustice to ourselves. As judges we are constantly making mistakes. We judge with the relentless severity of Draco, or with the leniency of some among the moderns who say that no man is blameable for anything that he may do or say. Let any one carefully read and solemnly consider the first five verses of the seventh chapter of Matthew, before he judges his brother man.

It may be asked, "Are we not then to judge any one?" No. Let us answer boldly, "No, we are not to judge men." But let me not be misunderstood. Though we are not to judge men, yet we may judge of their actions. In other words, we may, indeed we must judge of abstractions, of acts, by some standard of right and wrong. This right to judge of men's actions grows out of the necessity of our judging and knowing good and evil. The argument against judging men is not composed solely of the reason that we are necessarily imperfect judges, because a similar reason might be urged against our doing or saying anything; for it is obvious that we neither say nor do anything perfectly. None of our senses or powers are perfect. We never see anything exactly as it is, either with our physical or mental eye. But this is no good reason for not trying to see. But judging men as to their moral or religious standing is entirely different from anything else in the world. What a man does, his act, may be, perhaps must be, absolutely good or evil; but it is impossible that the doer of the deed should be as the deed itself, either wholly good or wholly bad. So that when we judge that a man is absolutely bad because some act of his is absolutely bad, we do him the grossest injustice.

A man is what his character is. But character is not made up of any single quality, nor is it shown by any single act. The motives or hidden springs of action, hidden from human eyes, are of the essence of character, and essential to its being understood. For instance, a man in passing a beggar hands him a silver dollar. The poor man, grateful for this unusual gift at once says, What a good man! how benevolent, how kind, how generous! And yet this man whom the beggar pronounced to be so good may have stolen a thousand dollars within a week, or cheated some poor orphan or widow of a large sum; and perhaps it was with the thought of assuaging the feelings of remorse that he gave the pittance to the beggar. The act did not prove that the man was either good or benevolent; though the dollar did the beggar just as much good as though it had been given with the purest motives. An act, in its immediate results at least, is in no wise affected by the motives which prompted it. A gun accidentally discharged may be as fatal to one's dearest friend as though it had been purposely aimed and discharged by an assassin.

"But," it may be asked, "did not our Savior say, "By their fruits ye shall know them"? Yes, but he did not say, By their actions ye shall judge men. He said, "Judge not." Knowing men, or forming an opinion of them from what they do, is not wrong; because we cannot help having opinions of mens' capacities and morals from what they do. Besides, men usually judge prematurely. They do not wait for the fruit; they judge by the blossom. The verdict of posterity is usually more just than that of one's contemporaries. We are all more or less ignorant, prejudiced, one-sided and selfish in our judgments.

Our Savior in speaking of false prophets said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." If a man predicts that a certain event will take place at a certain time, and the time passes and the event does not take place, then the prediction was a false one, and the prophet was a false prophet. But though we may know that he has proved himself a false prophet, we should not be justified in judging that he was a bad and wicked man. Possibly his motives were pure. If so, though his prophecy proved false, and he was false as a prophet, yet he was not false as a man or as a christian.

Let us remember the admonition of the Master, "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged; condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven." Luke 6: 36.

If we harshly judge and condemn men, we shall not only be unjust to them, but we shall ourselves become harsh, censorious, and unloveable. The merciful shall obtain mercy. Better that we should be deceived, than that we should condemn unjustly. "Therefore, judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts." Paul. Let us be sure to keep our own garden clear of weeds, our own eyes clear of beams; and in proportion as we do this honestly and intelligently, shall we learn to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God.

Gloversville, N. Y., March 5th, 1874.

LETTER FROM SR. M. M. EASTMAN.

My mother, Mrs. Mary Clark, died in Landaff, N. H., Feb. 3d, 1874, aged eighty-two years. She was a consistent Bible christian for over sixty years. She belonged to the Methodist church, but loved the doctrine of Christ's coming, and enjoyed reading the Crisis. She did not appear to have any disease, but she often said to people, "The lamp has about burned down." Though she loved life, yet she was willing to die; and when asked if she felt fully ready, she replied with earnestness, "Why, yes." She commenced failing about the middle of Dec. last, and slowly sank away, dying so easy we could hardly tell when she was gone. Her blessed hope imprinted a calm, peaceful expression upon her face, just as her life had always been. I never heard her express her faith about the state of the dead, till a short time before she died; when she said to an aged Methodist sister, "I believe we sleep till the resurrection."

Many of our Advent ministers, who came here to preach, fed her soul with the meat she loved. I am sure of this; and she wanted me to read to her as long as she had strength to hear. We feel deeply the loss of one of the best mothers with whom children were ever blest. While we stood over that lone grave, the sun shining so brightly into the narrow house in which the loved form was so soon to be shut up in darkness and silence, we thought, O, how terrible is death! But a little beyond is a glorious light; for Christ is soon coming to destroy Death. God's Word reveals a glorious resurrection from the dead. Isaiah, the prince of all the prophets, touched with inspiration from the Almighty, breaks out,—"Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise." Jeremiah looked down through the vista of time, and heard a voice of "lamentation and bitter weeping. Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children because they were not." "Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping and thine eyes from tears; . . . they shall come again from the land of the enemy." In Matt. 2: 17, we have a record of the fulfillment of Rachel's weeping; but the last part is to be fulfilled when Christ comes and brings these children, whom Herod slew, and all who sleep in Jesus, from the land of the enemy; and as surely as the lamentation and bitter weeping has been fulfilled, so surely will the last part be fulfilled. Every christian should be comforted by this assurance.

God's inspired patriarch Job said,—"For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself and not another." Job was not here when the Son of God trod the earth, and he must be resurrected to see him in his flesh, when his Redeemer stands upon the earth in the latter day. The weeping sister Martha said to Jesus, "I know (like Job she was confident) that he [Lazarus] shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Jesus said unto her, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." And to give a proof of his almighty power and ability to raise the dead, he restored the dead brother to life and to his weeping sisters. Can we doubt Jesus' words?

Jesus says, "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

Says Paul,—"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" Paul might have said, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe," when Christ has demonstrated the fact in raising Lazarus and the widow's son.

Again Jesus says, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more." Comforting thought! "Death can have no more dominion over them." In view of those Jesus had raised, he said "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."
